The Python.

Contrary to general belief, the python or boa constrictor rarely attacks people and is looked upon very differently by the people from the hamadryad and cobra. The python will take up his abode in a neighborhood and will not disturb anything except the henroosts. These he disturbs very much, as he has a great fondness for chickens; also for a stray dog or small goat. I know of one case, however, in a coating house where a python attacked a woman and, contrary to the preconceived idea, did not crush her in his folds, but attempted to swallow her, commencing with one of her feet. When she was rescued her foot and ankle were badly lacerated by the snake's teeth. The Chinese kill the python to make medicine from the liver, which has a high repute among them. They also use the dried skin for medicine. Any Chinese drug shop in Siam will have a number of python skins for sale.—Medical Journal.

UPLIFT FOR FARMERS

Work Mapped Out For President Roosevelt's Commission.

ELABORATE MAP PREPARED.

Drawing In Chief Forester Pinchot's Office Shows Subjects to Be Studied In Coming Investigation of Farm Life Conditions—To Study Many Subjects

Literally it may be said that the work of President Roosevelt's farm commission is already mapped out. Gifford Pinchot and Liberty H. Bailey, who is president of the commission, have prepared a large drawing of the subjects which will be taken up, and the map is now displayed upon the wall of the chief forester's inner office. In less than a minute a visitor to the room can discover everything that the commission is bent on discovering about the farm and the farmer.

The map closely resembles a family tree. It is like one of those creations which abound in books of heraldry, full of ramifications, perplexingly complex at first glance, yet after a moment's study wonderfully simple. It illustrates how the work of commissions has been systematized under the Roosevelt administration and particularly under the expert hand of Mr. Pinchot. To begin with, the student of the map learns that the popular term "farm commission" is a misnomer. It should be the commission on "social industry," which, as the name signifies, implies a much broader field of activity. The perspective of this commission really involves the entire social structure, but the farmer's portion is by far the most heavily emphasized and is to receive the main consideration.

The main headings of the map are the rural, urban and suburban. The two latter classifications have to do with those other fields which the commission intends to survey only when they enter the domain of the farmer and have an intimate bearing on his life. When the commissioners have completed a study of all the things which may be included under the term "rural" they will, if time allows, make a cursory study of the thousand subjects that come under the other headings, says a Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune. Upon the theme "rural" the map has much to say. Its travels almost defy description, but the first generalization is mapped out as follows: Land supply, organization, communication, corporation, control, education and labor supply.

Each of these subdivisions has numerous other subdivisions and those subdivisions other subdivisions until the visitor is lost in a labyrinth of systematic classification. From the subdivisions of "land supply" one is able to discover that the commission intends to discover the kind and quantity of the land now being tilled in the country; to obtain information as to the location, quality, price, facilities, laws and tenures; how much is public, how much private, how much is rented and leased, the rates of renting and leasing, the terms of acquisition, the amount of taxes, the wage paid to the farm laborer, the acreage of humid, arid and riparian lands and the amount of arid land which is irrigated and suited to dry farming.

After disposing of the "land supply" the map takes up the question of "organization." On this subject the map shows the vast amount of study which was done to bring in every possible subdivision which might require attention. The first subdivision is the "individual." The commission will inquire into the different types of farmers, their health, their stature, their strength, their habits and their intelligence. After that facts as to their housing, their outbuildings, their diet, the food produced and the food purchased, their water supply, whether well or stream; their clothing and the care they take of their children will be inquired into.

The second outgrowth of "organization" is the community. The commission wants to know about the public institutions, the schools, the civic halls, the hospitals, the cemeteries of the farmers, the extent of co-operation among them for profits or mutual betterment and the efforts made for social betterment. A third subdivision is "homestead," under which falls the household, the garden, the kitchen, the lawns, the orchards, the hothouses and the attempts at ornamentation. Lastly under this head the word "farm" is used, and here there is an intricate network of radiation on the map. One line leads to "indoor domestic economy" and another to "outdoor farm economy." Indoor domestic economy is given three phases—"aesthetic," "industrial" and "general." These classifications include house decoration, needlework, cooking, cleaning, fuel, utensils, cost of living, hygiene, sanitation and accounting. Outdoor farm economy is given six subdivisions—"labor," "soil," "stock," "machines," "crops" and "accounting." As to the soil, the map suggests fertilization and cultivation; as to stock, the investigation is to cover varieties, breeding, care, dairy, poultry, stabling, feeding and the barns. Selection and rotation are the principal classifications subordinate to the crops.

The third general heading, "communication," involves just a few lines of inquiry, such as highways, roadmaking, the transportation used, the railways, the express and mail, the telephone service, the magazines and newspapers read by the farmers.

The fourth general classification, "cooperation control," is in many ways the most important on the map, and it is the one which promises the hardest work for the commission. It involves the extent to which the farmer is in the grip of the trusts, and the commission will endeavor to ascertain in what way local and general monopolies govern freight, express, stock and refrigerator car charges and in what degree corporate combinations affect the prices of raw products, the output of creameries and the cost of farm implements.

"Education" is not the least of the headings in its ramifications. The commission, if the map is followed, will look into the primary and advanced education on the farm. Under "primary" are found "rudiments," "nature teaching" and "manual training." The commission will discover when the farmer gets the rudiments of his training, how much nature teaches him and presumably report on the manual training. The farmer's "advanced education" will be dealt with by inquiring into the number of college bred farmers or whether they attended the normal or agricultural schools. "Short courses, correspondence, bulletins, home meetings, readings, itinerant readings, lectures, farmers' institutes and social clubs" will also receive consideration.

In considering the last subdivision "labor supply," the commission will deal with "locality," "character," "cost" and "immigration." It will look up the quality and quantity of labor in different localities, the character, whether skilled or unskilled; the scale of wages and the cost of living, the parentage of the immigrant and the percentage that goes to the farm, its effectiveness and productiveness. Child labor is also a subject to be studied, and the map contains many other suggestions which may be followed, comprising the most elaborate undertaking ever attempted by a commission.

"THE RHINE A PAIN STREAM"

German's Caustic Criticism of the River of Romance.

Under the headline "The Rhine Stream a Pain Stream" an iconoclast of the name of Willibald Cramer writes about the German river of romance in the Berliner Tageblatt and in the course of his article, which has excited much displeasure in the Rhine region, says:

"If there is anything beyond my comprehension it is the enthusiasm of the German people for the Rhine. A more tedious, desolated waterway it would be difficult to find. The few ruins maintained by the Society For the Protection of the Beautiful impress me as little as does the dome at Cologne, in the gambling lottery of which my father has invested money for the last ten years without receiving any returns. And the so called vineyards, these mounds erected as advertisements by the makers of wines, so that their mixture of high wine, rainwater and sugar may find a market under the name of Liebfraueumilch, have no charm for me.

"There can be no doubt that fifty years ago this whole territory was flat as a tennis court. Everything on the Rhine is fraud. The Mouse tower is probably the only place in the whole region which is not overrun by mice. At all other points one is fairly eaten up by this pest. And the weather! It begins with a harmless fog, so thick that those who play blindman's buff do not need a bandage over their eyes. At noon the fog rises, and then comes the rain which makes the Rhine, which dried up during the night, a stream again."

AUTOMOBILE CAMPING.

Motoring Parties In Berkshire Hills Pitch Tents In Farmers' Lots.

Automobile camping is the latest diversion of city tourists traveling in the Berkshires and Litchfield hills. Instead of stopping at the hotels, some of which have the reputation of charging autoists exorbitant rates, they carry their own tents, which they pitch on some obliging farmer's lot.

Autoists buy everything they need for the table from the farmer, also pay him for the use of his cooking utensils and dishes.

A touring car with six passengers stopped at Silas Carrington's, above Colbrook, Conn., at about 7:30 p. m. the other day and asked if there was a convenient place on his premises to pitch a tent.

"There's a ten acre pasture you can use," replied Silas, "and if 'tain't enough take a strip off the meadow."

"What's the charge?"

"Oh, none."

"Ever take a drink?" asked the city man.

Carrington took out his watch and replied, "I drink just once a day, punctually at 7:30 p. m."

The autoists paid the farmer $2 for food, and everything was fresh. The party's bill the day before at a fashionable hotel was $24.

New Wireless Scheme.

Commander Cleland Davis, U. S. N., inventor of the famous Davis torpedo, has a new wireless scheme, which he has submitted to the war department at Washington for consideration. It is the utilizing of the Washington monument as a wireless station. Commander Davis believes his plan would make it possible to send wireless messages to all parts of the world uninterruptedly. Commander Davis believes that the height of the monument, which is 555 feet, will eliminate all fear of any contact, as there are no high buildings or mountains interrupting. It would insure the saving of thousands of dollars to the government and would mean through direct communication that only minutes would be consumed to [illegible] where hours are necessary at this time.

Sally's Iron.

In describing some of her associates of the stage, Ellen Terry, in McClure's Magazine, tells of her dresser, Sarah Holland. She had an extraordinarily open mind, writes Miss Terry, and was ready to grasp each new play as it came along as a separate and entirely different field of operations.

She was extremely methodical and only got flurried once in a blue moon. When we went to America and made the acquaintance of that dreadful thing, a "one night stand," she was as precise and particular about having everything nice and in order for me as if we were going to stay in the town a month. Down went my neat square of white drugget. All the lights in my dressing room were arranged as I wished. Everything was unpacked and ironed.

One day when I came into some American theater to dress I found Sally nearly in tears.

"What's the matter with you, Sally?" I asked.

"I 'aven't 'ad a morsel to heat all day, dear, and I can't 'eat my iron."

"Eat your iron, Sally! What do you mean?"

"'Ow am I to iron all this, dear?" wailed my faithful Sally, picking up my Nance Oldfield apron and a few other trifles. "It won't get 'ot!"

Until then I really thought that Sally was being sardonic about an iron as a substitute for victuals.

Tair no Manners.

Do telephones lead to politeness or otherwise? When they first came into use the answer to this question would have been emphatically in the negative, but now that they are almost universally prevalent an era of good manners and "thank you's" seems to be in full swing. In some communities it is not even possible to quarrel over the telephone, although the two women who took part in the following conversation came near it:

"Hello! Is this Mrs. Weston?"

"Yes."

"This is your next door neighbor, Mrs. Lawrence. I thought you might be interested to know that at the present moment your son Thomas is sitting on one of the sheets which are bleaching on my lawn and is building a large pile of mud on it."

"Oh, thank you, Mrs. Lawrence!" exclaimed the mother. "And may I return the favor by informing you that your setter Rab has just rooted up my two new rosebushes and that he seems to be chewing the buds!"

"Oh, indeed! Thank you! Goodby!"

"Not at all. Thank you! Goodby!"

Youthful Assurance.

"When I was your age," said the stern parent, "I was accumulating money of my own."

"Yes," answered the graceless youth, "but don't you think the public was easier then than it is now?"—Washington Star.

Showing Him How.

"You young scoundrel," said the father, seizing his disobedient son by the hair, "I'll show you how to treat your mother!"

And he gave him several bangs on the ears and then shook him until his hair began to fall out.

THE LIBRARY ENTERTAINMENT COURSE.

The Current Events Club of this city has closed the contract for a series of entertainments, four in number, to be held during the winter in the Assembly Room of the Fulton Public Library, for the benefit of the Public Library.

The contract price of these four entertainments is $40 more than the amount paid for the five entertainments given last season.

No mistake has been made in the selection and every entertainment will be of the highest order.

The following are attractions and dates for this—the best entertainment course ever given in Fulton.

November 6.—The Hruby (pronounced Ruby) Brothers Quintet and Miss Gertrude Canfield, reader. The five brothers in this company are:

Frank — piano, clarinet, violin, basset-horn, xylophone; appeared with Liberatti, the Castle Square Opera Company, Innes, the Royal Hungarian Orchestra and other organizations.

Ferdinand—piano and clarinet; member of the John D. Rockefeller Sunday School Orchestra and director of the Cleveland (Ohio) Juvenile Band.

Alois—'cello, cornet, 'cellophone (the only one in America) and trumpet; member of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra; was cornet soloist at the age of fourteen with the Royal Hungarian Orchestra.

John—violin, cornet and trumpet.

Charles—cornet and trumpet; considered the greatest cornet soloist of his age.

Miss Canfield, who assists the Hruby Brothers, has made a great success as a reader.

December. — Maude Ballington Booth. Subject: Lights and Shadows of Prison Life. The exact date in December of Mrs. Booth's lecture cannot be given at present. Her season is limited to fifty nights of which Fulton has one. She gives every cent of her money to further the work of prison reform. This is her only reason for appearing before the public.

A prominent Eastern manager recently said of her: "Mrs. Booth is the only woman orator of the decade whom the public will turn out and pay to hear. Why? First of all, she is the ablest woman orator in America. Her cause is the most worthy. She is probably the most beloved woman in the land; certainly she is the most attractive of all women speakers. She has fire and magnetism—gifts of the highest oratorical order, sustained and animated by deep conviction, high purpose, and burning earnestness. These great essentials are of paramount importance to success on the platform."

January 23.—The Dunbar Company. There are four brothers in this company and they are an international musical success. They have given for the past seven years forty-four weeks to concerts with no open dates, the other eight weeks being required for special rehearsals and coaching.

The Dunbars are past "promoting." Their history is their strongest endorsement. They have given nearly two thousand concerts on tours carrying them more than three hundred thousand miles, far enough to encircle the globe twelve times, to every part of the Union, Canada, Great Britain and the continent, and everywhere great audiences have been charmed with their programs.

February 16.—Elma B. Smith and Her New Company. This is Miss Smith's sixth season on the platform. Probably no entertainer who has ever come before the American public deserves stardom more than Elma B. Smith. She is unquestionably the greatest imitator of children, birds and animals now before the public. Her imitations of birds, babes and children are a unique feature of her work and are the best of their kind on the platform. Her imitations of children are so real and lifelike that they are the talk of the town for days after her departure.

Miss Smith will be assisted by Miss Rich who will give folk songs of all nations in costume; Waldemar von Geltch, a young violinist of exceptional ability, and William Rummel, a brilliant young pianist.

The quality of these entertainments and the fact that the net proceeds go to our public library should make the securing of the necessary 275 season tickets easy of accomplishment.

The price of a season ticket is $2.00 and the subscription list is now in the hands of Miss Mollie G. Cavanaugh, by whom subscriptions are now being taken.

Necessary to elect a President, two hundred and forty-two. The Republicans are said to be reasonably sure of two hundred and six votes, and the Democrats are reasonably sure of one hundred and sixty-one. SOMETHING DIFFERENT.

A special correspondent to The Times, after viewing the State Fair in Syracuse last week, sends the following communication which will be read with interest by many, as it shows that the woman suffrage and the anti-woman suffrage adherents are keenly alive. The communication is as follows:

In one wing of the beautiful main building an educational exhibit has been brought together. On one side the State Charities Association with its startlingly interesting tuberculosis pictures; on the other instructive displays of the Audubon Society; the State Trades School of Syracuse; the W. C. T. U.; the Woman Suffrage Booth done up in yellow; and still more interesting, because an innovation, its rival decorated in white bunting with our country's flag draped in the background to show that the women "Opposed to Woman Suffrage," as a sign above tells us, are working from patriotic motives.

The appearance of this Anti-Suffrage Booth occasions much surprise apparently, for many passers by exclaim in joyful or shocked tones "We never knew that there were women opposed to Woman Suffrage."

The women in charge are busy giving out their literature, as are their Suffrage sisters below, and have many chats with those who detach themselves from the living stream that passes by all the day long, to ask questions.

There is a great array of pamphlets: "Why the Working Woman Does Not Need the Ballot;" "How Can Woman Best Serve the State?" "Reasons Why Women Do Not Want To Vote;" "The Ballot, a Help or a Hindrance;" "The Vital Connection Between Socialism and Woman Suffrage," and so it goes.

The Suffragists are somewhat disturbed by the incursion of their adversaries into their hitherto undisputed field of work, but seem to welcome them, and good feeling exists.

The Suffrage Booth is in charge of Mrs. Crossett, President of the State Association, and the Anti-Suffrage Booth in charge of Mrs. George Douglas Miller, President of the Albany Auxiliary of the State Association opposed to Woman Suffrage.

All the women prominent in the management of this Association are actively interested in philanthropic and civic movements.

Excerpt from a conversation heard at the Anti-Suffrage Booth: We are in two opposed camps, it is true; but our differences are entirely due to different points of view. We approach the matter from opposite directions. You men may—and indeed must—act on the issue, but your action will be largely a formal sanction of our decision. We, on this side, maintain that women were made women to do certain things that men cannot do. Both sexes should work together, hand in hand, with eye single to the common good.

This question of Suffrage may—though we doubt it—call for a final referendum of the sex as to whether we will be burdened by any revolution (for we do not deem it evolution) we will shoulder our added responsibilities and do the best we can; but we on this side the breastworks feel assured that any temporary success of our opponents will "call out the reserves" i. e., the women who do not at present realize that this movement for Suffrage is of sufficient importance to make it necessary for them take a stand against it, and that the result will be no more doubtful than was the issue when the Nation's life hung in the balance after Bull Run.

Kodol will, without doubt, make your stomach strong and will almost instantly relieve you of all the symptoms of indigestion. It will do this because it is made up of the natural digestive juices of the stomach so combined that it completely digests the food just as the stomach will do it, so you see Kodol can't fail to help you and help you promptly. It is sold here by all druggists.

By the Name of "X."

In France, where great care is taken that men shall have no other name than that to which they are lawfully entitled and where every citizen's name, profession, social condition and history are carefully recorded and his goings and comings are officially kept track of, some very curious incidents take place.

On one occasion a young man was arrested in Constantine, Algeria, on a charge of stealing money belonging to his employer. When it was sought to make a record of his name, it was found that he had no lawful name at all.

He had been "inscribed" at Bordeaux at the date of his birth, but his father and mother were not known, and the name of Lafonde, under which he had been inscribed without authority, he had since been forbidden by a court of justice to bear because it was not rightfully his. After having been forbidden the name of Lafonde he took that of Bruyton and was refused permission to bear that.

Nevertheless he managed to exist in some way without any name at all, but when, having been accused of taking some money that had disappeared, the law was obliged to take cognizance of him in some way he was entered on the lists of the court as one "X." And it was as "X" that he was sent to prison.—New York Tribune.

After a South African Storm.

With the breaking of the day I went outside. The country was unrecognizable. The land and the scenery which I had known for years were entirely altered. The very hills, piled high with white hailstones, were a different shape, and torrents of muddy water poured down from all sides. And when the red sun rose into a clear bright sky the scene of ruin and desolation was awful to look at. Buildings had been hurled to the ground and were nothing more than hills of hailstones. A large dam I had spent two years in making had been completely swept away. In another dam which had remained unbroken the hailstones had accumulated and piled themselves up over twenty feet in height. There was not a sign of water in this huge dam, just a huge pile of frozen hailstones.—Wide World Magazine.

TO PHOTOGRAPH IN JUNGLE.

Dugmore Will Go Into African Wilds With His Camera.

A. Radclyffe Dugmore, a well known outdoor photographer, will leave New York some time in December or January for British East Africa for the purpose of taking photographs of big game in their native state. Mr. Dugmore desired to go with President Roosevelt as his regular photographer, but, the president having informed him that Kermit Roosevelt would take all the photographs for their expedition, he decided to go by himself.

Among the pictures which Mr. Dugmore intends to take will be some by the new Lumiere coloring process.

His camera weighs fourteen pounds, stripped, for he does not believe, as do some photographers who venture into difficult country, in sacrificing efficiency to weight. It will be especially suited to tropical climates and will have duplicate parts in case of breakage.

The animals which Mr. Dugmore especially desires to photograph are the zebra, the gnu and the rhinoceros. The only man to venture into Africa recently who obtained good photographs of big game was Schilling, and he was first a hunter and next a photographer. For instance, when he ran across a large herd of wild elephants he contented himself with a photograph from a considerable distance and then closed in on the herd for shooting purposes. Mr. Dugmore will do no shooting unless put on the defensive.

Mr. Dugmore came to the United States ten years ago from the West Indies. He is an Englishman, the son of a captain in the British army and a grandnephew of Lord Brougham. For the last ten years his pictures have been appearing in American periodicals. He was the first man to photograph fish in the water. One of his specialties is the photographing of birds, of which he has taken 10,000 pictures.

Among other schemes he has for obtaining his pictures in east Africa is that of having the animals photograph themselves. This he has already tried successfully with caribou and similar big game. For the purpose a string is attached to the flashlight apparatus and one end fixed at a spring or some other haunt of the animals in such a way that they will step on it, set off the apparatus and take the picture. Photographs taken in this way are particularly valuable owing to the vivid expression which usually appears on the faces of the animals.

Last of a Cabinet.

The death of William F. Vilas removes the last member of the first cabinet council that gathered about President Cleveland in March, 1885. Mr. Vilas was the first postmaster general in the Cleveland administration and subsequently secretary of the interior. Of the cabinets, however, of Presidents Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Arthur there are members still living. Of President Grant's official advisers there survive James Don Cameron, who was secretary of war, and George H. Williams, who was attorney general, and of President Hayes' cabinet there is left Judge Nathan Goff, who was secretary of the navy. Still living of President Garfield's cabinet are Robert T. Lincoln, secretary of war; Thomas L. James, postmaster general, and Wayne MacVeagh, attorney general, and of President Arthur's cabinet, besides Mr. Lincoln, Senator H. M. Teller, secretary of the interior, and ex-Senator William E. Chandler, secretary of the navy.

Shooting Stars.

When a shooting star breaks into flame in our atmosphere the residuum of the combustion remains in the air and can be found in what is known as atmospheric dust. The virgin snow of the polar regions was often seen to be spotted with traces of dust which contained particles of iron. Like particles are found on church towers and elsewhere. Among the minute bodies that dance in the sun's rays there are certainly particles of shooting stars.

When you have a cold you may be sure that it has been caused indirectly by constipation and consequently you must first of all take something to move the bowels. This is what has made Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup so successful and so generally demanded. It does not constipate like most of the old-fashioned cough cures, but on the other hand it gently moves the bowels and at the same time heals irritation and allays inflammation of the throat. Sold by all druggists.

'Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

According to History.

A woman who belongs to a community called the Sisters of St. John the Baptist not long ago spent a month in a backwoods district. Shortly after her arrival she went to the local postoffice and inquired if any letters had come for Sister Bernardine. The rural postmaster looked bewildered.

"Sister who?" he asked incredulously

"Sister Bernardine," repeated the lady, "a sister of St. John the Baptist."

"I think not," he answered. Then, after some reflection, he added. "Say, ain't he been dead pretty near a hundred years now?"—Harper's Weekly.

GOOD READING FOR BOYS.

Great Care Should Be Taken to Select Literature Both Interesting and Instructive — Success Attained by Prominent Periodical.

It is a live and vital problem with many parents—and should be with all of them—to secure the right kind of literature for their boys, most for whom show very early a propensity of reading everything upon which they can lay their hands.

It was for the purpose of meeting this definite need that there was begun at Detroit in 1881 the publishing of a periodical devoted to boys and boys' interests. This was appropriately styled "The American Boy"—a name now familiar to nearly everyone.

It has been the constant aim of the publishers to make "The American Boy" the best magazine for boys; to make it a definite influence for good in developing mind and body, for broadening out and shaping the character in mould of true manhood. One of their mottoes is, "Make what the boys want and what their parents want them to have."

To this end "The American Boy" is edited with unusual care. Its contributors rank among the nation's able authors; their articles are helpful and uplifting. Every issue contains pictures by famous artists, and regular departments are devoted to Photography, Collecting, Mechanics and Electricity, Sports and all "boy hobbies."

"The American Boy" is issued every month by The Sprague Publishing Company, Majestic Building, Detroit, Michigan. The regular subscription price is $1 per year; a sample copy will be mailed to any address upon receipt of 10c.

A Bit of Blue Sky.

Professor John Tyndall, who, with many great gifts, possessed a singular skill in devising and conducting beautiful experimental illustrations, actually produced in 1869 a bit of blue sky in the lecture room. In a glass tube three feet in length and three inches in diameter he exhausted the air until it was less than one-tenth the density of the atmosphere we breathe and represented the rarer air high overhead. Into this exhausted air he introduced nitrite of butyle vapor, which is extremely volatile. Then a strong beam of light in a room otherwise dark was passed through the mixture, and in the glass tube there glowed a beautiful blue cloud, rivaling in color the finest Italian sky. Here was blue sky brought down to earth.

Another Way Out of It.

Nobody had ever had reason to accuse Abel Pond of being dishonest, but he was as sharp a man to a bargain as could be found in the county. When the building committee applied to him for a site for the new library he was ready to sell them a desirable lot, but not at their price.

"I couldn't feel to let it go under $600," he said, with the mild obstinacy that characterized all his dealings with his fellow men. "It wouldn't be right."

"You ought to be willing to contribute something for such an object," said the chairman of the committee. "If it's worth six hundred, why not let us have it for five hundred and call it you've given the other hundred?"

"M'm—no, I couldn't do that," said Mr. Pond, stroking his chin. "But I tell you what I will do. You give me seven hundred for it, and I'll make out a check for a hundred and hand it over to you, so's you can head the list of subscriptions with a good round sum and kind of wake up folks to their duty."—Youth's Companion.

A Real Apology.

"When the late Joel Chandler Harris was an editor here among us," said an Atlantan, "I called on him one day and found him very willing to correct an error about me that crept into his columns.

"We talked about newspaper contradictions, public apologies and the like, and 'Uncle Remus' took down a scrapbook and read me an apology that was an apology indeed. It had happened, he said, in a Transvaal paper. I'll never forget it. I agreed with Mr. Harris that it was the finest specimen of the public apology and retraction extant. It said:

"I, the undersigned, A. C. du Plessis, retract hereby everything I have said against the innocent Mr. G. P. Bezuidenhout, calling myself an infamous liar and striking my mouth with the exclamation: 'You mendacious mouth! Why do you lie so?' I declare, further, that I know nothing against the character of Mr. G. P. Bezuidenhout. I call myself, besides, a genuine liar of the first class.

"A. C. DU PLESSIS."

His Cough Cure.

"In my boyhood there came to our town," said a clergyman, "a gentle minister who, the very first Sunday of his incumbency, stopped effectually his coughing congregation.

"It was a congregation, too, singularly addicted to coughing. Rattling volleys of coughs ran over it every few minutes. The minister, indeed, that first Sunday could hardly make himself heard. He had rather a weak voice.

"Well, after his sermon had proceeded for ten or twelve minutes, now audible enough, now drowned under great waves of coughs, he took a resolution, and when the next outbreak was at its height he ceased preaching.

"At once the coughing ceased. There was a profound silence. The minister smiled.

"'My friends,' said he, 'it seems that when I stop you stop.'

"From that day in that church they coughed no more."

Queer Wedding Effigy.

There is a curious custom still prevalent in the Bellary district of India in connection with the wedding ceremonies among certain Brahman families. Just prior to the close of the feasting a hideous effigy of a male figure, fantastically robed in rags, supposed to represent the bridegroom's father, is carried along the streets in procession under the shade of a sieve adorned with tassels of onions and margosa leaves. Every few yards during the procession the feet of the effigy have to be reverently washed and its forehead decorated with a caste mark by its living spouse, the bridegroom's mother. The bridegroom's other female relations have several mock attentions paid to them by the women of the bride's party.—St. James' Gazette.

Restaurant Affiliation.

The waiter in the light lunch cafe looked expectantly at the first of five men who had just entered.

"Bring me a coffee cake and a cup of coffee," ordered the first man.

"I'll take some milk biscuit and a glass of milk," said the second.

"Tea buns and a cup of tea, please," remarked the third.

"A piece of cocoanut pie and a cup of cocoa," said the fourth.

The waiter passed on to the fifth man.

"Don't say it, don't say it!" he pleaded. "I know what you want. You want a slice of chocolate cake and a cup of chocolate."

"No; I do not," protested the fifth man. "I want a plate of ice cream and a glass of ice water."—Judge's Library.

An Odd Legacy.

Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the Jefferson family of actors, was remembered curiously in the will of Weston, who was himself an esteemed member of Garrick's company. Weston's will contained this item:

"I have played under the management of Mr. Jefferson at Richmond and received from him every politeness. I therefore leave him all my stock of prudence, it being the only good quality I think he stands in need of."

Not So Blind.

"Miranda, I want to ask you to marry me and to tell me"—

"Oh, George, this is so sudden!"

—"to tell me what date you and your mother have decided on for our wedding."—Brooklyn Life.

Publicity.

REPUBLICAN PRINCIPLES SHOULD WIN

The leaders of the Republican party in this State have confidence in the wisdom of the electors and believe that the nominees of the party will win by a large majority. There is no longer a Democratic party; it is a Bryan party, imbued with all the shallow, vehement acceptance of any economical or financial craze of the moment—a candidate who has been fittingly described "as a restless adventurer in innovations, a dabbler in disastrous theories, an old hand at humbugs and a man who is crazy to be President."

Manifest confidence is expressed by Republicans and conservative Democrats in the integrity and honesty of purpose of Charles Evans Hughes. His name is a synonym of sterling worth and inflexibility of purpose in the administration of the affairs of the Empire State—a capable public servant—and it is now incumbent on all who appreciate good government to back him up by their votes and re-elect him to office.

In a recent speech on the conditions which now confront the electors, Governor Hughes stated:

"The Republican party in Nation and in State, with a fine record of achievement, equipped with experience and inspired with high ideals, is ready to go forward securing efficient and honorable administration and providing for the correction of abuses, while at the same time conserving the stability of honest business.

"In the Nation we are confronted by policies of folly and disaster. Our opponents propose remedies which are worse than the disease. If they had their way they would prostrate the industry of the country. They advance reckless proposals which they cannot defend. They offer schemes which will not bear sober discussion, and failing in argument their only refuge is assertion. We know what we have escaped at their hands in the past, and escape from their vagaries is just as essential now as then."

The Republicans see no chance of Bryan's being elected, but they are not taking any chances. If there are any mistakes to be sorry for after next November, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hitchcock are going to see to it that taking things for granted was not among theirs.

A. Radclyffe Dugmore of New York will leave New York sometime in December for Africa for the purpose of taking photographs of big game there. If they stand for their photographs it is to be presumed they will stand for the President's gun.

Hetty Green believes that women should economize in dress. Hetty would have helped the cause more if she had not pointed herself out as an example of a woman who economizes in her raiment.

The President is very eager to improve life in the rural communities. If he will see to it that the hired man gets up early enough in the morning the farmers will let it go at that.

Madame Nordica says that talking will strengthen and develop the whole body. This will hardly be good news for Mr. Taft at the beginning of his talking tour.

Dr. William Osler has been appointed lord high rector of the University of Edinburgh. So that was a joke after all about chloroforming men at sixty.

Orville Wright, the aeroplane inventor, experimenting with his machine at Washington, has at least proved that he can move in the highest circles.

Mr. Charles H. Treat says we should eat seven times a day. The political party that will guarantee we shall be able to do so is the one that will get the votes.

A Paris fashion note says that next year ladies hats will be much lower. It would be a trusting man indeed who could fancy it referred to the price.

The Boston Post says, "No man should pin his faith to a cocktail." Superfluous advice, it seems, when swallowing them is so much simpler.

Mr. Gilbert W. Benedict will leave on Thursday for New York city where he will enter the New York College of Law. Mr. Benedict graduated from Amherst in June and has a splendid foundation laid for the successful conduct of the study of his choosen profession.

Francis A Stafford has purchased through Whitaker & Lovejoy the Gere property at the corner of South Third street and Broadway, and will assume possession of the dwelling this Fall. The vacant lots on Broadway and Third street which have formed part of the property will be offered for sale.

A paragraph is going the rounds about a girl dying from tight lacing. An editor commenting on the fact says: Those corsets should be done away with and if the girls can't live without being squeezed we suppose men be found who would sacrifice themselves. As old as we are we'd rather devote three hours a day, without a farthing of pay, as a brevet corset, than see girls dying in that manner. Office hours almost any time.

The La Preferencia cigar, 5 for 25c, is about the sweetest smoke a man can buy. Have you tried them? Sold only at the V. C. Lewis smoke shop, Cayuga street.

The State Treasury will be augmented by about $23,000 this Fall as the result of the State Fair as against $20,000 last year. Last weeks attendance was 187,936; as against 143,844 in 1906.

The Executive Committee of the Prohibition State Committee will meet in Syracuse today for the purpose of deciding whether or not headquarters will be removed from Oswego to Syracuse.

A stranger was stricken with a slight shock on Tuesday afternoon about 3.30 o'clock on Second street near Conley Brothers' news room. He was taken into the depot baggage room and Dr. A. L. Hall was called. He recovered soon and proceeded upon his way.

The residents of the village of Pulaski are aroused over the fact that some inhuman person within the village limits last week covered a dog with kerosene or gasoline and then set fire to it, turning the suffering animal into the street. It will go hard with the guilty party if apprehended.

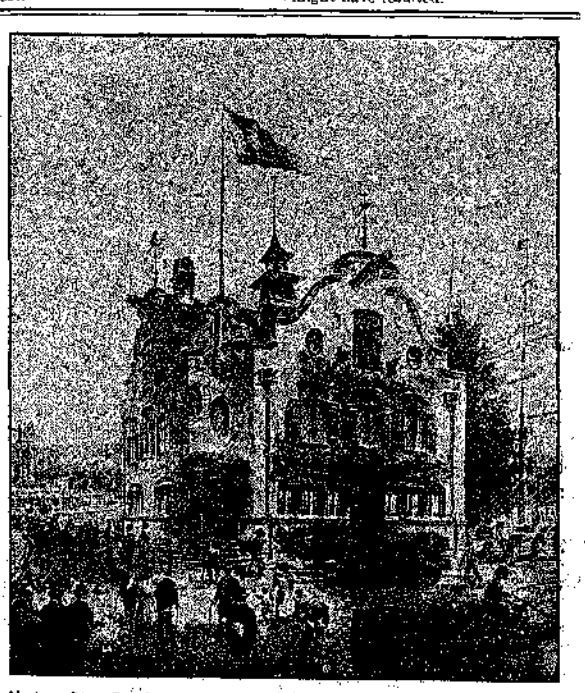
The Republican County Committee will open headquarters in the Hotel Redstone, Oswego, within ten days. Chairman Sweetland is in favor of a short, vigorous campaign and now that the conventions have all been held and nominations made, the campaign will probably open.

The surviving members of the 81st Regiment, N. Y. V., met in Oswego last week. There were about 40 of the old guard present and a most enjoyable day was spent. The officers elected for the ensuing year follows: President, L. V. S. Matteson: Vice Presidents C. I Cook, William Brackett, W. R. Fleming. Treasurer, Daniel Morten; Secretary, A. F. Hall. The next meeting will be held in Oswego,

The fire department was called at 8 o'clock on Saturday evening to the Lewis House where a fire had started in a kindling box at the end of a hallway over the Giesler store and had eaten its way through a partition to the roof. It looked like a very threatening fire at one time, but was subdued. About half an hour later a blazing mattrass was found on a bed in a tightly closed, unoccupied room over the Citizens Bank. The mattrass and clothing were thrown upon the adjacent roof and the flames extinguished. It was very fortunate that the fires occured early in the evening or terrible loss of life and property might have resulted.

The members of the Fire Department are grateful to Messrs O. C. Hannis and Victor C. Lewis for a generous supply of choice cigars presented them after the fire had been extinguished on Saturday. Mr. Hannis gave each a 10c cigar and Mr. Lewis gave them a box of cigars.

Mr. C. B. Benson of Minetto last week secured four prizes at the State Fair in Syracuse, for his floral display. Mr. Benson has the finest greenhouses at his home in Minetto, to be found in this section of the State and he is exceedingly fond of plants, they being his favorite hobby.



On Wednesday last, Frank W. Lasher, proprietor of the First street book store inserted "a furnace for sale" advertisement in the Fulton Times Early on Thursday morning the furnace was sold as the direct result of the advertisement. There is no doubt about the value of the Times as an advertising medium.

Sunday was the 80th natal anniversary of Mrs. E. A. Jennings and the event was observed at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. R. Rudd, No. 310 Third street, by a family dinner at which guests were present from Syracuse, Cortland and Camillus. Mrs. Jennings was the recipient of many gifts and hearty congratulations.

The Executive Committee of the State Firemans Entertainment Committee of Oswego, has rendered a statement as to receipts and disbursements which shows a balance or $73 06 in the treasury of the committee to be put away as a nucleus for some later convention entertainment fund. The whole amount of money received was $4,580.20; disbursements, $4,507.14.

A horse belonging to Garrett Bros. on Saturday broke its halter in First street and rushed madly through the street at an hour when traffic was most congested. At the corner of Cayuga and First streets the horse fell, but regained its feet and proceeded to its stable. It was marvelous to watch the animal pick its way among wagons and people without colliding with them and without slacking speed.

Carl Coit, a son of the Rev. and Mrs. O. B. Coit, was painfully injured on Wednesday by being shot through the thigh by his brother while hunting for deer in the Adirondacks with their father. The boy was carried 20 miles on an improvised stretcher to a hospital where his injuries were cared for. He will be lame for life, if he ever recovers. The late J. J. Coit of this city was an uncle of the injured boy.

In the erection of this attractive building the Company have had in mind not only the convenience of their General Agent and his assistants, but have looked out well for the traveling public. The building has been designed in harmony with the early traditions of "Old Dutch Albany" and prepares the traveler on his way down the river for reminiscences of the "Half Moon," Rip Van Winkle and other historic events in the early years following the discovery of this beautiful river. The Waiting Room, Ticket Offices, etc., are all designed with this feeling in mind and the whole makes a quiet, restful place in which every attention is paid to the Company's patrons.

Then He Got His.

A young Lancashire lad joined the army and soon after his arrival at headquarters got into trouble. Accordingly he had to face his commanding officer next morning.

The usual preliminaries were gone through, when, contrary to orderly room etiquette, the recruit commenced to defend himself.

"Silence!" roared the adjutant.

"Thou shut up," said the prisoner. "I'm not speaking to thee. I'm talking to the old chap in the chair."—London Scraps.

Too Much For Him.

"How true that old saying is about a child asking questions that a man cannot answer," remarked Popleigh.

"What's the trouble now?" queried his friend Singleton.

"This morning," replied Popleigh "my little boy asked me why men were sent to congress and I couldn't tell him."—Chicago News.

How Models Make Pictures.

The artist gazed in rapture on "The Kiss," his latest picture.

"Do you grasp," he said, "the passionate grace of the girl's attitude, the warmth and the power wherewith her tense white arms draw the young man closer, ever closer? Well, I got that idea from my model, a shopgirl.

"But for my model's suggestion I'd have put the girl in a stiff, cold pose, and the picture would never have been the masterpiece it is. But my model pointed out to me the abandon wherewith a girl, whether of high or low station, gives herself up to a kiss' chains. She illustrated the thing, aided by a male model, a young medical student. Yes, she made my picture.

"The fact is, models make, with their valuable hints and suggestions, lots of pictures. There's many a masterpiece whose merit is due to the splendid pose that the model originated for the principal figure."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Stringent measures should be adopted to prevent the leaving of horses untied or insufficiently tied, in our streets Hardly a day passes that narrow escapes from injury or death as the result of horses making rapid strides for parts unknown, unattended by a driver, are not reported. If a few rigs were taken to police headquarters and the careless owners had to pay a dollar or two to redeem the rig, it might have a salutary effect upon the driving public at large

A good story is told on two West Side residents. One night recently a man living in a lower flat heard a noise in the cellar and thinking burglars were after some of his stores, he summoned the man who lived upstairs to go with him and investigate. Upon consultation they decided discretion to be the better part of valor and called for an officer. The trio descended the cellar stairs to find a love skunk in possession. A shot from the officer's revolver dispatched the intruder to his happy hunting grounds, leaving verification of the quotation, "You may break, you may shatter, the vase if you will, but the odor of roses will linger there still."

Messrs. John W. Stevenson, Joe Murphy, Charles O'Brien and John Winters on Sunday attended the annual clambake of the "Widower's Club" at The Willows, Oswego. In speaking of the event the Palladium says in part: The weather was delightful and there was not a single dull moment. During the afternoon, John W. Stevenson, Manager of the American Woolen Company's big plant in Fulton, drove down in his automobile, accompanied by Joe Murphy, Charles O'Brien and John Winters. A whisper stole through the camp during the afternoon that several females in semi-mourning and others in gayer colors, had been seen in the neighborhood and had been heard making inquiries as to the number at the outing, their ages, etc. "Invasion of this camp by the common enemy must be guarded against," said the President, and a picket line was thrown out, each picket carrying a red flag to warn the intruders away. "If this club is to be perpetuated and these enjoyable bakes are to become a feature of this delightful season of Autumn," said Mr. Stevenson of Fulton, who will probably be the next Treasurer of the Republican County Committee, "we must keep the women away." He also suggested an official emblem be designed to be worn at the outings and regular meetings only. No action was taken on the suggestion.

The Fire department was called about midnight on Thursday, to the Nelson barn in the southern section of the city, where a fire probably of incendiary origin, was burning fiercely. The same building has been on fire before but prompt action of the department, coupled with rain, had prevented much headway being made. Owing to the dryness of the wood and the light material with which the barn was filled on Thursday it was impossible to save the building and it required stubborn effort to save adjacent buildings. At one time the gas companys plant was in imminent danger.

GOVERNOR HUGHES RENOMINATED.

Received an Overwhelming Majority on First Ballot.

WHITE GETS SECOND PLACE.

Governor's Nomination Was Made Unanimous on Motion of State Committeeman William Barnes, Jr., of Albany, Who Has Been One of His Bitterest Opponents — New York's 163 Votes Carried the Governor's Total Beyond the 505 Required.

Saratoga, Sept. 16. — Charles Evans Hughes of New York was nominated by the Republican state convention by an overwhelming majority and on the first ballot to succeed himself as governor of the state of New York. He received 827 votes out of a possible 1,009, as against 151 for James W. Wadsworth, Jr., of Livingston county, speaker of the state assembly, and 31 for former Congressman John K. Stewart of Montgomery.

The nomination was made unanimous upon motion of State Committeeman William Barnes, Jr., of Albany, who has been perhaps the bitterest and most outspoken opponent of the governor's renomination, seconded by those who had placed Speaker Wadsworth and Mr. Stewart in nomination.

The governor's renomination followed the utter failure of a desperate struggle on the part of a number of the county leaders who for four days have spared no effort to discover a candidate upon whom they could unite to defeat him. The balance of the ticket was made up in the "good old fashioned way," as an organization "slate," and announced an hour or more before the session of the convention began, by Chairman Timothy L. Woodruff of the state committee, after a conference of the local leaders.

Senator White Gets Second Place.

Senator White, who was chosen as a candidate for lieutenant governor, was "in the running" for the governorship until the early afternoon, when after a meeting of his delegation he requested his friends not to present his name and left delegates pledged to him free to vote for whom they would. The fifteen votes of his county delegation (Onondaga) were cast for Speaker Wadsworth.

It was the 163 votes of all but one district in New York county that carried the governor's total beyond the 505, a majority of the convention, required to nominate.

The nine votes of Nassau county had brought the Hughes total to 396. Amid a breathless hush, in which was incarnate all the intensity of bitterness and suspense which up to that moment had characterized the struggle to prevent the renomination of Hughes, the secretary of the convention called, "New York."

Herbert Parsons, president of the New York county Republican general committee, rose in his place under the gallery, his slender figure alert and tense with the excitement of the crucial moment, his lean features, if possible, more inscrutable than is their wont, his eyes nevertheless alight with the consciousness that he was for the moment the custodian of words which would be flashed in a few seconds on waiting wires to far corners of the civilized world, and said:

"New York county. Second assembly district, gives four for Wadsworth; the balance of the county, 183, for Charles Evans Hughes."

A thousand pencils in two seconds had footed the Hughes total to 578; in as many heartbeats every person in the great hall knew that the battle was over and the place was instantly a bedlam of cheering.

Kings County All For Hughes.

Hardly less sensational had been the moment when State Chairman Woodruff delivered to Hughes, in spite of a general expectation to the contrary, the entire vote of Kings county, 138, bringing the governor's total to 342; for Woodruff had been avowedly opposed to the governor's renomination and even after William Berri, the choice of Kings for the governorship, had withdrawn from the race, it was expected that some at least of the Kings county vote could never be delivered to the Hughes column. In which signalized what might be called

At this critical time in the commercial and industrial development of the world, with a revision of our tariff and our banking and currency laws impending, we urge every believer in sound money and in the American policy of protection to the wage earner, the farmer, the manufacturer and the mechanic to support the Republican candidates who are pledged to sound money and a protective tariff.

We believe the courts, federal and state, constitute the citadel of our liberties, for all alike, and that the vacancies in the supreme court of the United States to occur in the next four years should be filled by the trusted and experienced Republican candidate for the presidency rather than by an untried and unstable theorist.

We ask all who believe in Republican policies, regardless of party affiliations, to unite with us in the support of Taft and Sherman and a Republican congress to the end that the people's work, conducted so splendidly and successfully under President Roosevelt's administration, may be continued and extended until all existing special privileges have been destroyed and adequate safeguards provided against further abuses.

We endorse the administration of Governor Hughes who has shown himself a courageous executive, resolved to accomplish what he believes to be for the public good. He has approved measures passed by a Republican legislature, upholding the integrity of the constitution, maintaining the high character of the public service, providing for the proper regulation of corporations and for the protection of the people's interests.

Every legal voter should be encouraged to exercise his right of franchise, that the will of the majority expressed through a ballot, freely cast and honestly counted, may prevail. To that end we are opposed to any form of ballot that shall render it more difficult for the voter to exercise his constitutional privilege of designation upon the ballot of the candidate whom he wishes to support.

It is of the highest importance for the preservation of our representative form of government that primaries and conventions should truly express the will of the voters of every political party. That there may be the freest action in the selection of the delegates, we favor legislation which will fully protect every voter against fraud or coercion and secure to him the fullest opportunity to vote at his party primary.

We favor the speedy completion of the highway and improved canal system and the creation of a board by the national government to report upon a systematic plan for the improvement of rivers and harbors. We advocate the protection and expansion of the state forest preserve; the conservation and development of all our natural resources; home rule in local matters; an eight-hour day for employes in the public service, including policemen; liberal appropriations for the maintenance of institutions devoted to the state's dependent and unfortunate wards; the extension of the system of agricultural and industrial education and the intelligent development of our agricultural resources; economy in public expenditures; equal rights, equal opportunities; fair play and a square deal for labor and capital.

Since 1898 Republican legislatures have passed, Republican governors have approved and Republicans officials have enforced 133 affirmative enactments in the interest of labor, embracing the regulation of hours, payment of wages, inspection, sanitation and safety of places of employment, protection of women and children in industrial occupations, and extending employers' liability.

This record of the Republican party demonstrates that to it alone can labor confidently look for proper protection of its rights and enlargement of its opportunities.

The conduct of important state offices by Democratic incumbents has disgraced the state and demands rebuke at the polls.

Relying upon the intelligence and patriotism of the people, we appeal with confidence for support for the platform and candidates of this convention.

Naval Hero Is Commended.

Washington, Sept. 17.—The secretary of the navy has written a letter to Robert Conklin, mas er-at-arms at the United States naval training station at Newport, commending him for his fearless action in jumping overboard fully dressed and rescuing from drowning Woodward Phelps, a six-year-old boy, at Newport [illegible]

"will not be consummated by any juggernaut methods on the part of the political machine; it will be brought about, I believe, by the splendid exhibition of public opinion which is irresistible and before which this convention ought to wisely bow.

"Have you noticed another important development or non-development I should say, of the past ten days—that Brother Bryan, always quick to answer every remark that is made, who responds to the aspersions of Mr. Cannon before his speech is well in print, who answers every man right off the reel, Brother Bryan has so far failed to appreciate that speech of Charles E. Hughes?

"I believe in organization, have always been a member of my political organization. I will be candid enough to say that in the treatment of political organizations and of politicians some officials might at times be a bit the more tolerant. (Laughter). I don't subscribe to the theory that because a man is a politician he is a madman, because I immediately have to go to that category myself.

"There are many things in Brother Barnes' delightful epistle on 'Present Day Distresses in Republican Affairs' (applause and laughter), with which we all agree, but the only difference consists in this, mind you, the people who decide elections, who send us here, whose instructions we are in conscience and in honor bound to respect, the people of this state seem to like the methods of Charles E. Hughes.

"Men placed in high position, to whom the people look as leaders must study the development of public opinion and they must embrace that public opinion and endeavor to carry it into effect by legislative action. That is what made Roosevelt the idol of the people; that is what made Hughes the popular man among them."

PLANTS WITH EYES.

Professor Wager Finds Outer Skins of Leaves Are Lenses.

Having heard the other day President Francis Darwin's contention that plants think, the British Scientific association while in session at Dublin listened to a claim of their ability to see. The lecturer was Professor Harold W. T. Wager, who showed that the outer skins of many leaves are in reality lenses which might be compared with the corneal facets of the compound eyes of insects and are equally capable of forming clear images of surrounding objects.

This is especially so with leaves grown in the shade, and the lenses are so perfect and focus the light falling thereon so carefully that photographs may be taken thereby. Professor Wager has taken many such photographs and showed specimens to the audience. These included well defined reproductions of portraits of Darwin and Huxley, direct photographs of persons, landscapes, houses and even simple color photographs by the "Lumiere" process.

In every case the good use of these lenses to plants, the lecturer said, was to promote the more effective distribution of light upon which the green substance of plants depends for food. Rays focused on an interior leaf were carried to the plant's brain, enabling it to modify the movements of the leaves. He did not suggest that the plants can recognize things around them, but they see where to turn the leaves so as to get the maximum light, their movements being almost identical with those of animals.

When the stomach can't do it Kodol does it for it and in the meantime the stomach is getting stronger and able to take up its regular natural work again. Kodol digests all you eat. It makes the stomach sweet and it is pleasant to take. It is sold here by all druggists.

The Wrong Lady.

Some young idlers had been enjoying the fun of hailing passing shopgirls with rather doubtful compliments, and from some of the answers returned it was evident that not all of those addressed were taking things kindly. Presently one of the older boys, seeing it was going too far, spoke up. "Look a' here now, fellers," he added, "youse might think youse is wise guys an' all that, but just keep on an' the wrong lady'll come along, an' she'll break yer face, see?"—Argonaut.

CHAMBERLAIN'S COLIC, CHOLERA AND DIARRHOEA REMEDY

A few doses of this remedy will invariably cure an ordinary attack of diarrhoea.

It can always be depended upon, even in the more severe attacks of cramp colic and cholera morbus.

It is equally successful for summer diarrhoea and cholera infantum in children, and is the means of saving the lives of many children each year.

When reduced with water and sweetened it is pleasant to take.

A Traveling Man's Experience.

"I must tell you my experience on an East bound O. R. & N. R. R. train from Pendleton to LeGrande, Ore.," writes Sam A. Garber, a well known traveling man. "I was in the smoking department with some other traveling men when one of them went out into the coach and came back and said, 'There is a woman sick unto death in the car.' I at once got up and went out, found her very ill with cramp colic; her hands and arms were drawn up so you could not straighten them, and with a death-like look on her face. Two or three ladies were working with her and giving her whisky. I went to my suit case and got my bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy (I never travel without it), ran to the water tank, put a double dose of the medicine in the glass, poured some water into it and stirred it with a pencil; then I had quite a time to get the ladies to let me give it to her, but I succeeded. I could at once see the effect and I worked with her, rubbing her hands, and in twenty minutes I gave her another dose. By this time we were almost into Le Grande, where I was to leave the train. I gave the bottle to the husband to be used in case another dose should be needed, but by the time the train ran into Le Grande she was all right, and I received the thanks of every passenger in the car." Penguin Battles.

The penguin, a notable diver among sea birds, wins his mate by right of conquest. The male birds fight for the possession of the females. These curious birds have regular duel grounds, where relics of innumerable combats in the shape of feathers lie scattered about. In the center is the fighting arena, clear of all debris. The penguins' feathers and blubber form an efficient shield against their opponents' beaks, so the weapon used is the short flipper, the only wings the birds possess. The fight begins with the two combatants walking round each other waiting for an opportunity to grip. Once this is done the flippers come into play. The fighters shower blow after blow upon each other. There is no record as to how these fights end, but it is a safe supposition to say that they are seldom fatal. The force of the blow from a penguin's flipper is such that three or four of them will draw blood from the human hand.

Best Treatment for a Burn.

If for no other reason, Chamberlain's Salve should be kept in every household on account of its great value in the treatment of burns. It allays the pain almost instantly and unless the injury is a severe one, heals the parts without leaving a scar. This salve is also unequaled for chapped hands, sore nipples and diseases of the skin. Price, 25 cents. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Burma's Popular Sports.

A form of speculation very popular in Burma is bull racing. A certain native sportsman is the owner of one of these bulls, for which he has refused an offer of 10,000 rupees. It has won several races and is looked after and as carefully tended as a Derby favorite. The owner values it at 25,000 rupees, and, it is said, it brings him an annual income of from 12,000 to 15,000 rupees. It is carefully guarded by four men lest it may be got at and "doctored."

Burmans also patronize boxing eagerly, but the art can scarcely be practiced according to Queensberry rules, for we are told by a provincial reporter that he has observed that "even the best boxers strike out with their eyes tightly shut, and if they do hit each other it is more by chance than anything else."—Calcutta Statesman.

DeWitt's Carbolized Witch Hazel Salve is recommended as the best thing to use for piles. It is, of course, good for anything where a salve is needed. Beware of imitations. Sold by all druggists.

A Parthian Shot.

"Even though you are my brother's son I am obliged to discharge you. But I am sorry for your mother's sake."

"Oh, that's all right, sir. Mother says she don't see how I've put up with you as long as I have."—Judge.

ROOT POINTS TO PARTY RECORD.

Republicans Have Proved Ability to Govern.

APPLIES BUSINESS TEST.

Secretary of State Says Past History Justifies the Belief That the Party of Lincoln Can Be Trusted For the Future—Taft True Successor of Roosevelt—Candidates of Two Great Parties Compared—Facts Confute the Contentions of Mr. Bryan.

In his address before the New York Republican state convention Secretary of State Elihu Root, chairman, spoke as follows:

Gentlemen of the Convention—Just a decade has passed since we were assembled in this place engaged in the business of nominating Theodore Roosevelt for governor of New York. We are now to nominate a successor to Charles E. Hughes as governor, and we are to perform that duty according to our wisdom, our loyalty to party and to country, in such a way that the Empire State shall surely cast her electoral vote for the Republican candidate to succeed the same Theodore Roosevelt as president of the United States.

May we not discern in the performance of that duty an opportunity broader in its scope, more compelling in its obligation, than the mere attainment of local success? May we not do our work here in such a way and in such a spirit that throughout all the country Republicans shall be inspired with courage and hope, and every doubtful voter shall be convinced by proof that in this great representative state, the home of the candidate for vice president, Republicans are sincere in their professions, loyal to their principles, unselfish in their patriotism, truly representative of the body of the people and worthy of the great traditions of the party of Lincoln?

We have a record which forbids discouragement or doubt in the performance of our task. We can turn to the administrations, now drawing to a close, both in the state and in the nation and with confidence ask every American voter to say whether they have not met all the great fundamental requisites of good government, whether they do not justify the belief that it is best for the country to keep in power the party which is responsible for them and is entitled to the credit of them. Have not these administrations within the state and within the nation been honest? Have they not been capable? Have they not been efficient? Have they not set before all the people of America examples of pure, high minded and patriotic service in public office? Have they not raised the standard of public duty which the young men of America set for themselves? Have they not done us honor before the world?

ELIHU ROOT.

Party of Proved Efficiency.

These are the true tests by which to determine whether it is wise to continue a political party in power. It is such tests as these that we all apply in our private affairs when we select a business agent or a trustee or a lawyer or a teacher for our children. Common sense dictates their application in the selection of our agents and trustees for public business. All parties make promises before election agreeable to the ear and satisfying to the wishes of voters, but will they keep the promises? What is the evidence that they are made up of men who have the honest will, the firmness of character and the ability, without which such promises are worthless? Look to the record, see what parties have done in the past and learn there which should be trusted for the future. Look not to petty, refined details, but to the broad question whether, taken as a whole, their wisdom, efficiency and honesty in the past give promise of wisdom, efficiency and honesty in the future. The answer to this question will be worth more as a guide to the voters at the coming election than all the discussion over fine spun theories and sanguine conjectures that can be crowded into a presidential campaign.

Plainly the true successor to this great duty is Secretary Taft. His wide experience and long years of successful service under heavy responsibility as jurist, legislator, administrator, his intimate acquaintance with the public affairs of our country, internal and external, prove his wisdom, his skill and his capacity. The confidence and sympathy and intimate association with which he has stood by and aided President Roosevelt in every stage of the policies which by the common consent of both parties now lie before us to be continued and developed in practical effectiveness indicate him as the best possible man to continue those policies. The character that we know so well, with its courage, firmness and energy, its unselfishness, modesty, frankness and honor, assures us of his honest purpose and his eminent fitness for the greatest of offices.

Facts Confute Mr. Bryan.

The Democratic party announces as the issue of the campaign upon which they ask the voters of the country to take the powers of administration and legislation away from the party that has thus proved its competency and to embark upon the experiment of Democratic control—as "the overshadowing issue"—the question, "Shall the people rule?"

Mr. Bryan says there are three reasons why the people do not rule.

First, because there is corrupt use of money at elections. Does he mean to say that the two millions and a half of votes which constituted Mr. Roosevelt's majority were bought, that to such a frightful extent the American electorate is venal? Does he produce any evidence of such a charge? Not the slightest. Does he produce any facts tending to sustain even a suspicion of the justice of such a charge? None whatever. For one, I deny its truth, and I assert that American elections are fair and honest elections and that the government in Washington has been wielding the powers vested in it under the constitution by the clear and unquestionable will of the people.

The second reason why Mr. Bryan says the people do not rule is that we have not direct election of senators, and he holds the Republican party responsible for not having procured an amendment to the constitution of the United States to provide for that. There is no more necessity for an amendment to the constitution providing for the direct election of senators than there is for an amendment to the constitution providing for the direct election of president. If the people of any state wish any particular man to be chosen as senator, they have only to instruct their legislature, as the people of a considerable number of states make it their practice to do now, and no legislature will ever for a moment think of disobeying the instructions any more than presidential electors violate their obligations.

The third reason why the people do not rule, says Mr Bryan, is to be found in the rules of the house of representatives. The Denver convention declared in its platform that it "observed with amazement the popular branch of our federal government helpless to obtain either the consideration or enactment of measures desired by a majority of its members." Who makes the rules of the house of representatives? Why, a majority of its members, and a majority can change them as it will.

Revision of the Tariff.

There are two substantial proposals made by the Democratic party as to the policy which they will follow if they are brought into power.

One is that they will wipe out the protective tariff and substitute a tariff for revenue only. I shall not discuss that proposition, but it ought not to be forgotten. The eleven years which have passed since the Dingley tariff was enacted have brought about many changes in the conditions to which the tariff law is applied. Many of these changes have resulted from the very prosperity which the protection afforded by the tariff has produced. In the nature of things such changes must occur, and from time to time every tariff must be revised and adapted to the new conditions. As the period of revision, however, is always one of uncertainty and a consequent injury to business, revisions ought not to be made too often or upon slight grounds. The Republican party has not considered that sufficient grounds for thus disturbing business have existed heretofore. It considers that sufficient grounds do now exist, and it has pledged itself immediately after the 4th of March next to devote an extraordinary session of congress to making such a revision in accordance with true principles of protection.

The other proposition of the Democratic platform is to require all national banks to guarantee the payment of deposits by all other national banks. This is another patent financial nostrum, advertised to catch the fancy of the multitude, and it should be suppressed under the pure food law until it is correctly labeled "a measure to compel legitimate business to bear the risks of speculation." It might well be called a measure to destroy the national banking system, for who will wish to invest his money in a business where it is not merely subject to the risks assumed by the men whom he and his associates select to manage it, but is subject also to be called upon for the payment of an unlimited amount of debts of an indinfite number of persons over whom and whose obligations he and his associates have no control whatever?

Railroad Regulation.

On the 30th of August, 1906, Mr. Bryan announced upon his return from Europe, as the result of deliberate reflection, that government ownership of railroads was the cure all demanded by the public interest. "I have reached the conclusion," he declared, "that there will be no permanent relief on the railroad question from the discrimination between individuals and between places and from extortionate rates until the railroads are the property of the government and are operated by the government in the interests of the people." That declaration he has repeated many times in substance.

The Republican party believes in the regulation of railroads. It believes that their managers ought to be made and can be made to obey the law. It believes that by an enforcement of the law, not spasmodic and sensational, but steady, firm and persistent, excessive and discriminating rates can be stopped, and it is now and has been for a considerable period engaged in such enforcement with marked efficiency and success.

The chief importance of this subject, however, rests in the light it throws upon the candidate's qualification for the presidential office. It is an essential characteristic of our system of government that it aims to afford individual opportunity for enterprise rather than to exercise paternal control. Americans have all felt from the earliest times that undue extension of governmental power threatened liberty and tended to dull the initiative which has made us great as a nation. It has been only upon the most long continued consideration and with many doubts that we have yielded step by step to the enlargements of governmental regulation made necessary by the increasing complications of modern life and business. The apostle of the doctrine that the functions of government should be confined within the narrowest possible limits was Thomas Jefferson, whose disciple Mr. Bryan today professes to be. Under his inspiration the true Democratic party continually resisted the extension of governmental functions. Yet Mr. Bryan, while inscribing the name of Thomas Jefferson upon his standard, seriously proposes that the federal government shall not merely regulate the operation of railroads which are engaged in interstate commerce, but shall acquire and own and operate itself all the great railroads of the country. That is not reform; it is revolution. It is reversion to the ideas of paternal government.

Now, Mr. Bryan proposes that under supervision of the national government everybody shall provide for the payment of everybody else's debts by his bank deposit guaranty scheme.

Is it prudent to place in his hands the great power of the presidency, and, above all, is it wise to give to him rather than to Mr. Taft, the experienced judge, the filling of the four vacancies in the supreme court of the United States which may be expected during the next administration?

What is furnished by the record of the Democratic party at large to show that it is competent to maintain the prosperity we have and execute the promises of reform it tenders. No proof whatever of that is offered. All the evidence we have is the other way. The majority of us have not yet forgotten the second administration of Grover Cleveland, which ended only on the 4th of March, 1897. The Democracy then had its opportunity to show the world what it could do with government, for it possessed the executive office, a majority of the senate and a majority of the house. Its opportunity to exercise that control for the public benefit was wasted. Discord and confusion reigned throughout the entire four years.

Are the people of the United States ready to repeat that experience of Democratic government?

THE PARTY OF YOUTH

Why Young Men Vote the Republican Ticket.

IT STANDS FOR PROGRESS.

New Voters Proud to Ally Themselves With the Party of Lincoln—Its Past Performances Presage a Still More Glorious Future.

It is not without significance that young men who have just attained their majority are found, as a rule, voting the Republican ticket. The reason is plain. Those young men look on the Republican party as the party of hope, the party of promise and of performance, the party for whose candidates they will be proud to say in later years that they cast their first ballot, the party whose past needs no apology, no balm of oblivion for blunders and for crimes, no record of slavery, rebellion and attempted repudiation, each stamped out in its turn by American freemen under Republican leadership.

The Republican party is eminently the party of youth. With Republicans the memory of the glorious past is but an incentive to make the future still more glorious. To the Democracy is left the congenial occupation of floundering in the marsh of bygone Democratic vagaries, lured on by some new and delusive will-o'-the-wisp to the quagmire of quadrennial failure.

The youthful voter finds no attraction in such company. He prefers to march forward on firm ground, with the party of Lincoln, of Grant, McKinley and Roosevelt, of Taft and Sherman and Hughes—of nearly every great American, living and dead, whose career has added luster to the closing half of the old century and the beginning of the new. The young man prefers the Republican party because it holds out a prospect for his own advancement, because in building up the nation as a whole it offers fresh opportunities to the individual, because under Republican administration there is a fair field for every one, and every citizen is protected in the enjoyment of that which he has rightfully acquired.

The new voter who takes his place in the Republican ranks and casts his ballot for Taft and Sherman will have the satisfaction not only of sharing in the Republican victory, but also of knowing that he has helped to assure prosperity for the country at large and an immeasurably better chance in life for himself and those in whom he is interested than if the harpies of Bryanism had been permitted to befoul the feast.

LABOR TURNS TO TAFT.

Toilers Scent Danger in the Fallacies of Mr. Bryan.

Convincing evidence was furnished by the conference at Cincinnati last week by Judge Taft with Oscar Straus, secretary of commerce and labor, and T. V. Powderly, formerly general master workman of the Knights of Labor, that the attitude of labor is growing each day more friendly to Taft. The campaign of education which the Republicans have been carrying on has been effective, and the laboring man, so Mr. Powderly told the candidate, is beginning to appreciate the fact that a restoration of business confidence through the election of Mr. Taft means more work and prosperous times for him.

Secretary Straus announces his intention to go out on the stump for the specific purpose of exposing some of the Bryan fallacies in regard to labor. Said Mr. Straus: "The most dangerous of these fallacies is presented in Bryan's slogan, 'Shall the people rule?' and well may he ask it, for every one of his leading doctrines is a denial of that rule."

Mr. Straus classes Mr. Bryan's government guarantee of bank deposits as next in point of danger to his plan for the government ownership of railroads. Mr. Straus believes this guarantee proposition is as great menace as the old 16 to 1 hobby. "To guarantee deposits," said Secretary Straus, "is to guarantee the loans of the banks, for, as a matter of fact, a large part of the bank's deposits is made up of credits extended by the bank to borrowers and by them deposited or placed on the books of the banks as deposits."

Mr. Powderly said among other things after his talk with Taft: "Labor never was better organized, better paid, more independent or more respected than it is today. Never was it more secure in its share of the outcome of the commodity or the good will and confidence of employers. All this is due to the effort of nonpartisan, well officered unions. What labor organizations now enjoy, and they enjoy more than they ever enjoyed in the civilized world before, came as the result of intelligent, co-operative effort exerted in a nonpartisan way through their unions.

"Of course there are many men out of employment as the result of the recent depression, but to my knowledge men are returning to their old occupations all over the country and at their old rates of pay. I recall the awful panic of 1873 and that of 1893, and in neither case did men go back to work at their old wages. The case is different now, and to my mind it would be suicidal for labor to vote in such a way as to imperil the return of full prosperity, so rapidly manifesting itself."

The issue is just this: Taft and prosperity or Bryan and paralysis.

A Bold Step.

To overcome the well-grounded and reasonable objections of the more intelligent to the use of secret, medicinal compounds, Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., some time ago, decided to make a bold departure from the usual course pursued by the makers of put-up medicines for domestic use, and so has published broadcast and openly to the whole world, a full and complete list of all the ingredients entering into the composition of his widely celebrated medicines. Thus he has taken his numerous patrons and patients into his full confidence. Thus too he has removed his medicines from among secret nostrums of doubtful merits, and made them Remedies of Known Composition.

By this bold step Dr. Pierce has shown that his formulas are of such excellence that he is not afraid to subject them to the fullest scrutiny.

Not only does the wrapper of every bottle of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the famous medicine for weak stomach, torpid liver or biliousness and all catarrhal diseases wherever located, have printed upon it, in plain English, a full and complete list of all the ingredients composing it, but a small book has been compiled from numerous standard medical works, of all the different schools of practice, containing very numerous extracts from the writings of leading practitioners of medicine, endorsing in the strongest possible terms, each and every ingredient contained in Dr. Pierce's medicines. One of these little books will be mailed free to any one sending address on postal card or by letter, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., and requesting the same. From this little book it will be learned that Dr. Pierce's medicines contain no alcohol, narcotics, mineral agents or other poisonous or injurious agents and that they are made from native, medicinal roots of great value; also that some of the most valuable ingredients contained in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for weak, nervous, over-worked, "run-down," barren and debilitated women, were employed, long years ago, by the Indians for similar ailments affecting their squaws. In fact, one of the most valuable medicinal plants entering into the composition of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was known to the Indians as "Squaw-Weed." Our knowledge of the uses of not a few of our most valuable native, medicinal plants was gained from the Indians.

As made up by improved and exact processes, the "Favorite Prescription" is a most efficient remedy for regulating all the womanly functions, correcting displacements, as prolapsus, anteversion and retroversion, overcoming painful periods, toning up the nerves and bringing about a perfect state of health. Sold by all dealers in medicines.

All the Gold IN GEORGIA Could not Buy-

Reding, Ga. August 27, 1906.
Messrs. E. C. DeWitt & Co.,
Chicago, Ills.

Gentlemen:—

In 1897 I had a disease of the stomach and bowels. Some physicians told me it was Dyspepsia, some Consumption of the Lungs, others said consumption of the Bowels. One physician said I would not live until Spring, and for four long years I existed on a little boiled milk, soda biscuits, doctors' prescriptions and Dyspepsia remedies that flooded the market. I could not digest anything I ate, and in the Spring 1902 I picked up one of your Almanacs as a poor emaciated Dyspeptic, wrote will grasp at anything, and that Almanac happened to be my life saver. I bought a fifty cent bottle of KODOL DYSPEPSIA CURE and the benefit I received from that bottle ALL THE GOLD IN GEORGIA COULD NOT BUY. I kept on taking it and in two months I went back to my work, as a machinist, and in three months I was well and hearty. I still use a little occasionally as I find it a fine blood purifier and a good tonic.

May you live long and prosper.

Yours very truly,
C. N. CORNELL.

MRS. HILLER SECURES DIVORCE.

The Herald of Sunday says: Mrs. Julia Graff Hiller, formerly of this city, has been granted a divorce from Maurice R. Hiller at Sioux Falls, S. D., where she has been living for nearly a year past. Sensational charges as to cruelty were made in the complaint, according to a special dispatch received last night by The Herald.

An action is now pending in Supreme Court here in which Maurice Hiller asks $25,000 damages of Warren C. Truesdell, a New York Central baggageman, for the alienation of his wife's affections. In the complaint which was served for the plaintiff last April by Attorney William M. Peckham it was stated that Mr. and Mrs. Hiller were married in Syracuse ten years ago and that they lived happily together up to the fall of 1906, when Mrs. Hiller made the acquaintance of Truesdell, who, it is further alleged, won her affections and made the companionship of her husband distasteful to her to such an extent that she voluntarily separated herself from him in June, 1907, since which time they have not lived together. In consideration of his injured feelings and his broken home, therefore, the plaintiff asks damages to the amount of $25,000.

When the papers in the action were served Mr. Hiller said that, although he had no certain knowledge of his wife's whereabouts, he believed that she had gone to South Dakota for the purpose of obtaining a divorce from him and he understood that her marriage to the defendant in his damage suit would take place as soon as the decree was granted. Mr. Truesdell has been boarding at the home of Mrs. Catherine Graff, Mrs. Hiller's mother, at No. 807 Townsend street.

It was stated by friends of Mrs. Hiller that she was legally separated from her husband before she ever met Mr. Truesdell and that Hiller by his cruel treatment has forfeited all claim to her affections. It was not denied that a marriage between Truesdell and Mrs. Hiller might follow her divorce.

Mr. Hiller formerly kept a hardware store in this city and lived at No. 410 Merriman Avenue with his wife and little daughter. Mrs. Hiller was a striking woman and used to attract much attention by her style and fine gowns. After his wife left home Mr. Hiller removed to Fulton with his child, who is now about 9 years old.

Playing to the Cook.

Mr. Subberton (yelling to kitchen)—Sawdust and milk crust! Adam and Eve on a raft and wreck 'em! On the cantaloupe! Draw one! Make it three all round.

Mr. Townley—Great—e-e-r, how—pardon me, old chap, but what's it all about?

Mr. Subberton—Sh! We've got a former restaurant cook—a peach—and we have to order that way to keep her on the job!—Puck.

SHEATH TROUSERS NOW.

If You Are Modest You May Have Plaits Put In Them.

The fall and winter seasons are likely to see a good many innovations in dress for men if the designs of tailors haberdashers and hatters in New York are carried out. For one thing, there is going to be a lot of color. But perhaps the most striking novelty of all is the sheath trousers. In these the leg seams on the outside instead of running down to the bottom will stop at the knee and be laced from that point on. For those who are of more retiring natures the seam is not open to expose the calf of the leg, but is formed into a plait.

Then there are the new pajamas with mother-of-pearl buttons and bedding with any delicate shade of baby ribbon, pink being preferred by the ultra exclusive ones.

Green—full rich hunter's green—will lead in the colors of garments, but it may be relieved with stripes. To go with the green suit one must have a green hat. Soft hats, preferably made of plush, are being carried by leading hatters. They are known as yodels (the hats, not the hatters) and evidently are of Swiss origin.

Following close in the wake of the yodel hat is the Marathon tie, whose chief point of excellence seems to be that its colors are fast. But the Marathon tie is among the "also ran" when it comes to the automobile scarf. This is in gold, purple and green diagonal stripes. The man who wears one must run the risk of being arrested for speeding.

But with it all the tailors preach "harmony." You get it, too, in spats. There is a shirt that's a veritable rhapsody in color. Fortunately the demand for it seems to come from few as yet. The body of the garment is of cretonne, with pink roses sprinkled about, offset by a modest, shrinking violet or two. The bosom and cuffs are of green and white stripes alternating.

In evening dress the conventional black is being deserted slowly for the dark blue or gray, many of which latter colors will be worn this fall. Socks must be of plain shades, mostly brown, green or purple. Sunset at sea and satsuma effects are tabooed.

NIGHT RIDER REGULATIONS.

Kentucky Town's Novel Code For Use In Case of Attack.

Following are the regulations for public safety recently passed by the city council at Murray, Ky., the hotbed of the Night Rider district:

First.—Fire signal: Blowing of whistles and ringing of bells, together with loud calls from those who are awake.

Second.—All those who are able to fight fire on hearing the above signals will come promptly to the fire.

Third.—If the firing of guns is heard hereafter, all persons will stay in their houses, as this will mean that a fight is on between the state guards and the Night Riders.

Fourth.—In case of such an invasion the citizen can shoot from his home if he is positive his mark is a Night Rider and not a citizen or member of the state guards.

Fifth.—These regulations are made necessary for the reason that there is grave danger of some one being killed when promiscuous shooting is allowed.

Sixth.—This being so, from this on those who shoot to give signal will be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and will be dealt with accordingly.

Seventh.—Any citizen can ring any bell or blow any whistle to arouse the people, but not fire any gun to give an alarm.

Eighth.—In view of recent fires it has become necessary to enforce the ordinance now in existence requiring all persons found on the streets after 11 o'clock to give an account of themselves to those on guard.

Ninth.—Keep in mind that these regulations are for the good of the public, so that we may understand each other and make less the danger to life and property.

THE "KISS ME" COAT.

Latest Thing in Garments For Men Buttons Left Handed.

Kiss Me—that is the name of the latest creation in coats to be worn this season.

It has the Prince Chap and Merry Widow variety beaten a league, and its designer, a tailor of Fifth avenue, New York, at the tailors' convention in New York the other day announced that it was intended especially for bridegrooms.

The new coat is intended to give a particularly effeminate appearance. It buttons left handed, like a woman's jacket, is tight fitting, supplied with an extra pocket for the groom to carry his roll in and fitted with a sort of folding effect in front that gives its wearer the correct feminine figure, flat hips and pouter pigeon front.

Pennant Dope.

Please pardon me; I'm busy quite.
I know it isn't just polite
Or etiquette to say you nay
And tell you to be on your way.
But with the world I'm not at peace.
And business worries now must cease,
For with a weighty job I cope;
I'm figuring the pennant dope.

All day I sit and deeply toil;
At night I burn the midnight oil.
I'm cross and peevish when I rise—
These days I'm seldom otherwise.
A mass of figures I assail
Each morn, but they do not avail
Me anything. Yet still I hope
To figure out the pennant dope.

The schedule soon will be played out.
And then I haven't any doubt
But what Dame Nature will attest
The fact I need a lengthy rest;
Until that time excuse me, pray,
And do not fritter time away.
Far from the madding throng I'll lope
And figure out the pennant dope.

Grand and Trial Jurors.

Grand and Trial Jurors were drawn at the County Clerks office last week to serve at the October Term of Supreme Court to be held in Oswego, commencing Monday, Oct. 5. Justice Watson M. Rogers will preside and the term will undoubtedly be a long one.

There will be a large amount of work for the Grand Jury to do, according to District Attorney Baker, as it will probably be the last Grand Jury before which he will appear as District Attorney and he is anxious to clear up all pending matters prior to turning the office over to his successor.

The jurors drawn from this section: Grand Jurors: Fulton—David Phillips; Constantia—Bernard Crandell, Orla Harrington, Chas Hess; Hastings—Alfred Todo, H. A. Snow; Schroeppel—Clinton D. Ashe.

Trial Jurors: Fulton—Morris Conley, John Frawley, Ed. Dingman, S. Shaff, E. H. Morgan, Levi Lewis; Mexico—Herbert Thomas; Hannibal—Ed. Wheeler, William Moyer; New Haven— Lewis P. Jerrett; Constantia—Harry Meyers, Thad Palmer, Levi Jennings; Schroeppel—Sylvester Hornings; Palermo—Fred Washer.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY NOMINEES.

The Oswego Palladium on Saturday night, painted a halo around the heads of all Democratic county nominees, placed wings upon their shoulders and harps within their hands, then cordially invited the Republicans of the county to come over into the Democratic ranks and elect the ticket. It would appear from the Pall's article that all the good, the true and the beautiful men in the county had been selected by the Democrats to fill the county offices.

It is a pity to rudely break in upon the rapturous dream in which the Pall is indulging and to shatter its hopes of success for the ticket at the polls this Fall, by assuring it that the Republican ticket is composed of men who measure well up with the standard of manhood, honor and ability vouchsafed the Democratic nominees by that organ.

W. B. Baker will make as dignified a county judge as L. C. Rowe and he will administer the duties of that office with fairness and ability. There is not the slightest incident in Mr. Baker's career that would unfit him for the suffrage of respectable, law-abiding Republicans. He is entitled to and worthy of their votes.

Charles W. Taft, Republican nominee for Sheriff, won the nomination in convention after a contest in which every inch of the ground had been canvassed by himself and seven or eight other candidates. Upon the first ballot he had a plurality and upon the final ballot a majority of the votes. When the ballots are counted in November history in his case will repeat itself. Mr. Taft does not need the salary of the office but he has an ambition to show the county how very successfully he can conduct the office. His opponent, Mr. Gray, may be all that the Pall attributes to him, but Mr. Taft is all this and more.

Frank L. Smith, Republican nominee for Member of Assembly, had no opposition in the caucuses or in the convention. He announced his candidacy and the announcement seemed to strike a popular cord so that no one ventured to run in opposition to him. Certainly Mr. Smith is entitled to the vote of every Republican in the county and will undoubtedly receive it. His opponent, John O'Brien, is a native of his home town and the contest gives promise of being very spirited in Phoenix on that account, as they are both popular with their townspeople.

There is a good story told of a Republican Richland resident who had some personal feeling against Freelon J. Davis, Republican nominee for District Attorney—a sort of a neighborhood feud as it were. In conversation with a friend last week he said that he would never vote for Mr. Davis. Then he inquired who the Democrats had nominated. When told A. S. Barker of Orwell, he earnestly ejaculated, "Oh!, I'll have to vote for Davis then," and that's the way voters feel all over the county. Mr. Davis is so far better fitted for the office to which he aspires that there is no reason why any man, at least any Republican, should vote against him and for his opponent.

C. A. Stone, Republican nominee for county superintendent of the poor, is full capable of caring for that important office, important from a humane and financial standpoint—in a manner to meet with the approval of the taxpayers and the endorsement of the friends of the unfortunates who may find a home under his care. His opponent, Charles Lockwood, can do no more, therefore the logic in urging Republicans to vote against Mr. Stone is not apparent.

George M. Fanning, Republican nominee for special county judge, will ably fill that position and has had the necessary legal experience in the metropolis. His opponent, Joseph Gill, is best known in his home ward in Oswego as his experience has been very restricted. Anyway, Mr. Fanning was the unanimous choice of Republicans and by them should be supported.

The Pall announces finally that the triumph of the Democratic ticket this Fall will be a triumph for Republicans. How it is going to find the square root of that argument remains to be seen. We do not blame the Democratic organ for patting itself upon the back because its party nominated men who might have been worse. It was a surprise undoubtedly to the Pall, past political history in its party being clearly in mind.

However, for ability and all around fitness the Republican ticket has the Pall's ticket stopped every way.

The following notice of ..., Wilson & Son of Constable, Attorney H. J. Wilson, formerly of this city, being the son mentioned in the firm name. Mr. Wilson resigned his partnership in the law firm of Piper, Rice & Wilson, to assist his father in his many interests in the northern town. The Fair mentioned was the Franklin County Fair.

An exhibit which attracted much attention was the showing of fine, pure bred and grade Holstein Friesian cattle, made by R. C. Wilson & Son, Constable, N. Y. This handsome aggregation of cattle was located just north of the air ship on the west side of the cattle sheds. To Wilson & Son were awarded first prize on matured bull, which went to Manor De-Kol of Ormstown, the head of the herd; also first and second prize for best pure bred cow; first for best three two-year-old grade heifers, first and second for two yearling grade heifers, second for best grade cow, which prize was won in competition with 13, and first on best six cows from any one dairy. For the last mentioned prize Wilson & Son had a close competitor in the herd of George Rockwood of Bombay. Between Wilson and Son's exhibit and Rockwood's the judge had difficulty in deciding, and the award was made only after a careful going over, which created a spirited interest among cattlemen and kept the exhibitors for a considerable time in suspense. Wilson & Son also exhibited some fine Chershire and Chester White swine on which they received many premiums. They are proprietors of the St. Lawrence Valley Farms at Constable and breeders of the finest Holstein-Friesian cattle and Chester White and Chershire swine, and are also general merchants. Their exhibit was probably one of the finest to be found in the county. They received $70 in premiums on their cattle and $60 on their swine—making a grand total of $130.

The funeral services were held from the late home on Sunday afternoon and interment was made in Mt. Adnah.

The death of Mrs. Electa Snow, aged 91, occurred at her home in Utica street on Friday. Republican County Committee Meets.

The Republican County Committee met at the Hotel Redstone, Oswego, on Tuesday, and the reports the committeemen brought from the various towns augur well for an old time Republican majority for the ticket in November.

Chairman Sweetland, after listening to the reports, expressed himself as well pleased with the outlook and stated that from now on a vigorous campaign will be waged. Several speakers of prominence will address assemblages in different sections of the county, and it is expected that Governor Hughes will visit Oswego prior to election day.

Millinery Exhibit.

S. A. Scanlan of Syracuse will be at the Hotel Lewis, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 1, 2, 3, with a large and attractive display of patterns hats for Fall and Winter. AN INTERESTING HISTORY OF THAT NOTED SPOT ON OUR RIVER.

The following is an account of the battle between the English, under Colonel Bradstreet, and the French and Indians at Battle Island, near the Van Buren home, on July 3rd, 1756, and copied from the New York Mercury, July 19th, 1756, and recopied from the documentary history of the States, in Philadelphia by Dr. C. E. Belcher of Portage, Pennsylvania, and sent to Volkert VanBuren, the third, to Battle Island, August 26th, 1908. Dr. Belcher is a relative of the VanBuren family and spent two weeks with them last month, and became interested in the environments and beautiful scenery along the Oswego River in this section, as he was obtaining an option or lease of several hundred acres of land in this vicinity for the purpose of locating gas wells. Otto Scholz of this city has kindly furnished me a copy of Mr. VanBuren's account of the battle from Dr. Belcher, for publication.

On the third of July, 1756, about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Colonel Bradstreet, with about 300 battoemen with him in their battoes, were attacked 9 miles up the river from Oswego by about seven hundred of the enemy, of which two hundred were French regulars, the rest being Canadians and Indians from the opposite side of the river. Colonel Bradstreet, who at that time was near the front of his party, proceeded with six men to a small island (Battle Island) near the enemy, and ordered a few more to follow him there to keep the enemy from fording the river until the rest of his men could land on the south side of it. He had no sooner landed when he was attacked by twenty of the enemy, whom his party beat back, and kept possession of the island and were joined by six more battoemen. This gave the battoemen time to rally and collect themselves on the opposite shore. He was soon attacked by forty Frenchmen, whom he also compelled to give way. He was soon reinforced by six more men, and a party of about seventy of the enemy then fell upon him and by running in cover fires wounded twelve of his men, but after some time the French were forced to retire the third time. A large body of French and Indians, then being observed to advance upon the north side of the river about two miles higher, Colonel Bradstreet imagined they intended to ford the river and surround him. On this supposition he evacuated the island and, with two hundred and fifty men marched up the south side of the river to prevent it, but the enemy had not only forded it, but had taken possession of a pine swamp. Dr. Fairkland, who was returning from Oswego in company with Colonel Bradstreet, had now gathered together two hundred battoemen with design to reinforce him, but Colonel Bradstreet sent an order for him to keep his post, to cover the battoes which were behind, and directed that Captain Butler should command the farthest division of battoes down the river, and post them in the most proper place upon the same duty. When Colonel Bradstreet came to the swamp, an engagement in the Indian manner took place which lasted about an hour. Colonel Bradstreet, then awaiting his men, entered the swamp and forced the enemy out of it into the river, where many of them were slain. Another party of French and Indians were at that time attempting to ford the river when Colonel Bradstreet came up with them and after he fell in with them the whole body was routed. Soon after this action a company of grenadiers belonging to Colonel Slingley's Regiment, which was on the march from Onondaga to Oswego, joined the battoemen and the next morning two hundred men came to them from the garrison. Colonel Bradstreet now prepared to go in quest of the main body of the French, but was prevented by extensive rain. Colonel Bradstreet lost in those actions about twenty men, but the loss of the enemy was uncertain but the general opinion was that one hundred of the enemy were killed. Eighty firelocks were found and taken to Schenectady. Seventy-four dead were found by a party who went out from the Fort to patrol the woods and many were lost in the river. Some days later, some traders were passing by the place of action and were halted by 20 of the French and Indians from the shore, who being without provisions and unable to find the main body of the French and Indians, were strolling about the woods upon the banks of the river in great distress and begged to be taken up and carried to Oswego. The traders being in numbers about one-half a dozen were fearful of taking more than one in and him they delivered to the garrison.

"Battle Island is in the center of the river and is rather narrow and quite long, containing perhaps three and one half acres. With the woods at that time on both sides of the river with the island and the river being shallow and easily forded, it was quite a strong natural strategic position.

Years ago a saddle, stirrup and other relics were found on the island. Starch Factory Island, containing about an acre and owned by Miss Flora Chrysler of this city, is just above toward the dam. In the fifties Willis Nelson built a starch factory on this island and in excavating for the foundation, a large skull of an Indian with a bullet hole in the front, part was found, which was hollow and when moved the bullet would rattle inside.

The history of Oswego county does not mention this battle but states that the French claimed all the territory between Oswego and Albany and that at the beginning of the old French War of 1753 Fort Ontario was erected on the east bank of the river and another fort was built upon the summit of the west ridge in 1755. In the summer of 1756 when the above battle was fought, 3,000 French under Montcalm, with 9 heavy cannon or artillery consisting of 30 guns of large caliber, crossed the lake from Fort Frontenac (now Kingston) and appeared before the Forts at Oswego which were invested August 14th, and after three days of hard fighting they were reduced on the 14th. The victors demolished the forts, burned the English vessels and retired. Colonel Mercer, the English commander, was killed by a cannon shot on the third day of the seige.

In 1758 Colonel Bradstreet with 3,350 men from Oswego, crossed the lake and reduced Fort Frontenac. After destroying the fortifications and securing the military stores and vessels, he returned to Oswego and rebuilt the Forts there. Fort Ontario was greatly enlarged and built in the most substantial manner.

The portion of the country lying near the mouth of the Oswego river was discovered by the French Jesuits, in 1654, who established missions here for the conversion of the Iroquois. The English came in and tried to infringe upon the rights of the French and they remonstrated. The other fort that was built in Oswego stood at the junction of West Sixth and Van Buren streets.

A battoe is supposed to be a flat boat, propelled by pushing with long poles. The word doesn't seem to occur in Webster's dictionary. I think Batteau is the correct word. In this account of the battle the sides of the river are mentioned as the north and south sides, which are the east and west sides.

Perhaps where the French fell back up the river two miles above Battle Island and made a stand in a pine swamp was along Black Creek. Mr. Nelson's starch factory eventually burned down on the Chrysler Island.

"Parceling Out de People."

Fishing, two boys strung their big catch on the same string. Passing a graveyard they entered the gate to divide the catch, dropping two fish just as they went inside the cemetery.

Passing, an aged negro behind the two boys: "I'll take this one, you that one I this one, you that one; I this one, you that one," etc.

The negro listened in dismay and ran away as rapidly as his old legs could carry him. He met his negro minister, who called:

"Deacon, why you run in such terror?"

"Declare, parson, I been down yonder by de graveyard and over de fence heard de devil and de Lord parceling out de people atween 'em."

The parson laughed at the old man's fright and made him go back with him to the graveyard to convince him of his error.

The boys were still dividing—"You take that, I take this," etc. Finally one boy asked, "What you going to do with them two at the gate?"

This was more than parson or deacon could stand, and both ran pellmell neither wishing to take any further chances, no matter what was going on just over the fence.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

Not on the Programme.

Two stout old Germans were enjoying their pipes and placidly listening to the strains of the summer garden orchestra. One of them in tipping his chair back stepped on a parlor match, which exploded with a bang.

"Dot vas not on the programme," he said, turning to his companion.

"Vat vas not?"

"Vy, dot match."

"Vat match?"

"De match I valked on."

"Vell, I didn't see no match. Vat aboud it?"

"Vy, I walked on a match, and it went bang, and I said it was not on the programme."

The other picked up his programme and read it through very carefully. "I don't see it on the programme," he said.

"Vell, I said it was not on the programme, didn't I?"

"Vell, vat has it got to do mit the programme anyway? Egsplain yourself."—Ladies' Home Journal.

When you have a cold you may be sure that it has been caused indirectly by constipation and consequently you must first of all take something to move the bowels. This is what has made Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup so successful and so generally demanded. It does not constipate like most of the old-fashioned cough cures, but on the other hand it gently moves the bowels and at the same time heals irritation and allays inflammation of the throat. An Inspired Sculptress.

As a mere girl Miss Vinnie Ream, the sculptress, visited Rome, her soul filled with enthusiasm for music and art. On one occasion she was taken to one of Liszt's concerts and was fortunate enough to obtain a seat near enough to have touched him with her hand. As the great master played she listened rapturously to the wonderful music, entranced and forgetful of everything save the glorious sounds produced by his inspired touch.

At a pause Liszt turned and looked at her, and quietly, without a word, he lednel and ogertald one hand over hers and gently pressed it in silent recognition of the appreciation which glowed in her large black eyes and filled her whole being. At the close of the concert he turned to her and said, "My child, we need no introduction."

At her earnest request that he would sit for her he readily consented, and she modeled the bust from life, putting in the work the true artist's inspiration and power, which alone can give to it the touch of strength and life.—Baltimore Sun.

Not Very Funny.

"I did my best to be entertaining," said the young man in a voice of sorrow.

"Did you succeed?"

"I'm afraid not. I recited Hamlet's soliloquy. She looked at me reproachfully for several seconds and then exclaimed, 'I don't think that's very funny!'"—London Telegraph.

His Conscience.

"He's forever prating about what his conscience tells him. What does his conscience tell him, anyway?"

"Apparently it usually tells him what awful sinners his neighbors are."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Where She Gets Her Ideas.

She—I wonder if you are just the kind of man I want. He—What kind of man do you want? She—Why, one that will help me to get on. He—Don't try. What's the price of the Woolworth building?—Louis Post-Dispatch.

Too Well Imitated.

It is no easy matter for a violin maker to rival the famous Stradivarius instruments, but this an American maker did, and did so effectively that experts pronounced his violin a genuine Stradivarius.

The successful man was the late George Gemunder, a famous violin maker of New York. His remarkable ability as a preparer of violins was known to many a distinguished player such as Ole Bull, Remenyi and Wilhelmj. But he made, so runs the story, his greatest success at the Paris exposition of Eiffel tower fame. To that exhibition he sent an imitation Stradivarius and to test its merits had it placed on exhibition as the genuine article.

A committee of experts carefully examined the instrument and pronounced it a Stradivarius. So far Mr. Gemunder's triumph was complete. But now came a difficulty. When he claimed that it was not an old violin, but a new one made by himself, the committee would not believe him. They declared he never made the instrument and pronounced him an impostor. He has done his work too well.

Ice and Mice.

For horses suffering from inflammation of the lungs an old prescription was a mixture of snuff and powder in milk. This has even been applied to human beings. In "Idlehurst" mention is made of sparrow shot, five or six to the dose, to be taken twice a day, as a remedy for "brown kilters," which is believed by the English farm laborers to be caused by the "tigots" (their term for lungs) rising up the windpipe. The shot is supposed to weight them down in their rightful place. Sussex, England, is the scene of "Idlehurst." It was a Sussex woman who was ordered by the doctor to put some ice in a bag and bind it on the temples of her sick boy. Inquiries after his patient the next day the physician received the reply, "Mrs. Toomer's better, but the mice are dead."

"Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

The Elder Robert Fulton.

Robert Fulton was born at Little Britain, Lancaster county, Pa., Nov. 14, 1765. His biographers have called him "a self made man" and have made but brief reference to his parentage. It is noteworthy that his father, the senior Robert Fulton, in a failure to leave financial patrimony to his children has not been accorded the mention of other achievements, not slight in those primitive days. His ancestors crossed from Scotland to Ireland prior to the time of Cromwell. From Kilkenny, Ireland, the Fulton family came to America before the year 1735. The senior Robert Fulton was among the prominent men of Lancaster, his name having been on record upon all the town organizations which existed at that period. He was a founder of the Presbyterian church, the secretary of the Union Fire company and a charter member of the Juliana library of Lancaster, the third library established in the American colonies.—Century.

Measures Up to Requirements.

Mr. Sherman says much in little space in his speech formally accepting the Republican nomination for vice president and says it admirably. The New Yorker on the Republican national ticket measures up to the requirements of his post and shows the qualities of an experienced and responsible public man in his acceptance address.—New York Mail.

REASON FOR CONVERSION.

Why the Baltimore Sun Decided to Support Taft.

[From the Baltimore Sun, Dem.]

It is our deliberate judgment that for the next four years the material interests of the people of this country would be safer with Mr. Taft at the head of the national government than with Mr. Bryan. We further believe that, while lawbreakers would be brought to account by Mr. Taft with as little fear or favor as Mr. Bryan could display, the methods employed by Mr. Taft would not curtail the workingman's opportunities for employment by disturbing the business of law abiding men and corporations as has been witnessed in the last few years.

Mr. Taft's experience in important administrative posts, his judicial temperament, his patience and thoroughness in investigation, justify the belief that as president he would execute the law faithfully and well, but not spectacularly. And, while this type of man ought to be in the White House all the time, he seems to be especially needed now, when the country is emerging from an industrial and financial depression which brought distress and suffering into many homes.

> No weather vane for president. Our chief magistrate should have settled views, sound principles and honest methods.

Imagine It!

In commenting on the appeal made by Mr. Bryan to the farmers asking them to contribute to his campaign fund and to send their contributions to his personal newspaper office the New York Sun caustically asks its readers to imagine if they can "James Buchanan or Stephen A. Douglas or John C. Breckinridge or General McClellan or Horatio Seymour or General Hancock or any other Democratic candidate for the presidency save and except William Jennings Bryan demanding money from the farmers of the United States in order to put him in the White House?"

His Mistake.

"What happened to him?"

"Oh, he was lauded to the skies, and, thinking it would last forever, he did not take his parachute along."—Puck.

SPOON VICTUALS.

A certain well-known Bostonian has been married long enough to have acquired the average man's cynical attitude in respect to the written expressions of devotion indulged in before marriage.

One day the Hubbite was going over with his wife a mass of useless papers that had accumulated in the household. They unearthed several large boxes full of love letters. After a hasty glance at them, the husband said:

"No use keeping this junk, I suppose? Here it goes."

The wife was hurt. "Oh, Clarence," exclaimed she, "how can you be so brutal? Surely you don't want to destroy your own love letters to me?"

"Well, keep 'em, if you want 'em," cheerfully assented the husband, "but, honestly, Helen, these seem too soft to file!"

The Fourmilion.

"In the Sahara," said an explorer, "there is a little insect that throws sand, and its volleys slay. They call it the fourmilion. The fourmilion digs itself a funnel shaped hole of the circumference of a silver dollar. It lies hidden and watchful in the bottom of this hole, and when a spider or ant or beetle comes cautiously prospecting down the steep and slippery sides the inhospitable fourmilion launches upon its guest volley after volley of sand—a hail of stinging sand so abundant, so suffocating, so blinding that the visitor loses his head. He rolls unconscious for the nonce to the bottom of the hole, and the fourmilion calmly dismembers him before he has time to come to himself again and puts him in the larder for the next meal."

A Puzzle in Figures.

Take any number of three different figures, as 471, under it place the same figures in reverse order, subtract the lesser number and you will find that the middle figure of the result is invariably 9. Why it is so is something that only the most learned mathematical scholars can explain. Here is our case worked out:

Taking any number, say	471
Reversing figures	174
Subtracting, we have	297
Reversing	792
Adding, we have	1089

Further still, we can now reverse this number 297 in the same way and add the two numbers and the result will always come 1089. Thus:

Taking	297
Reversing	792
Adding, we have	1089

Why should the answer always come out the same? Here's something for you to work over.

Bloome but to Die.

The talipot palm (Corypha umbraculifera) of Ceylon, whose leaves are put to such numerous uses by the Cingalese, bears fruit but once during its life. This elegant tree measures about ten feet round the trunk and attains a height of about 180 feet. The flowers, the appearance of which presages death to the tree, are inclosed in a tall spathe which bursts with a loud report, disclosing a huge plume of beautiful blossom. The inflorescence is succeeded by equally conspicuous bunches of fruit. When these have ripened the tree withers rapidly and in the course of a fortnight may be seen prostrate and decaying on the spot it adorned.

Prohibition Headquarters to be Removed.

State Chairman Clarence E. Pitts announces that at the meeting of the State Prohibition Executive Committee in Syracuse on Wednesday it was decided that after election his headquarters would be removed from Oswego to either Syracuse or Albany.

It was reported that over $7,000 had already been subscribed or contributed toward the State campaign expenses and that 10,000 meetings would be held between now and election day.

Democratic Nominations Made.

The Democratic Senatorial and Congressional conventions were held in Watertown on Wednesday and resulted in the nomination of Dr. Calish of Oswego for senator and Mr. Andrew C. Cornwall of Alexandria Bay for Congressman. It was very difficult for the Democrats to find men willing to become sacrifices to the cause of Bryan and run in opposition to the peoples favorites upon the Republican ticket, Messrs Charles L. Knapp of Lowville and George H. Cobb of Watertown, nominees for congressman and senator.

Things to Remember.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 30, 1908

Professor Thomas, of the Chicago University, has written a book called "Sex and Morality" which is as little flattering to woman as the famous letter of Lord Chesterfield in which he described women as "merely children of a larger growth having an interesting tattle and sometimes wit, but devoid of sound sense and incapable of reasoning or acting consequentially for four and twenty hours together." Professor Thomas points out the origin and cause of what are generally considered the foibles, weaknesses and blandishments of the sex. "There is a basis of truth," he says, "in Pope's hard saying 'women have no characters at all,' because their problem is not to accomodate themselves to the solid realities of the world of experience and sense, but to adjust themselves to the personality of man. It is not surprising that they should assume Protean shapes." He points out that primitive woman was practically a slave and beast of burden, but with the growth of civilization she gained control over man by coquetry. He asserts, however, that man is so affected by charms of woman that he offers an easy mark for her machinations and exploitations. The Professor is unusually severe in his strictures and out does both Schopenauer and Lord Chesterfield in his critical dissection. It it strongly suspected that he has had some experience not flattering to his self love and is trying to revenge himself with his pen.

While Governor Haskell, of Oklahoma, is in the lime light, it is interesting to know that he is not only Governor, but a member of the Oklahoma Text Book Commission and that one of the text books adopted by the Commission contains the interesting information that when the future historian writes the history of Oklahoma, he will pay tribute to Gov. Haskell who was elected as a reward for his able counsel and leadership in behalf of the people.

"Washington does not know whether it wants Taft or Bryan," says a Washington paper. The capital of the United States, however, will have to take what the rest of the country gives it and will succeed in being "happy with either when the other dear charmer's away."

It is said that we are to have directoire bathing suits next summer. Why can't the modistes let the old fashion alone? There is not sufficient cloth in the average bathing suit to cut a slash to be noticeable.

It is said that they have invented indoor picnics in Jersey. This is taking an unfair advantage of mosquitoes and other creeping things, but the Jersey lightning will be there all the same.

A man in Texas is proclaiming that if he was sure that marriage was a lottery, he would have his mother-in-law indicated for running the one that scooped him in.

As California Sees Hughes.

[Riverside, California, Press.]

Governor Hughes may desire to retire to private life but he is not succeeding very well in his efforts to do so. He was given a great ovation when he opened the Republican campaign in Ohio Saturday and he made a speech that was a master piece of sound logic and sterling patriotism. It is certain that the Republican national committee will be besieged with requests for him to speak in doubtful states; and if he can spare the time from his own campaign in New York he will be one of the most effective and popular campaigners on the stump this fall. The people believe in Hughes and that confidence is a powerful factor in enforcing the arguments he makes for the Republican ticket.

REV. O. A. HOUGHTON.

To the Editor of The Times:—Through the Boston Transcript, I have just learned of the death in Towanda, Penn., Sept. 23, of the Rev. Oscar A. Houghton, pastor of the M. E. Church, in war times a pupil in Falley Seminary and always one of the best spirited men I ever knew. It was my good fortune to room with him a few weeks in the Fall of 1863 and thus to know him quite intimately, though I had been his associate pupil besides for several years. His father, Royal Houghton, was a clergyman in the old Black River Conference and as a Methodist's minister's son, Oscar had sampled a considerable portion of the central and northern parts of the Empire State. He was not of an athletic build nor constitution, so he was not into as many adventures in that direction as were many of his contemporaries, but he had a superlatively genial nature, so that he could and did scatter sunshine wherever he went. I fancy his delicate health was from an early period in life as he came to us somewhat older than the majority of the boys in those days. He was born May 15, 1842, in Trenton, N. Y., where I take it his father was preaching at the time. He had an older brother, also a Seminary boy of an earlier date, who went to Union College and in 1866, when I left the Seminary for college, as the Rev. Ross Houghton, he was the pastor in charge of the Methodist Church in Fulton. After a long and successful life he died several years ago while pastor of a Congregational church in Chelsea, Mass.

Oscar entered Genesee College, in Lima, N. Y., now the Syracuse University, in 1865, graduating thence in 1869, a fine student and a general favorite among all who knew him. His first pastorate was in Wolcott, Wayne county, right among many of my relatives and it was my pleasure to meet him there. His father was preaching in Rose, during my college course and also that of Oscar, so that I had the privilege of seeing him in the Methodist personage of my native town and to have from his hand a copy of a bit of funny verse, still retained from the Harper's Weekly of those days, viz., 1863. He had a keen sense of the ridiculous and was a prince among story tellers. He was one of those who participated in the general assembling of the Falley Seminary pupils in 1888, just twenty years ago, and I am sure no one of the many present enjoyed the occasion any more than he did.

As a clergyman, he ranked high among his associates, receiving and holding some of the best appointments in the conferences to which he belonged. He was preacher in charge, at different times, of charges in Syracuse, Geddes, Clyde, Elmira, where he married, Ithaca, etc. While his brother Ross was preaching in Chelsea, Mass., Oscar was pastor for a period, not so very long, of a Congregational church in Cambridge, Mass. In his Seminary days he was an excellent singer, and was always in the school choir, having a fine tenor voice, was prominent in the councils of the Peithologian debating society and none was more interested than he in our Shakespearean Club. The rooms that dear Prof. Griffin gave us were not exactly sumptuous in their furnishings but we boys did manage to get a deal of comfort and pleasure out of them, unconsciously all of us being disciples of the Simple Life and, among all the faces in memory's gallery, I recall no one more pleasant, more enjoyable than the one so vividly before me now. A large share of the boys enlisted or tried to during those troublous times, Houghton among the rest, but the military authorities quickly threw him out, hence he had no part direct in the struggle, though his voice and influence were ever for the right. I carried his photo in my knapsack through my service. The last time I met him was while he was preaching in Cambridge. At the time I was a member of the Massachusetts Senate and he ran in one day, just to say, "How d'y," and to give me a taste of his merry thoughts and then we separated, finally, it seems, so far as this life is concerned. There must be many middle-aged people in Fulton who will recall the boy and man, later the successful clergyman, now living in memory only.

Are Babies Moral?

"We do not expect paternal feelings in a child of five," says Dr. Woods Hutchinson in October Woman's Home Companion. "Why, then, should we expect any other of those race-regarding impulses which we term 'morality?' Even to appeal to the better feeling's of a child of eight or ten is often almost as irrational as the celebrated apostrophe of the emotional Irish barrister, who in the fine frenzy of his peroration whirled upon the judge with the thrilling appeal, 'Sirr, was you iver a mother? To appeal to a child's better nature, while excellent, in moderation, often does little more than make a hypocrite out of him before his time.

On a Damp, Chilly Day

When it's too warm to start a fire and too chilly to be without one, there's nothing so handy and comfortable as a little gas heater, one that you can easily carry from one room to another, and attach to any gas jet. Just enough heat to take the chill off and make the room comfortable.

And for the bathroom on a cold day, it is just the thing.

But before you can use the heater you must have the gas to supply it. We will put in the fixtures and have the gas ready for you to use in a short time, at such a low price that it will simply astonish you.

Come in and ask us about it.

The report that Rev. Willard Miller, formerly pastor of the State Street M. E. church of this city, had left the Methodist Ministry is erroneous. He expects soon to take a pastorate after having spent the summer on his Colorado ranch. A recent letter from Mrs. Miller to a friend in Fulton so states.

The work of decorating the Church of the Immaculate Conception is completed and the interior of the edifice presents a magnificent appearance, being beyond doubt the most beautiful church for its size in this section of the State. The staging has been removed and on Sunday our residents will have an opportunity to see the beautiful coloring and design. The altar is especially worthy of mention. It was an ambition of the late P. J. Kearney to see this work completed and in Father Lindsman it became an all-absorbing ambition which has now become gratified.

MINING IN ALASKA.

Mighty Artificial Channel Erected by Engineering Skill

The Messrs. Hunter Brothers of this city, in co-operation with others, are engaged in a mammoth gold mining enterprise in Alaska. The following is a description of the erection of a flume on their property, which will convey some idea of the energy and enterprise displayed by the promoters:

The flume is more than a mile long. It is thirty-eight feet wide, broad enough to hold a double track railroad. In its construction was used more than one and one-half million feet of sawed lumber, which was cut in the neighboring woods, sawed in a sawmill right at hand and drawn more than a mile to the planing mill near the site of the flume, there to be planed and tongued. This mighty artificial channel for water rests upon a massive trestle substructure containing more than 3,500 piles, some of them more than fifty feet high. The sides of the flume rise 8 feet. Two teams could pass in its bed with ease. When Mrs. Hunter wrote the flume was to be completed within a few days, and by this time it is undoubtedly filled with a swirling torrent of water.

At the lower end of the flume, a sheer drop of forty feet to bed rock, has been hewn a pit forty feet long and twelve feet wide at the bottom, and here has been constructed some of the great machinery to operate the mine. All the dirt taken from the excavation was saved, sluiced and panned. From it 120 ounces of gold was obtained, probably enough to help out considerably in the construction work.

Mrs. Hunter enclosed a copy of the Daily Alaskan, published in Skagway. It tells about the return to Skagway of two army officers after an inspection of the flume.

"They came back filled with wonder and enthusiasm," says the newspaper, "concerning the great mining undertaken at the Porcupine. They describe the big flume as a wonder of enterprise and energy and to their minds certain to bring great results. The flume as described in mere figures is not to be brought within the understanding of those who merely read about and do not see it. To describe it as capable of forming a roadway for a double track railway, built with strength to carry such a railway, the trains almost screened from view the entire distance by the sides of the flume, the interior of the great avenue formed of planed lumber."

Surrounded by great mountains and glaciers of eternal ice the Syracusans appear to be enjoying life in the far North. Mrs. Hunter writes:

"The climate is an ideal one so far this summer. I have been here two months and we have had only three or four rainy days, and then it did not rain all day. The days have been warm—from 80 to 85 degrees in the shade—but the air is so dry we have not been uncomfortable. The nights and mornings are cool so that we need some fire. I have worn thin shirtwaists and dresses in the day time and then a coat in the evening.

"The scenery cannot be described, so varied are the cloud effects up in the snow capped mountains, and when the sun sets behind them and the whole sky has beautiful lights reflected in it, the sight is a gorgeous one.

"We are now beginning to have the wonderful northern lights, which come and go and light up the entire heavens."

The false notion that life is hard in this region and that people have to live on canned goods is dissipated by Mrs. Hunter's letter. She says:

"We are now having great quantities of blue and red raspberries and high bush cranberries, and last week I picked a few strawberries in the garden. I wish you might see what a fine garden we have. We raise radishes, lettuce, peas, turnips, beets, carrots and potatoes, and all grow so rapidly. We have California fresh fruits shipped in, and with fresh meat (also shipped in), poultry (which we have here), game and fish we live finely.

"The company has just finished cutting hay for the horses, and twenty-five tons have just been put into the barns for winter use. Hay retails for $100 a ton here on account of the cost of transportation."

Mr. John Reynolds has sufficiently recovered from the effects of a broken hip to resume his business duties.

Apparently no lack of orders in the near future for the local American Woolen mill is anticipated, as a new 500-horse power engine has been ordered, giving the mill a motive power of 15.000 horse power, available should the water power become useless from the barge canal construction work. Day and night work has been commenced and already operators from other factory towns where work is slack, are coming to Fulton for positions. The outlook for work and plenty of it, is very encouraging.

Rally Day Services will be held at 12 o'clock on Sunday, October 4th, at the First Methodist Episcopal Church. PROPHETIC WORDS.

Statement of Lawton Like an Accusation From the Grave.

Among the many gallant American soldiers whose lives were sacrificed in the difficult task of suppressing the Filipino insurrection none was more beloved either by his brother officers or the men in the ranks than General Henry W. Lawton. He realized the ideal American soldier as completely as any of his contemporaries, and his record in the war for the Union, in various Indian campaigns, in Cuba during the Spanish war and in trying work which called him to the Philippines constitutes a lustrous chapter in the annals of American valor. No braver officer ever wore his country's uniform. No gentler, more considerate commander ever led his troops into battle. No more chivalric leader ever gave up his life in defense of his country's flag.

General Lawton was killed in battle with insurrectos in the island of Luzon in 1900 while fighting at the head of his troops. A short time before the tragic close of his career he had written to a friend in the United States a letter, in which he said:

"If I am shot by a Filipino bullet it might as well come from one of my own men, because I know from observation, confirmed by captured prisoners, that the continuance of fighting is chiefly due to reports that are sent out from America."

The words of Lawton, fighting a treacherous foe in a tropical country, were meant as a protest against the unpatriotic "anti-imperialist" agitators here in the United States, where expressions of sympathy for the insurrection gave constant aid and comfort to the enemy. Army officers of high character and rugged experience in the Philippines have frequently expressed the opinion that the insurrection would not have lasted ninety days had it not been for the support, moral and otherwise, which its leaders received from their sympathizers in America.

Chief among those sympathizers, the insistent and most reckless of all, was William Jennings Bryan, and against him the prophetic words of the lamented Lawton stand like an accusation from the grave. For his unpatriotic course during the Filipino insurrection Mr. Bryan lacked even the shadow of an excuse. He had entered the military service during the Spanish war as a volunteer officer, and he knew that the war and the insurrection in the islands could be concluded only with the unqualified recognition of American authority wherever it was asserted. But in spite of that he encouraged the Filipino to continue in armed resistance, and his reckless expressions undoubtedly helped to prolong a desperate and costly struggle which he knew in his heart could never end except in the way it was ended. Mr. Bryan's conduct throughout that conflict, which cost so much alike to the United States and to the deluded Filipinos themselves, amounted to moral treason, and it will never be forgiven by the survivors of those gallant men from whom it exacted the last full measure of sacrifices in devotion to duty.

The words of Lawton will confound Mr. Bryan every time he opens his mouth to speak on the Philippines in the present campaign. He cannot escape them. They indict him for giving aid and comfort to the armed enemies of American authority and they brand him as a man who openly encouraged a desperate uprising against the flag in defense of which Lawton died.

BRYAN COULD HARM.

Danger of Placing Nebraskan in White House.

EVEN WITH SENATE OPPOSED.

Administration and Enforcement of Laws Would Be In His Hands—The Treasury Would Be Under His Thumb—National Banks Would Be at His Mercy.

Nobody with brains enough to get in out of a blizzard can have patience with the argument so complacently put forth by some of the Bryanites who want to humbug others into believing what they don't believe themselves—that Bryan can do no harm should he be elected. The usual way of putting it is that there will be a Republican senate and probably a Republican house and that Bryan's hands will be tied even if his tongue continues to wag—certainly a poor reason for electing a president even were it true.

But it is not true. A grammar school boy who has studied the constitution of the United States knows that. Of course Bryan as president in face of a sane congress could not pass laws. But the whole administration of national laws, including their enforcement, which is at least as important as passing them, would be in his hands. He would have the treasury under his thumb; the national banks would be at the mercy of a comptroller of the currency appointed by him; the foreign policy of the government would be directed by him, and ambassadors, ministers and consuls would be named by him. The army and navy would be under his command. Collectors, postmasters and other officials of the civil service would be nominated by him. While he could not establish "a tariff for revenue only," he could make things much smoother and easier for the class that come back from European trips loaded with all sorts of luxuries purchased abroad to the detriment of American labor.

Then he could smash any bank that might offend him by not going into his compulsory guarantee scheme, just as his campaign treasurer, Governor Haskell, smashed the International Bank of Coalgate, Okla., to make a demonstration of the guarantee law for the Democratic Denver convention.

Oh, yes, Bryan could do harm—so much harm that it might take the country many long years to recover from the damage done by four years of Bryan in the White House.

But Bryan will do no harm because he will not have the opportunity, because the American people are going to elect as their president William H. Taft, the candidate of the Republican party; the impartial judge, the constructive statesman, the man of whom McKinley said, "He is the broadest and most unselfishly brave man I know and will carry the constitution of the United States in his very blood." Taft's election will be an assurance that the voters of the United States are determined to have in the White House one whose presence there will be in itself a pledge of good government, of efficient and equitable administration of the laws, of intellectual and educational advancement and of progress and prosperity in the material affairs of the republic.

THE BRYAN PARROT.

The Same Feathered Nuisance That Screeched in 1896.

In 1908, as in 1900 and 1896, the dominant voice in the Bryan campaign is the voice of the parrot. It is just as shrill, just as insistent and just as meaningless as it was twelve years ago and is bound to become quite as wearisome to the public.

In 1896 the sleek, green parrot of Bryanism teetered to and fro upon his comfortable swing and screeched "Free silver! Free silver!" That was the only phrase the bird could utter, and its dismal iteration so exasperated the people that they grabbed the noisy parrot from his perch and cast him into the garbage heap.

But the plumed nuisance survived and appeared in the campaign of 1900 with a brand new scream. This time it was "Imperialism! Imperialism!" To the unthinking that alarmist outcry was momentarily terrifying, suggesting thrones and tyrants bent on oppressing the people. But it never scared the sane people themselves even for a moment. They knew it was the same old parrot singing the same old tune with merely a change of words. To every challenge to a discussion of real political issues the parrot made but one reply—"Imperialism!"—and again the feathered pest was torn from his perch and tossed into the junk pile by the public whose patience he had exhausted.

With his inability either to charm or frighten, so rudely demonstrated in two successive trials, an ordinary parrot would have dedicated himself to a future of silent meditation on the follies of talking too much. But the Bryan parrot is an extraordinary parrot, not an ordinary one, and the campaign of 1908 finds him perched aloft again with another screed wherewith to affright the timid and amuse the thoughtful. His cry this year—and its accents show that it has been rehearsed with rare patience—is, "Shall the people rule?" It fits the parrot's voice to perfection, and, though it is as empty as his own head, he accompanies it with an uprolling of his eyes that might scare people if they could forget for a moment that it is only a parrot screech, after all.

The voice of the Bryan parrot is unchanged. It is as rasping, monotonous and as lacking in the note of sincerity as it was twelve years ago. The senseless shriek of "Free silver!" could not mislead the people in 1896. The alarmist scream of "Imperialism!" never disturbed their composure for a single moment in 1900. And the shrill, insulting screech, "Shall the people rule?" can have no other result than to provoke their angry contempt in 1908.

Parrot politics will not do this year. Serious questions are before the people for discussion and settlement. Public attention cannot be drawn away from them either by the witless chatter of parrots or the theatrical tricks of demagogues. This is no more a parrot year than was 1900 or 1896.

Mr. Gompers betrays distinct signs of irritation because nobody thinks it worth while to get out an injunction against his speaking his mind to the fullest extent. He will awaken in November to the fact that there is a great gulf between his partisan mind and the strictly economic purposes of labor unions.

The Bryan proposition that conservative banks should pay for the failures of speculative banks will not appeal to the thrifty depositor.

Woman's Curiosity.

"Woman's curiosity," said Mr. Fletcher, "is a quality of mind beyond human understanding."

"Yes," said Mrs. Fletcher. "What made you think of that?"

"The fool actions of a woman that I saw downtown today. She followed a man ten blocks just to get to read a placard that was fastened to his back. She spotted him at Thirty-fourth street. That was really the end of her trip—I made that out from something she said to another woman who was too fat to join in the chase—but when she caught sight of that flaming red poster tied to the man's back her curiosity got the better of her and she set out after him. He led her quite a chase across town and downtown and back again, but she never weakened. She tagged faithfully along in his wake, and finally she got close enough to read that notice."

Mrs. Fletcher reflected a moment.

"What did it say?" she asked.

"It advised her to get her teeth pulled somewhere on Sixth avenue."

Mrs. Fletcher thought again.

"Where were you all the time she was trying to find that out?"

"Me?" said Fletcher. "Oh, I was following the woman. I wanted to see if she finally caught up with the man."—New York Times.

Kodol will, in a very short time, enable the stomach to do the work it should do, and the work it should do is to digest all the food you eat. It makes the stomach sweet and it is pleasant to take. It is sold here by all druggists.

A Friend In Need.

A speaker in the recent Shropshire (England) election relates the following incident: One night he spoke in the poultry market at Whitchurch. The next morning a young man stopped him in the street and said:

"I was looking well after you last night."

The speaker expressed surprise at the necessity.

The young man continued his story: "I saw a young man come into the meeting with his coat pockets bulging out in a way that made me suspicious. Two of us followed him in. He stood at the back of the room, and we stood one on each side of him. Gently but firmly we pressed against him. There was a faint crackling sound of breaking eggs, and the man was out of action."

Good for Biliousness.

"I took two of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets last night and I feel fifty per cent better than I have for weeks," says J. J. Firestone of Allegan, Mich. "They are certainly a fine article for biliousness." For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Arms, Legs and the Man.

How many of us have noticed that we walk with our arms as well as with our legs? Sitting on a grassy slope overlooking a seaside promenade I was struck by the mechanical swing of the arms of the stream of passersby—the right arm always keeping position with the left leg and the left arm with the right leg. By attempting to reverse the order of the swing I found that I had a tendency to progress like a crab, while the effort to keep them fixed by the side was like the shuffling off the stage from the circus. Arms and the man were not intended to swing, legs and the man.—London Chronicle.

A Traveling Man's Experience.

"I must tell you my experience on an East bound O. R. & N. R. R. train from Pendleton to LeGrande, Ore.," writes Sam A. Garber, a well known traveling man. "I was in the smoking department with some other traveling men when one of them went out into the coach and came back and said, 'There is a woman sick unto death in the car.' I at once got up and went out, found her very ill with cramp colic; her hands and arms were drawn up so you could not straighten them, and with a deathlike look on her face. Two or three ladies were working with her and giving her whisky. I went to my suit case and got my bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy (I never travel without it), ran to the water tank, put a double dose of the medicine in the glass, poured some water into it and stirred it with a pencil; then I had quite a time to get the ladies to let me give it to her, but I succeeded. I could at once see the effect and I worked with her, rubbing her hands, and in twenty minutes I gave her another dose. By this time we were almost into Le Grande, where I was to leave the train. I gave the bottle to the husband to be used in case another dose should be needed, but by the time the train ran into Le Grande she was all right, and I received the thanks of every passenger in the car." For sale by E. A. Putnam.

The Porcelain Secret.

The porcelain industry of Germany is comparatively young, says the Berlin Morgen Post, and its development was rapid. Although it is generally believed that the Chinese kept their processes of manufacture secret, Julian's translations of their voluminous encyclopedia show that this is not true. All who could have read the work might have known also the porcelain secret. But evidently no German fathomed the mechanical mystery until the apothecary's apprentice Boettgar, 200 years ago, made the first German porcelain at Dresden. Some years before he had attracted attention by proclaiming the discovery of a method of changing base metal into gold. King Frederick I. gave him orders for the precious metal, which the sixteen-year-old inventor could not execute, and in fear he fled to Dresden and became a subject of King August the Strong. While endeavoring to make gold he discovered the porcelain secret and inscribed his door thus: "Into a potter was changed by Almighty God a man who thought he could make gold."

Best Treatment for a Burn.

If for no other reason, Chamberlain's Salve should be kept in every household on account of its great value in the treatment of burns. It allays the pain almost instantly and unless the injury is a severe one heals the parts without leaving a scar. This salve is also unequaled for chapped hands, sore nipples and diseases of the skin. Price, 25 cents For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Venice Too Wet For Her.

A woman who recently returned from a trip to Europe says wet weather hasn't bothered this country at all in comparison with what she saw abroad. She says that they ran into a town named Venice where the water covered every street. And you couldn't go anywhere except in boats. She said: "You bet we only stayed one day in that city."—Kansas City Star

For State Treasurer—Thomas B. Dunn of Monroe.

For Associate Justice of the Court of Appeals—Albert Haight of Erie (renominated).

The foregoing ticket was evolved by a convention that was the most conspicuous in state political history as reflecting the wishes of the great mass of the Republican voters. The name of each candidate is well known to the people of the state. The name of Governor Hughes has become almost as prominent nationally as that of Mr. Taft, and the roll call had hardly been completed before the presidential candidate wired the following message to Mr. Hughes:

"I sincerely congratulate you on your well deserved renomination. It not only makes the state of New York safe in November, but it greatly strengthens the national ticket in every state in the Union. I hope that you will be able to give some of your time in the campaign to the west."

Vice Presidential Candidate Sherman wired: "Cordial congratulations upon your renomination. May I, through you, congratulate the people of the state as well? I predict an enthusiastic campaign and a successful outcome."

The query propounded by Mr. Bryan in every inflection of the human voice, from a whisper to a roar, "Shall the people rule?" was answered by the Republican convention at Saratoga. The answer was in the affirmative, and it went further and declared that the people not only shall, but do rule, for if ever a convention was ruled absolutely by the people it was the memorable one at Saratoga that renominated Governor Hughes.

From every precinct, district, city, town, hamlet and farm came a mighty demand for the renomination of the governor. At the critical time the people spoke, and they spoke as with one voice. They wanted Hughes. And that settled the question. The moment the delegates and the leaders heard the demand of the people that moment the sentiment of the convention crystallized on Mr. Hughes. It amounted to a tidal wave. Timothy L. Woodruff, chairman of the state Republican committee, said as the delegates were filing into the hall, "The people want Governor Hughes, and Governor Hughes it will be on the first ballot."

The convention was one of the most notable and conspicuous in point of obedience to popular dictation in the history of any party in this state.

The ticket throughout is regarded as the strongest that has been named in this state for many years, and wise political observers, irrespective of party, predict the election of every candidate on it.

Governor Hughes.

The governor has been making history so fast during his brief term of office that his career is known to practically every man, woman and child within and without the state. He became famous before entering public life and has been adding to that fame throughout his strenuous official career.

Of his administration of his great office it has been said that he has lived up to his ideals of public service. He took into it the spirit of an investigator and a reformer and has carried it out in his recommendations to the legislature and in his approval or disapproval of the bills which have come before him. His method has been to bring the facts to light and then to act upon them. In the beginning he undertook the transaction of all public business in the large, executive chamber, accessible to all who had real business with him and he sought to carry out the provisions of the state constitution in all matters making appointments on the basis of merit and approving such measures as he deemed best for the commonwealth. He assumed the control of public corporations by the public service commission with the conduct of racing in accordance with law and in contrast with conditions of public affairs at Albany. A recent writer says of his work, "He has tremendously increased the influence in his own behalf, now looks for his successes in closest union between lawmakers and their responsibilities and greatly improved the tone and efficiency of public service."

Governor Hughes was the choice of the New York delegates to the Chicago Republican convention in June for candidate for president. Had it not been for the positive refusal of Governor Hughes to accept the nomination for vice president he would have been placed on the ticket with Mr. Taft.

Senator Horace White.

State Senator Horace White, chosen for the second place on the state ticket, is a nephew of Dr. Andrew D. White, once president of Cornell university and afterward ambassador to Germany. His father, Horace S. White, lived in Buffalo when he was born, on Oct. 7, 1865, but four years later removed to Syracuse. There the son was prepared for college, going to Cornell, where he was graduated with honors in 1887. He took prizes in oratory in both his junior and his senior years. After studying law for two years in the office of Senator Frank Hiscock he took a course at the Columbia Law school and was admitted to the bar in 1890. As soon as he could vote Mr. White took an active interest in politics as a Republican, and in 1902 he was elected state senator and was re-elected in 1904, 1906, 1908, 1904 and 1906, with a large majority each time. He was one of the youngest members of the senate when he first entered it, but soon attained a leading position. He was talked of as a possible nominee for lieutenant governor in 1906.

Samuel S. Koenig.

Samuel S. Koenig, candidate for secretary of state, once a candidate for member of assembly from the Sixteenth district in New York city, is thirty-six years old and has long been active in the politics of his district. He was graduated with honors from the New York University Law school after preliminary training in the public schools and the City college. For several years he was secretary of the McKinley league of New York, president of the Federal Republican club and was instrumental in healing the factional differences existing in the Sixteenth district. He did effective work on the stump for McKinley and Roosevelt.

Mr. Koenig is actively engaged in the practice of law. He is a member of the Republican state committee and vice president of the New York county committee. He is past chancellor of Justinian lodge, Knights of Pythias, and belongs to other social organizations.

Charles H. Gaus.

Charles H. Gaus of Albany, candidate for comptroller, who has been mayor of that city since 1901, is a man of sixty-eight years. He was born in Zanesville, O., of German parentage, but when two years old went with his parents to Brooklyn, where he secured his education. He embarked on a public career in 1874, becoming a member of the board of supervisors of Albany county for two years. He was afterward a member of the board of public instruction for eight years and one year its president. He was a street commissioner in 1891, 1895 and 1896, and in 1897 was elected a city assessor, resigning to take the office of mayor on Jan. 1, 1902. He was re-elected in 1903, 1905 and 1907.

Mayor Gaus served for twenty-seven years as a member of the national guard and won the Wimbledon cup for marksmanship four times in succession and also the military championship of the United States and the Steward prize in London. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Albany County Veterans' association, having seen service in the Ninety-first New York volunteers in the civil war.

Thomas B. Dunn.

Thomas B. Dunn, candidate for state treasurer, is one of the foremost citizens of Rochester, where he is regarded as a man of sterling character, practical methods and recognized ability. He was born in Providence, but since his boyhood has lived in Rochester. He gives employment in Rochester to 200 persons, who draw salaries aggregating $3,000 a week. In 1905 Governor Higgins appointed him chairman of the Jamestown Tercentennial exposition commission from New York state. He is a director of several banks, the state industrial school and orphan asylum and a member of six or eight clubs. His political service has been confined to one term in the state senate from the Forty-fifth district. He was elected two years ago to succeed Merton E. Lewis. He is forty-five years old.

Frank Martin Williams.

Frank Martin Williams, candidate for state engineer and surveyor, was born at Durhamville, N. Y., in 1873. He studied law in Oneida and was admitted to the bar in 1897. For a portion of the time he was studying law he served as city engineer of Oneida, and he did not take up the active practice of law after admission to the bar, but entered the department of the state engineer and surveyor and was engaged on canal construction until 1898. In 1900 Mr. Williams again entered the service of the state engineer. He rose through the various grades to the position of resident engineer, which is the highest civil service position in the state engineer's department. He has the reputation of being a conscientious, hard-working and capable engineer, thoroughly acquainted with the duties and details of the state engineer's office.

Edward R. O'Malley.

Edward R. O'Malley, nominated for attorney general, was born in Medina, Orleans county, N. Y., on March 18, 1862. Mr. O'Malley took up the practice of his profession in the city of Buffalo. He immediately identified himself with the Republican party and came prominently to the attention of the leaders as a forceful speaker and energetic party worker. He served four years in the office of the corporation counsel of Buffalo.

In 1896 and 1897 he was assistant city attorney of Buffalo. In 1901 he was elected a member of assembly for the Second district of Erie county, and he was re-elected the following year. He is recognized as one of the leading members of the bar of Buffalo.

Judge Albert Haight.

Albert Haight, who has been renominated for associate judge of the court of appeals, has filled that office since Jan. 1, 1896. He is a native of Ellicottville, Cattaraugus county, N. Y., and is sixty-six years old, so that under the law his term will expire in 1912. Judge Haight secured his education in the Springfield (N. Y.) academy and was admitted to the bar in 1863. After holding a number of local offices he was elected county judge of Erie county in 1872. From 1876 to 1894 he was a justice of the supreme court in the Eighth judicial district, serving on the bench in the fifth department from 1884 to 1889 under appointment by Governor Cleveland and as associate judge of the second division of the court of appeals from 1889 to 1894 by appointment of Governor Hill. His home is in Buffalo. He is the senior judge in service at the state.

Mr. Chanler's Tribute.

When Mr. Chanler, the standard bearer of the state Democracy, closes the stump he will maintain that the people has in one of governors and his opinion of the men to represent these ideals. Although without practical experience in such matters, he has been a frank and fearless advocate and admirer of a reformatory execution of the law as exemplified in the person of Governor Hughes. Consequently it is likely that he will reiterate this tribute to Mr. Hughes made by Mr. Chanler at the luncheon Senate dinner last January:

"Do not let us be blinded by petty partisan prejudice in selecting the men to fill our offices. Let us rather seek out an honest man, and then, having found such a man, keep him where he is needed. I have always said that I believed the governor of this state to be an honest man, faithful to the trust imposed in him. Although some of his ideas may not be my ideas and his political party is not my political party, I feel it an honor to take off my hat to that man and proclaim him one who has worked hard and faithfully, not for his party, but for the people of the state of New York. He is a fine type of the wholesome, sane American citizen."

MR. TAFT DOES THINGS.

One Incident That Shows the Quality of the Man.

This incident affords perhaps as good an insight into the psychology of Mr. Taft as any that could be cited. It illustrates the way Mr. Taft does things, the way he works and the way he plays, for when he plays he plays as hard and vestfully as he works. With him the thing is to do it. Accomplishment is ever his aim. It happened while Mr. Taft was on the sea, bound for Manila to open the Philippine assembly. The narrator watched the proceedings at close range. Three men stood between decks on the steamship, away up in the eyes of the ship, and contemplated a hole ten feet above their heads. A narrow iron ladder led perpendicularly to the deck. The circumference of the hole seemed to approximate that of a sugar barrel. One of the men, Ambassador O'Brien, bound for Tokyo, was tall and spare, lean and sinewy. The second, Judge Thomas Burke of Seattle, was short and rotund. The third, Mr. Taft, was larger and heavier than the other two put together.

"It would be easier for the camel to go through the needle's eye, Mr. Secretary, than for you to get through that hole," bantered Judge Burke.

"I wouldn't like to try that climb, I'll confess," said the ambassador.

"Well, I don't know," rejoined the 285 pound secretary of war. "It looks like a tough proposition."

For a moment the three turned aside to examine something to which their attention was directed. Unregarded Mr. Taft stepped to the foot of the ladder and observed it contemplatively. One might have deduced from his manner that his thoughts ran something like this: "That's a hard climb, and that hole looks smaller than my body, but those fellows don't believe that I can climb up that ladder and get through the hole. I believe I can. I'm going to try it."

Before he was spied Mr. Taft had half scaled the ladder. Ambassador O'Brien and Judge Burke, despite their lesser weight, expressed in their faces an approximation of dismay when they saw what the secretary was about. "You'll never make it; better come back," advised the ambassador. "Look out the ladder doesn't break," cautioned Judge Burke. Round after round the secretary progressed until his body was halfway out of the hole. When the circumference of his girth came into conjunction with the circumference of the hole it was a toss-up for a minute which would win. But Mr. Taft proved that he had an elastic waist line, which won over the unyielding limits of the hole. But it was a struggle. He stuck to it grimly and doggedly. The lifting of 285 pounds of dead weight by the muscles of the arms is a task that would tax the strength of a far lighter man. A final heave and Mr. Taft hopped upon the deck as lightly as a boy. He was smiling all over. He had won. The passengers who had watched gave him a cheer. He would have stayed in the hole and fought it out for an hour rather than retreat. That is Taft.

NEGRO AND DEMOCRACY.

Would Be Suicidal For Colored Men to Vote For Bryan.

One of the greatest negroes this country has known, a leader of his race and the honored confidant of President Grant and Secretary Fish, recently said: "It would be suicidal for colored men to vote for Bryan. They have nothing to hope for from the Democratic party, which has disfranchised them in the south and which professes to regard them as unfit for the ballot anywhere. The only chance for the negro is with the Republican party, and it will be a sad day for the negro when a Republican president will be elected without the votes of negroes having helped to place him in power."

In view of the fact that Bryan himself has approved negro disfranchisement in the south there can be no doubt of his attitude should he be elected to the presidency, while the southern Democrats would regard northern negro votes for their candidates as an indorsement by the negro race of southern treatment of the negro.

It is impossible to believe that any negro who has studied intelligently the history of his race will go into the voting booth and cast a ballot in favor of Bryan and against Taft and Sherman, the Republican candidates—the candidates of the party, which opened the door of hope to the colored man, which gave him the ballot and safeguards him in its use in every state in which Republicans rule.

Democracy Divided.

Thomas L. Hisgen, Hearst candidate for the presidency, looks for the election of Taft and then a new alignment of political parties. Mr. Hisgen says:

"The Democratic party is dividing. The radical and the more conservative elements can pull together only a little while longer. After Bryan is defeated for a third time there is bound to be a new alignment of the people, and the Democratic party will disintegrate. The Republicans will get some of those former Democrats, and the Independence league will get more of them. The campaign of 1912 will be fought out by a different set of political parties from those now in the field."

Bryan's great handicap in running for the presidency is that he cannot run away from his record.

The wind bloweth where it listeth. So does William Jennings Bryan. It is a way they both have.

His Own People.

The negro blood wherever it is, declares Ray Stannard Baker in American Magazine, supplies an element of light heartedness which will not be wholly crushed. In illustration he tells this story of a very light mulatto of Tennessee:

A number of years ago it came to him suddenly one day that he was white enough to pass anywhere for white, and he acted instantly on the inspiration. He went to Memphis and bought a first class ticket on a Mississippi river boat to Cincinnati. No one suspected that he was colored. He sat at the table with white people and even occupied a stateroom with a white man. At first, as he could hardly restrain his exultation, but after a time, although he was faced with the white men, he began to feel lonesome.

"It grew on me after a while," he said. In the evening he sat on the upper deck, and as he looked over the railing he could see down below the negro passengers and deck hands talking and laughing. After a time when it grew darker they began to sing the jubilee songs.

"That finished me," he said. "I got up and went downstairs and took my place among them. I've been a negro ever since."

Many people are not aware how perfectly equipped an optical parlor we have, nor how strictly up-to-date are the methods we employ for detecting vision defects.

To these we extend a cordial invitation to call and investigate for themselves how very nice a profession is that of occulist and optician and how many delicate appliances are to-day necessary for the determing of the extent of the eye trouble, (or whether or not there is any) and how it may be corrected by properly fitting lenses.

TAFT AS A SPEAKER.

His Talks to the People Winning Many Votes.

DOESN'T POSE AS AN ORATOR.

Word Pictures Not Needed to State Facts Plainly—Republican Candidate's Clearness and Sincerity Carry Conviction.

From being decidedly apprehensive as to the outcome of Judge Taft's speaking tours Republican leaders are now convinced that one of the wisest moves of the campaign was the decision to let the Republican candidate visit as many sections of the country as possible between now and election day and talk to as many voters as the time will permit. When speaking tours for Taft were first discussed the opponents of the plan based their opposition on the fact that as an orator Taft cannot be compared to Bryan. They argued that Taft, who makes no pretense to oratory, would be placed at a disadvantage appearing on the stump against the gifted Nebraskan. But Judge Taft himself solved the problem and cleared the whole situation with one sentence in his recent speech at Sandusky, O.

"I cannot dwell in the cerulean blue, but have to deal with facts," he declared. It is this dealing with facts in a clear, dispassionate manner that has made William Howard Taft what he is, that will cause him to gain strength every time he appears in public. Taft's best friends cannot claim for him that he is an orator. But he can tell the truth and does tell it. He will not have to paint beautiful word pictures of what should be done. He will not have to plead with silvery eloquence for the alleged downtrodden nor call on "the masses" to rise up and save the country from the ruin which Bryan has been predicting and finding various panacess for during the past twelve years.

What Taft has to do is to state cold, clear cut facts, to tell the truth about himself, to give to his auditors a clear and unmistakable idea of what Taft the man is and what he stands for. And this he can do, and do well. By nature he is frank and open. It would be difficult for him to dissemble if he wished to do so.

Already Taft has begun making serious impressions on his audiences. Bryan never fails to tickle his audiences. In most instances he arouses enthusiasm, but it is an enthusiasm which rarely lasts. Those who listen and applaud go away and forget. With the Taft audiences it is different. By the clearness of his exposition and the absolute sincerity of his manner he carries conviction. His auditors are soon impressed by two things—Taft's ability and Taft's sincerity.

"That man means what he says," is a comment frequently heard after Taft has spoken. Another Taft characteristic that is winning many friends for the Republican candidate among those who knew nothing of him before they saw and heard him is his great courage. He says what he thinks, and says it in such a way that it remains fixed in the minds of those who hear him. At Athens, O., he was addressing 400 union coal miners. He told them about having issued injunctions.

"I issued them," he said, "because the rights of the plaintiffs demanded it. When I am on the bench I enforce the law. And I have no apology to make."

For a minute there was absolute silence, dramatic in its intensity. Then the 400 miners broke not merely into applause, but into enthusiastic cheers After the meeting they were heard expressing their views.

"That man is on the level," said one. "He doesn't hand out any 'con' talk. He knows where he stands and is not afraid to come straight out with a thing. He ain't the orator Bryan is, but he says things that Bryan wouldn't dare say."

Unlike many of Bryan's utterances, Taft's utterances will bear inspection. He will make no declration that is open to doubt. "I have to deal with facts," he said. In some of his speeches Bryan, intoxicated with the sound of his own words, frequently makes statements not entirely trustworthy. Taft has been too long on the bench, too long in high government positions, where his utterances carried weight, to permit of his making careless statements. Furthermore, Taft possesses to a marked degree the ability to discuss the most intricate subjects in the simplest language. He proved this most conclusively at Sandusky when he made perfectly plain to his audience the development of anti-trust legislation and the powers and limitations of the federal government. Everybody knew exactly what he was talking about and understood it clearly, yet there were few in the audience who realized that he was discussing abstruse legal problems without resorting to bewildering legal phraseology.

As far as personal magnetism goes, Taft and Bryan are nearly equal. But where Bryan's personality is one that creates interest and enthusiasm Taft's is one that inspires affection and trustfulness. "That man has a fine face; I would trust him anywhere," said a West Virginia woman who with a large party came over the mountains to hear Taft speak at Hot Springs. Those who meet him feel that he is not only sincere, but that he possesses the ability and courage to handle safely the many problems that confront a president. It is the knowledge of all this that makes the Taft managers glad that he is to go out and meet the people.

DEMOCRATS USING THE GRANGES FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES

Report Signed by G. A. Rappole, J. F. Hartson and Raymond Cooper, An Unfair and Biased Document being Circulated for the Purpose of Defeating Republican Candidates and Electing Democrats —Attempt at Partisan Politics May Result in an Investigation Being Held by the Order.

Are the Granges of Oswego county being used by the Democratic party for partisan political purposes? Although the bylaws of the order prohibits politics entering into the deliberations of the Grange, it looks as though the Granges in Oswego county have been captured by the Democratic politicians, and that they are using them for the purpose of trying to defeat Republican candidates for office.

Five years ago the Democrats tried to use the Granges for the same purpose, but the attempt was a failure. They seem to have been more successful this year.

There is being circulated broadcast throughout the county a document purporting to have the endorsement of Pomona Grange, the county organization, dealing with the report of Comptroller Glynn regarding county affairs. This report is signed by G. A. Rappole, whose antagonism to the Republican organization of this county is well-known; John F. Hartson, one of the most rabid Democrats in the county, and Raymond Cooper, Prohibition candidate for School Commissioner. These men were appointed for the purpose of presenting just such a report as was made —a report which is unfair, biased, and made for the purpose of furnishing capital for the Democratic party and the candidates of that party; and there is reason to believe that not a single member of this committee had anything to do with the preparation of the report; that the work was done by some other person or persons. The manner in which it is compiled, the arrangement of the document, is not such as a layman would prepare, but savors more of the trained mind of a lawyer presenting a weak case in the best possible light. It is safe to say that all Messrs. Rappole, Hartson and Cooper had to do with the report was to present it after receiving it from the hands of those who had prepared it.

At the special meeting of the Board of Supervisors, held in June, W. W. Rounds, the Democratic Supervisor of the town of Oswego, presented a resolution demanding that the Board of Supervisors direct the county attorney to bring actions for the recovery of fees alleged to have been illegally paid to the coroners and sheriffs. No mention was made of the fees received by County Treasurer Moore and criticised in the Comptroller's report. The resolution was not adopted for the reason that none of the Supervisors had copies of the report or knew what it contained. While not a copy of the report had been sent to a single Republican in the count the Comptroller had mailed thousands of them to Democrats for partisan purposes, the expense of the printing and postage being borne by the State. The purpose of deferring consideration of the foregoing resolution was to give the members of the Board of Supervisors an opportunity to examine the report and ascertain what it contained, and this was done with the distinct understanding that the matter would be taken up at the regular session to be held in November, and such action taken as deemed proper. A resolution to that effect was offered by Supervisor Ferry of Richland and adopted.

No doubt there has been looseness in the methods of doing business by the Board of Supervisors for many years past. The report of the Comptroller states that it is a matter of growth. That it really originated from the unlawful, pernicious and unwarranted practice of County Treasurer Moore in paying unaudited claims, is not doubted. The Board of Supervisors will take the matter up at the regular session, and if it is discovered that moneys have been unlawfully obtained from the county, it will be the duty of the Board, through its County Attorney, to bring actions to recover the money alleged to have been unlawfully obtained, and such action will undoubtedly be begun.

Can it be said by any fair-minded man that District Attorney W. B Baker, the Republican candidate for County Judge, is in any way responsible for the condition of affairs found in the Comptroller's report? But it is claimed that he omitted to investigate the charges before the Grand Jury. The Rappole-Hartson-Cooper report charges him with this neglect.

In January, when the Grand Jury was in session, the experts sent here by the Comptroller—whom, it must be remembered, is a Democratic State official—had not completed its work. Mr. Baker was promised that as soon as the report was filed with the Comptroller that he would be furnished with a copy. The report was filed March 24. Mr. Baker wrote two letters to the Comptroller, asking that a copy of the report be furnished him; that the Grand Jury was to convene in May and he wanted time to examine the report and prepare to present the evidence. The Grand Jury convened May 4 at Pulaski, twenty-five miles away from the office where the records necessary to use are kept, and Mr. Baker received the report on Saturday, May 2. He did not have the least time to examine the report because of the delay in the Comptroller's office, yet he is now blamed by the Democrats for not doing so.

Any lawyer familiar with criminal law and the necessity for carefully preparing evidence on which to found an indictment knows that it was utterly impossible for District Attorney Baker to have obtained the evidence and formulated the proper charges and got an indictment during the May Grand Jury. What folly it would have been, as some Democrats are claiming could have been done, to have left the Comptroller's report with the Grand Jury and then walked out and depended on the Grand Jury to make the investigation and say whether the matters contained in it were criminal or not. Men who have served on Grand Juries know that such a thing would be impossible yet the Democrats are claiming that the District Attorney could have done this.

It is the first time in his official career as District Attorney that Mr. Baker has been charged with laxity. He would not now be so charged were it not for the political and partisan effect; charges made by irresponsible persons who have no conception of the duties of the District Attorney's office.

The report of Comptroller Glynn will be taken up by the Grand Jury which is now in session in Oswego and every charge will be thoroughly investigated and such report made as in the opinion of that body, based upon the evidence, is deemed warranted.

The taxpayers of this county should know that while it may be comparatively easy to obtain an indictment, yet to convict the defendants, competent and satisfactory evidence must be produced, otherwise an acquital is sure to follow and a large expense made without any beneficial result. The expense of holding a court in this county is about $100 a day and we doubt if the taxpayers want a long list of trials unless there is some chance of securing a conviction.

Had Messrs. Rappole, Hartson and Cooper intended to be fair and impartial in their report they would have investigated the matter more thoroughly on which they reported and would have secured all the facts. It can not be accepted that the great body of Grangers in this county will stand for the manner in which their organization is being used for political purposes by the Democrats to defeat Republican candidates for office and that this report, which the Democrats are making so much of, will result in a thorough investigation of the affairs of the grange and that those who have allied themselves with the Democrats and sought to use the Grange for their partisan purposes will be properly disciplined.

TAFT LABOR'S FRIEND

Rendered Valuable Service to Railroad Men.

THE TOLEDO-ANN ARBOR CASE

Advice Given in Judge Taft's Decision Adopted by the Railway Brotherhoods—Democratic Politicians Use Trickery to Deceive the Toilers.

The members of the various brotherhoods connected with the great railroad systems of the country are generally regarded as possessing more than the average degree of intelligence. Their callings and the obligations springing from those callings make the possession by them of a high order of intelligence indispensable.

Notwithstanding this fact the same system of absurd falsehood is relied on to deceive and trick them into withdrawing their support from the Republican party that is in general use by Democratic politicians to influence even the commonest and most ignorant of the unskilled laborers of the country.

One form which this system of trickery most frequently takes is that of hinting at what terrible things William H. Taft did against labor organization and its members while he was on the bench.

The one official act and declaration of Judge Taft which is being used in that way on railroad men is his decision in what is known as the Toledo-Ann Arbor case. Yet in that case through his decision Judge Taft rendered an actual, tangible and really invaluable service to the cause of labor organization. His advice given to labor organizations in that case has been generally adopted by the various brotherhoods and their members. One of the rules of a great labor organization, the Brotherhood of Engineers, which was the cause of the trouble (rule 12) has long since been voluntarily dropped as being contrary to the best interests of both the public and the organization itself.

More than all that, Judge Taft's decision in the Toledo-Ann Arbor case contains as good, broad and sound labor doctrine as ever found its way into print.

Now, what was that Toledo-Ann Arbos case? Most enlightened railroad men know all about it. Many of them, particularly the younger generation of them, do not.

A strike of locomotive engineers prevailed on the Toledo, Ann Arbor and North Michigan railway. One of the rules of the brotherhood (rule 12) required in substance that when so ordered by the head of the organization the men of the brotherhood or other roads should refuse to handle the cars of the road on which the strike prevailed.

This rule was a dangerous one. It probably never should have been adopted. The attempt to enforce it in this case brought eight or ten railroads into court. They sought protection against what on its face was at least an unwise policy for any body of men to adopt and involved in operation a possible stoppage of the carrying commerce of the entire country.

It was a case of sympathetic strike. And the sympathetic strike stands today, from choice, repudiated by all responsible organizations of laboring people and their members.

The principal outcome of that Ann Arbor case was that the right of employees to leave their employment whenever dissatisfied with its conditions was fixed beyond all possible future question and some admirable advice given to the members of the organization, to which they have faithfully lived up, both individually and collectively, since.

"We wish to make plain if we can," said Judge Taft in his decision, "to the intelligent and generally law abiding men who compose the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, as well as to their usually conservative chief officer, what we cannot believe they appreciate—that, notwithstanding their perfect organization and their charitable, temperance and other elevating and most useful purposes, the existence and enforcement of rule 12 under their organic law make the whole brotherhood a criminal conspiracy against the laws of the country."

That the rendering of this decision by Judge Taft was, then, in result an enduring service to all railroad men instead of embodying anything conflicting with their rights and privileges before the law must appear plain to any ordinary man. If there still remained any doubt on that score it would be removed by the reflection that the rules laid down by Judge Taft in that case are now made a part of the contracts and agreements of all great railroad brotherhoods.

President Roosevelt on Taft's Judicial Record.

Mr. Taft's record as a judge makes the whole country his debtor. His actions and decisions are part of the great traditions of the bench. They guaranteed and set forth in striking fashion the rights of the general public as against the selfish interests of any class, whether of capitalists or of laborers.

A Question the New Bryan Has Not Answered.

If you were president and were called on to exercise your discretion affirmatively to maintain the parity between gold and silver, what would you do?—Judge Taft to Mr. Bryan.

Mr. Taft can be trusted to exact justice from the railroads for the very reason that he can be trusted to do justice to the railroads.

Monkeys Like Scrapping.

"Monkeys are in a class by themselves," said the circus man. "If one of them has red hair he is sure to be a dandy scrapper. The best fighter is always the leader. They hang together and bow and scrape before the boss, just like a good many people. Monkeys with red faces and flat heads will whip the life out of those smaller than they are, but will run like the wind when it comes to an even break. A monkey riot is a funny spectacle. Even in the same cage you will find groups herded together as if there was some class distinction and the lines were drawn tightly. If two of the big ones come together in a row the others generally stand off and let them have it out, but if any of the little ones get to scrapping then the father and mother are apt to mix in, and the next step is a general row. We separate them by turning on the hose and punish them by locking up the den so that they cannot get any peanuts from the crowd and hold back their meals. This plan puts them on their good behavior for awhile at least. The monkey likes to eat and likes to be noticed."

Cheese in the Middle Ages.

Cheese must have been a rather dear or scarce article of food in 1502, for it is recorded in the "Black Books" of the Honorable Society of Lincoln's Inn that at Easter term, 1502, it was "agreed by the governors and benchers this term that if any one of the society shall hereafter cut cheese immoderately at the time of dinner or supper or shall give cheese to any servant or to any other or shall carry it away from the table at any time he shall pay 4 pence for each offense. The butlers of the society shall present such defaulters weekly under pain of expulsion from office."—Law Times.

"Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our Waking a Deaf Person.

"To waken a deaf person who wishes to be called at a certain hour is about the hardest proposition a hotel clerk runs up against," said a member of that genial fraternity. "To ring the telephone is useless because the man couldn't hear if you rang until doomsday. Knocking, for the same reason, is equally futile. Now and then a guest who has lost his hearing suggests that he leave his door open all night so we can walk right in and shake him, but even though he does appear to be a dead game sport there are so many chances of somebody else less guileless than ourselves walking in ahead of us that we cannot consent to that. So far the only satisfactory way found for waking a deaf lodger is to tie a string to his wrist, pass the string through the keyhole and then tug away at it at the appointed time. That method, however, is rather primitive. It seems to me that the man who can patent a harmless artistic device for waking the deaf is sure of fame and fortune, not to mention the gratitude of hotel clerks."—New York Sun.

More Than Enough Is Too Much.

To maintain health, a mature man or woman needs just enough food to repair the waste and supply energy and body heat. The habitual consumption of more food than is necessary for these purposes is the prime cause of stomach troubles, rheumatism and disorders of the kidneys. If troubled with indigestion, revise your diet, let reason and not appetite control and take a few doses of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and you will soon be all right again. Greatest Danger to Swimmers.

"It isn't cramp," said a life guard. "that carries off so many good swimmers. After all, what is a leg or arm cramp? Couldn't a good swimmer easily turn on his back and float till the attack departed? No, cramp won't account for the strange seizures that in a twinkling turn a very fish of a swimmer into a helpless, speechless, drowning paralytic. What accounts for this business is water inhaling. A swimmer inhales spray through the nostrils, it passes through the pharynx, behind the epiglottis or windpipe guard and so down into the windpipe. The result is nearly certain death. Swallowing water does you no harm, but breathing it may kill you. How to avoid accidentally breathing it, though, that is a question nobody seems able to answer."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The menace in the present state campaign is in the Murphy-Conners gang gaining control of the state administration. Mr. Chanler is personally a good man, but his nomination was dictated by Murphy, Conners and McCarren.

Why Colds Are Dangerous.

Because you have contracted ordinary colds and recovered from them without treatment of any kind, do not for a moment imagine that colds are not dangerous. Everyone knows that pneumonia and chronic catarrh have their origin in a common cold. Consumption is not caused by a cold but the cold prepares the system for the reception and development of the germs that would not otherwise have found lodgment. It is the same with all infectious diseases. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough are much more likely to be contracted when the child has a cold. You will see from this that more real danger lurks in a cold that in any other of the common ailments. The easiest and quickest way to cure a cold is to take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The many remarkable cures effected by this preparation have made it a staple article of trade over a large part of the world. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

The Mullahs of India.

A mullah, or, as it is more properly written, moilah, is a title given in India and throughout the east generally to a religious leader of any description. Thus the sultan of Turkey is a moilah, because he is the supreme head of the moslem world. And there are hundreds of others. To most of the more conspicuous among them we prefix the adjective "mad." This, however, must not be taken to mean that they are insane, the word being used rather in its oriental significance of "inspired." The person of the moilah is sacred. Not even the mighty Habibullah himself would care to lay a sacrilegious finger on one of these saintly personages. If he were to venture such an unheard of thing, vengeance would surely overtake him. For it is the cardinal principle of the Ulima—as the mollahs are collectively termed—that an injury purposely caused to one of their number can only be atoned for by the death of the individual inflicting it.

For Chronic Diarrhoea.

"While in the army in 1863 I was taken with chronic diarrhoea," says George M. Felton of South Gibson, Pa. "I have since tried many remedies but without any permanent relief, until Mr. A. W. CHANLER'S BETRAYAL.

Hearst's Candidate Accuses Democratic Nominee of Selling Out.

Clarence Shearn, the Hearst candidate for governor of New York, charges his political patron's former running mate, Mr. Chanler, with having sold his political birthright to the Democratic bosses. In his speech at Cooper Union the other night Mr. Shearn, in speaking of the Democratic nominee, said:

"There is just one thing that he has done that stands out in the public mind. That act was turning his back on his friends and betraying the principles of the party of his adoption, when, for the tempting prize of governorship, as Mr. Hearst has said, he sold his political birthright to Conners and Murphy.

"A man who would betray his party to gain a nomination is not the kind of man who would refuse to betray the people for further personal advantage.

"Who will be the potent forces in his administration if he wins? For him to be nominated required the consent of three men, and only three, Conners, Murphy and McCarren—Conners, a vulgar fathead, according to McCarren; McCarren, a red light man, according to Murphy, and Murphy, a contemptible liar, according to McCarren."

A Model Hotel "Boots."

It was in a Dublin hotel, and as I closed the bedroom door, says a writer in the Manchester Guardian, I noticed that the end of one of my boot laces was inside the room, the boot to which it was attached having been placed as usual outside. When I awoke next morning the boot lace end was still there, and I opened the door expecting to find that the boots had not been cleaned, but I was wrong. A very careful hotel servant, a very model among "boots," had found the lace tightly gripped by the door and rather than disturb me had carefully removed it from the lace holes and carried away the boot. Presently I heard a quiet noise outside the door. The model boots had brought my boots back again and was industriously relacing that one which he had unlaced.

The Andromeda Nebula.

One of the most astonishing objects in the heavens, especially when photographed, is the great nebula in the constellation Andromeda, which is visible as a misty speck to the naked eye. It has long puzzled astronomers, because while its structure—a series of vast rings surrounding a central mass—suggests a gaseous constitution, its spectrum is continuous, resembling that of the sun. It has been suggested that it may be composed of stars constituting a universe external to ours. Recent studies of its parallax, however, indicate that it is nearer to us than some of the well known stars, such as Capella, and Mr. J. Ellard Gore, the English astronomer, points out that if the Andromeda nebula were assumed to be an external universe, having a diameter comparable with that of the Milky way, its mass would be forty million million million times the mass of the sun. This is regarded as incredible and so may be taken as an additional argument in favor of the view that this nebula is a member of our system.—Youth's Companion.

A Curious Superstition.

There is a curious superstition common to Shetlanders and Cingalese. How islanders so wide apart—some 15,000 miles—managed to adopt each other's views one does not know, but here is the fact. The rice cultivators of Ceylon and the fishermen of Shetland resemble each other in one or two rather remarkable points. They refrain from speaking of the implements of their calling by their names. They call them something else, by names known only to themselves. The reason is that if the evil spirit were to think that they were speaking of spades and rakes or of nets and hooks he would be tempted to damage them or even to appropriate them. The train of thought is the same with both races: "There is an evil spirit always on the lookout for opportunities of doing mischief. He even hears what we say. If we let him understand that we are talking about our implements and tools, we shall direct his attention to them and shall suggest to him a way of doing an injury. Therefore we will agree to call a boat or a spade by some fancy name known only to ourselves."

Concerning the question of publicity of campaign funds, Mr. Bryan's contention that it is better to make the contributions public before the election seems a sound one. We are not sufficiently convinced, however, that the vote of the mass of Americans are on the auction block to consider this question of great importance.—Philadelphia North American.

MINISTER Wu, the chief Chinese diplomatic representative in this country is a general favorite. He is a graduate of an American University. He speaks English perfectly and can be slangy without an accent. He can make a speech and say brilliant and humorous things. When the other Chinaman now on his way here to supplant him arrives he will grasp his own left hand with his right, kow tow and do every agreeable thing except commit hari-kari. The retirement of Wu will be a distinct loss to the Oriental are of the diplomatic circle. His successor it is said is a semi-American product also. He completed his education at Harvard. He has lived in Washington. Possibly he may play golf and bridge but he will not dance the two step. Chinamen scorn dancing except by paid dancing girls. Maybe the coming minister thinks he will be able to promote that Chinese-American alliance that some wild-cat journals have been exploiting. The present minister Wu can tell him in the best Mandarin dialect that such a thing is absurd.

ALMOST INCREDIBLE.

It seems almost incredible that the following conditions could have existed right in a civilized community with all the machinery of the Health Department, the Charities Department and humane citizens at hand. The story as told The Times is to the effect that Mr. and Mrs. Truman Sixberry, unable to live together in harmony, separated recently, he to go to Oswego, she to take employment here and their children to be placed in the Oswego Orphanage. On Thursday the children went to Oswego but upon reaching there their throats were found to be in such condition that they were refused admission and returned to Fulton where their mother was employed in a family on the west side. On Saturday Marion, the 6-year-old-daughter, became ill with diphtheria and the boarders threatened to leave so the mother took the sick child and the well ones on Saturday night to their former home in Pratt street. There was no fire in the house and nothing but an oil stove to furnish heat. On Sunday the child died with the dread disease and without the knowledge of a physician. All day children were with the family, children helped lay the little one out and proceeded immediately to school. As soon as the facts became known the houses on both sides of the river were placed under quarantine and every effort is being made to prevent the spread of the disease.

Impossible to Grant Requests.

District Attorney W. B. Baker, Republican nominee for County Judge, is in great demand as a campaign speaker throughout the county, but he finds the Grand Jury and the work attendant upon it, a great handicap in his willingnes to accommodate his friends and help the cause by his speeches. In all probability the Grand Jury will sit for two weeks, perhaps longer, as Mr. Baker is determined to clear the business of the office all up, prior to turning it over to his successor and he will also present the report of Comptroller Glynn relative to Oswego County, to the jury for consideration.

This will all take time and will make it almost impossible for Mr. Baker to pay the slightest attention to furthering his own canvass with the electors. He has so many friends, however, throughout the county that his cause will not be neglected nor permitted to suffer through his attention to the duties of his office. He is not the make-up that will allow him to neglect duty even when personal ambitions may suffer by his neglect.

Dexterville Republicans Many.

The Republican rally and pole raising at Dexterville on Saturday was well attended considering the hustle the farmers are making to close up the season's work while the fine weather prevails. Supervisor Beardsley of Granby was the master of ceremonies and he was assisted by George Burgess and many others. The honor of running the handsome Taft and Sherman banner to the pole top was accorded to Mr. John Summerville, the oldest Republican present, and lusty cheers for the National candidates and for Governor Hughes were given. Mr. Keyes D. Pierce became chairman of the gathering and introduced the speakers, Attorneys N. S. Bentley and W. B. Baker who discussed National, State and County political matters. The Granby Grangers are doing their own thinking and are not permitting the Democrats and Square Dealers to play politics with them to the disaster of the Republican ticket. The sentiment of those present at the poll raising was that Granby could be relied upon to give a majority of at least a hundred to the straight Republican ticket.

The action of some members of the Pomona Grange in playing partisan politics was freely commented upon in an unfavorable manner, the act being in direct violation of the spirit of the constitution of the Granges.

Seventy Years Young.

County Judge Merrick S. Stowell on Saturday observed his 70th birthday in so quiet a manner that none of his friends realized that it was his natal anniversary until the close of the day. The Judge says he does not feel any older than he did twenty years ago, and he enjoys hunting, fishing and the game of politics with the same zest that he did then. He is certainly a perfect proof of the statement that right living is conducive to happy longevity. The Times extends congratulations and best wishes for many, many years of usefulness and happiness.

The death of Mrs. Tuller, mother of Mrs. Samuel C. Hunter, occurred at the family home in Syracuse on Saturday. The deceased was past 90 years of age and during Mrs. Hunter's absence in Alaska Miss Margaret Green of this city had been in constant attendance upon her. Phoenix Register:—Cora Patrick, wife of H. D. Pomeroy of Herkimer, died Tuesday morning, September 29, after a long illness of chronic Bright's disease, aged forty-two years. She is survived by her husband, four sons and one daughter, her mother, and two sisters, Mrs. Harlie Brooks of New York and Miss Carrie Patrick of this village. Mrs. Pomeroy spent here girlhood here and had many friends who loved her for her many excellent qualities and womanly virtues. The funeral services were held at her late home in Herkimer and the body was brought here on the three o'clock train this afternoon and interred in the family plot. A large number of her friends were present at the burial service and the floral offerings were an indication of the high esteem in which Mrs. Pomeroy was held.

The funeral services for the late James Fearman were held from the Baptist church on Saturday afternoon. The deceased had been in his accustomed health up to 5 o'clock on Tuesday when he went to his home complaining of feeling tired. He sat on a lounge preparatory to lying down and became unconscious, not regaining consciousness before his death which ensued at 3 o'clock on Wednesday morning. The beautiful floral pieces which surrounded his casket attested to the esteem in which he was held by all who knew him. The funeral services were largely attended, the church being insufficient to accommodate all who were present. Delegations representing Hiram Lodge, F. & A. M., Neahtawanta Lodge, I. O. O. F., Canton Fulton and Fulton Lodge, of Elks, attended. The Rev. J. G. York was the officiating clergyman and interment was made in Mt. Adnah.

No false pretense has marked the career of Ely's Cream Balm. Being entirely harmless, it is not responsible like the catarrh snuffs and powders, for minds shattered by cocaine. The great virtue of Ely's Cream Balm is that it speedily and completely overcomes nasal catarrh and hay fever. Back of this statement is the testimony of thousands and reputation of many years' success. All druggists, 50c., or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren Street, New York.

The floors in the public library have been newly dressed and present a very neat appearance, this being their first since the library was opened. A cross walk in front of the library is really a necessity. Patrons cannot cross the street in rainy or bad weather without becoming mired and the floors would be in a much better condition could such a crossing be laid. New books are being added to the library all the time.

On Sunday as Mr. J. W. DUNCAN OPPOSES GOMPERS' IDEA.

James Duncan, first vice president of the American Federation of Labor and international secretary-treasurer of the Granite Cutters' International Association of America, has sent out numerous identical letters declaring the absolute independence from partisanship of the American Federation of Labor. The letter is written on the stationery of the Granite Cutters' union. Mr. Duncan is next in command of the American Federation of Labor to Mr. Gompers, and his letters are a direct repudiation of the attitude of the president of the American Federation of Labor in taking the organization into politics and exerting his influence to elect Bryan and Kern. Mr. Duncan is not advising union workingmen to vote either for Bryan or Taft, but to rely on their own judgment and to exercise their own individual preference. The letter is as follows:

Sept. 17, 1908.

My Dear Sir—Your inquiry is similar to a number of other inquiries on the same subject and therefore needs the general answer.

The labor movement of our country, in as far as the political situation is concerned, is now, as heretofore, independent of parties. Those who have given the greatest thought to the subject within the ranks of organized labor have been busy from year to year for a long time, as part of their trade unionism, teaching or at least advising organized workers to not be bound to any particular party, but to vote for the principles they believed were for the greatest good to the greatest number of all the people, and that if any person aspired to public office to deal with the aspirant upon his merits and not because of his belonging or not belonging to any particular party. The intensity of recent events has caused more activity among the organized workers, in as far as political affairs are concerned, than in the past, and we may expect as men become educated to the public needs and study the science of government they will become still more active politically.

The labor movement advises study of the different subjects and principles of the great political parties and admonishes each organized worker who is a citizen and a voter—and all should qualify as fully as possible in both ways—to cast his vote on election day in strict accordance with his conscience as to what would be the best for the whole people.

The hue and cry sent out by a portion of the public press that the labor vote was being bartered is but one of the forms of political buncombe which is used for exaggeration and to befog the public mind. The views, beliefs and inclinations of candidates for public office should in each instance be carefully scrutinized by all good citizens, and which includes all voting organized workers. Instead of simply voting for a man because he may hold certain party affiliations, and the election this year and the campaign leading up to it, as far as organized labor is concerned, will be no exception to that rule. Very truly yours.

JAMES DUNCAN.

Mack and the Campaign Fund.

Just before leaving New York for Chicago Chairman Mack of the Democratic national committee said that he had secured $300,000 from the past committee administration.

II.
What William Randolph Hearst Said In His Speech at Columbus, O., Sept. 17.

"Mr. Roosevelt prosecuted the Standard Oil, and the Standard Oil went out of the Republican party and into the Democratic party. The Democratic party welcomed it. Mr. Bryan appointed C. N. Haskell, political paymaster of the Standard Oil, to be chairman of his committee on platform. After a platform had been drawn up by Mr. Haskell which was satisfactory to the Standard Oil Mr. Bryan made Mr. Haskell treasurer of his national campaign fund to collect from the Standard Oil substantial evidence of the great monopoly's appreciation."

III.
What President Roosevelt Said.

"Governor Haskell stands high in the councils of Mr. Bryan and is the treasurer of his national campaign committee. * * * The publication of this correspondence not merely justifies in striking fashion the action of the administration, but also casts a curious side light on the attacks made upon the administration both in the Denver convention, which nominated Mr. Bryan, and in the course of Mr. Bryan's campaign."

IV.
What Haskell Said In His Telegram to Hearst on Sept. 19.

"Should this committee (of newspaper editors) find your charges sustained I shall withdraw from all connection with the present presidential campaign."

V.
What Chairman Mack Said.

"I regarded the question as to whether Taggart had turned over $300,000 to me as a joke, and my answer was intended as a joke also."

VI.
What Governor Haskell Said.
(From New York Evening Post, Sept. 22.)

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 22.—Charles N. Haskell, governor of Oklahoma and treasurer of the Democratic committee, passed through Kansas City last night, bound for his home in Oklahoma, from the east, where he has been making speeches. * * * As his train pulled out Mr. Haskell shouted, "And don't forget to say that the campaign fund is growing fine."

VII.
What Governor Haskell Did.
(From Newspapers of Sept. 26.)

Chicago, Sept. 26.—Governor Charles N. Haskell of Oklahoma resigned as treasurer of the Democratic national committee shortly after midnight after a protracted conference with Judge Wade of Iowa and Josephus Daniels, director of the Democratic publicity bureau.

HUGHES THE CAMPAIGN STAR

Greeted With Immense Enthusiasm and as a Coming President.

The demand for the services of Governor Hughes in the presidential campaign comes from every section of every state in the Union. His name and fame are as well known in the far west as in Albany or any section of the Empire State. He has been making a whirlwind tour of the middle and northwestern states, and everywhere he has been greeted with enthusiasm hardly second to that accorded Mr. Taft, the presidential candidate, himself. He is greeted as "the man who has done things," and in many instances he has been hailed as the successor to Mr. Taft in the White House.

The demand for his presence in various parts of the country has been so great that he could not fulfil the engagements in six months of constant traveling. His tour has been a succession of ovations, and everywhere it is taken for granted that he will be re-elected by an overwhelming majority. He is now making a rush through this state, but will be compelled to return to the west again. But he will insist upon devoting some of his time to the campaign in his own state.

In a speech before the Republican convention in Detroit, Mich., where there is a factional fight, he did good work for the cause of harmony by declaring, "We had a convention in New York the other day at Saratoga, and I am very glad to say that in this campaign there will be in New York a united Republican party maintaining the principles of honorable and impartial administration in the interest of all the people, seeking party credit through party performance, seeking the confidence of the people because the party represents the policies and standards which are essential to the prosperity of the commonwealth."

Speaking on national subjects, the governor said: "If we are to have genuine progress we must have at the head of the nation discriminating judgment, not just honesty of aim. We must have analytical power, steadiness and soundness of conviction. The nation will not go far unless the nation has a steady head. That is the issue in this campaign. And we present for the head of the nation a man of rare equipment, a steady man, to whom we can safely intrust the progress of the country—William H. Taft."

Speaking of the Bryan plan of guaranteeing dishonesty at the expense of honesty, known as "bank deposit guaranty," the governor said: "We want, before we have a guaranty for our deposits, to have the deposits. A policy which is framed against business and that makes it difficult to get deposits cannot be helped by a guaranty of deposits. Already in Oklahoma adventurers are taking advantage of the guaranty law to open banks and entrap the unwary. It is unfair to propose to saddle upon prudent and conservative banks the losses of imprudent banks over which they have no control."

There is no American institution that Bryan at some time has not desired to destroy.

Comprehensive Reply to Bryan.

The people shall, have, does, had was and will ruleth.—Boston Transcript.

"Mr. Taft is an old line Republican," says Colonel Watterson, head of the Bryan publicity bureau. The colonel is doing good work for the other side.

DEMOCRATS FEAR DEMOCRATIC RULE.

Taxpayers Cheated of Millions In One City.

The danger of delivering the state over to the looting of the Murphy-Conners gang of plunderers through the election of Mr. Chanler, whose nomination for the governorship was dictated by them at Rochester, has alarmed even the Democratic press of the state as well as the conservative voters of that party. This danger is not confined solely to the $300,000,000 worth of contracts involved in the barge canal and good roads appropriations, but in many other directions.

The most influential Democratic newspapers openly charge that the Rochester convention was controlled by Murphy and Conners in the interest of Thomas F. Ryan, and this charge has been further confirmed by Democratic sources through the exposure of the holding up of $30,000,000 in back taxes in New York city alone in the interest of Ryan and his public service corporations. This latest exposure is one of the most sensational made since the election of the Democratic state ticket outside of the governor two years ago.

Daniel F. Cohalan is Tammany Leader Murphy's legal adviser. After the election of Attorney General Jackson Murphy demanded that his adviser be made one of the attorney general's deputies and that he be assigned to the collection of the delinquent taxes that had been piling up against the big corporations for years. After years of litigation the laws authorizing the corporation taxes had been upheld by the state court of appeals and the United States supreme court, which made it clear sailing for Mr. Cohalan. The hands of his Republican predecessors had been tied by legal proceedings. But the records show that Mr. Cohalan has done absolutely nothing in the way of collecting the enormous arrearages of taxes due from the corporations controlled by Mr. Ryan.

Comptroller Metz, who lives in Brooklyn and is consequently not under the political domination of Boss Murphy, has sent to the printer a list of arrearages and declares that there is no reason why the collections should not be made in the case of the Ryan corporations, as they are against more humble taxpayers. To emphasize this point the comptroller has had the corporation arrearages placed at the head of the catalogue.

The law under which Mr. Cohalan might act if he were told to do so by Boss Murphy declares that the attorney general has the power to proceed against corporations that neglect to pay their taxes in the supreme court and that the court may sequestrate the property of any corporation for the purpose of satisfying taxes in arrears. To "sequestrate" in this instance means that the entire property of a delinquent corporation may be seized and held until the profits have paid the taxes demanded. But Mr. Cohalan has not taken a single step toward the collection of the millions due from the Ryan companies. The Democrats who have made this exposure publicly give the following explanation for the deputy attorney general's inactivity:

"Because Cohalan was ordered by Murphy to loaf on the job; because Ryan controls Murphy, and there never was any intention of forcing the collection of unpaid taxes from the favored creditors of the city."

The state taxpayers may well ask themselves this question: "If Mr. Chanler, who was nominated at the dictation of Murphy and Conners, is elected, will the same method be followed in protecting the big corporations throughout the state as against the small taxpayer?"

Coronets.

The coronet of a duke consists of alternate crosses and leaves, the leaves being a representation of the leaves of the parsley plant. The princes of the blood royal also wear a similar crown. The state headgear of a marquis consists of a diadem surrounded by flowers and pearls placed alternately. An earl, however, has neither flowers nor leaves surmounting his circlet, but only points rising, each with a pearl on the top. A viscount has neither flowers nor points, but only the plain circlet adorned with pearls, which, regardless of number, are placed on the crown itself. A baron has only six pearls on the golden border, not raised, to distinguish him from an earl, and the number of pearls render his diadem distinct from that of a viscount.

CLERGY INDORSE TAFT

Class Him as Highest Type of Christian Gentleman.

FREQUENT HIS HEADQUARTERS

Declare He Is Broad Minded and Represents Ideals of Best Statesmanship—A Bishop's Opinion of the Republican Nominee.

"Because he is the highest type of the Christian gentleman."

This is the way in which I heard the pastor of a Methodist church in southern Illinois end an argument with a layman on the train coming over here from St. Louis, says the Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat in a dispatch to his paper from Cincinnati. The dispatch continues: The layman, paying due respect to the cloth of his opponent, was trying to convince him that he should not support Mr. Taft for the presidency and instead should vote for his Democratic opponent. The churchman defended the principles of the Republican party and, as indicated, defended the man for whom he said he expected to vote from his personal standpoint of a churchman, "because he is the highest type of a Christian gentleman."

It gave me a new idea about Mr. Taft. It seemed to answer some of the criticisms I had heard of the Republican candidate and his creed. In recent years the Democratic candidate has interlarded his well paid Chautauqua lectures with Sunday sermons before religious and semireligious societies. It seems that he has made the most of this influence in this campaign, and I was curious to discover on my arrival here whether there was support from the church and semireligious elements in the country for the Republican nominee.

My arrival in this connection could not have been better timed. As I entered the office of Mr. Taft's private secretary Friday I saw Bishop J. C. Hartzell of the Methodist Episcopal church emerging from a conference with Mr. Taft. The bishop, I knew, has episcopal supervision over the work of his great church in Africa. He has been so engaged for the past twelve years and has met and formed the acquaintance of many leading men not only in Africa, but in Europe and America. His acquaintance and influence within the Methodist church are second to those of few men, as he was for fifteen years an officer of the society which founded and now maintains a system of institutions of learning among both white and colored people in the southern states. He came to induce Mr. Taft to make a speech in Chicago before a society of which the bishop's son, Rev. M. C. Hartzell, is president.

It seemed odd to attempt to interview a churchman of his prominence on a political question at the headquarters of the Republican candidate, but I asked him for his view of Mr. Taft and the support of him by Christian people. He answered very readily:

"The American people are to be congratulated upon the fact that whether Mr. Taft or Mr. Bryan is elected president of the United States they will have a man at the head of the nation who is not only clean in moral character, but whose pen and speech and example are always for the best ideals of our civilization as represented in the teachings of the Christian church."

The bishop thought for a moment and then continued: "On some theological points I differ from both. As a good Presbyterian I suppose Mr. Bryan assents to the doctrine of 'divine decrees,' which teach that from all eternity it has been fixed who should be saved and who should be lost. I do not so read Scriptures. Mr. Taft, I understand, is one of the Edward Everett Hale type, believing that Christ was a divinely perfect man whose precepts and life on earth are the key to man's salvation in time and eternity. With the church I believe that in that perfect man dwelt the divine nature."

Applying his discussion in a practical way, Bishop Hartzell continued: "Which of these men I shall vote for will not be decided by their religious beliefs, but what they are as men and by the principles and policies they stand for in the administration of the government. I believe that in acting upon this view, as an American citizen, I am in harmony with the spirit and purpose of the founders of our republic, who put into the constitution that there should be 'no religious test as to qualifications to any office or public trust under the United States.' My conviction is that the future safety of the nation depends very largely upon our people heeding that constitutional prohibition. Our nation owes much in moral character, statesmanship, literature, art and religion to those who have not been in strict harmony with some of the dogmas of the church. The days of the inquisition are past."

Secretary Root on Tariff Wars.

Threatened tariff wars between the United States and Germany and the United States and France have been averted by commercial agreements under the power conferred upon the president in the third section of the Dingley tariff act.

Perhaps the Bryan managers display such fondness for campaign rainbows because they dream of the traditional pots of gold at their end.

AGAINST CORPORATIONS.

Judge Taft's Decision In the Narramore Personal Injury Case.

If men who labor come to know Mr. Taft and study what he has done for their interests they will wonder how there could be any sincerity in the attempt by the Democratic party to prejudice labor against him.

Take the Narramore personal injury case in Ohio, which when considered should forever set at rest all this manufactured talk for political effect charging Mr. Taft with being the "father of government by injunction." Judge Taft's decision in the Narramore case when he was on the bench has been of tremendous benefit to employee as against employer in Ohio in personal injury cases.

The facts of the Narramore case are these: Early in 1899 Narramore was a brakeman on the Big Four road. One day while at work his foot caught in an unlocked frog. A train came along, and he was maimed for life. The railroad refused to do anything for him and his wife and children dependent upon him for support. Narramore sought the aid of the courts.

Ohio law held that the frog should not have been left open and courts generally held that an employee, knowing that his employer was in the habit of disobeying a law intended for the employee's protection, by continuing at work assumed the risks of the employment. The judge before whom the case was tried promptly dismissed the complaint.

On appeal the case reached the United States court of appeals and came before Judge Taft. Judson Harmon argued very masterfully for the railroad, but the Republican candidate for president went squarely against Ohio court precedents and of courts in many other parts of the country in rendering a decision in favor of Narramore. In his decision Judge Taft said:

"The intention of the Ohio legislature was to protect the employees of railways from injury from a frequent source of danger by compelling the railway company to adopt a well known safety device. And, although an employee impliedly waives a compliance with the statute and agrees to assume the risk from unblocked frogs and switches by continuing in the service without complaint, this court will not recognize or enforce such agreement. The imposition of a penalty for the violation of a statute does not exclude other means of enforcement, and to permit the company to avail itself of such an assumption of risk by its employees is in effect to enable it to nullify a penal statute and is against public policy."

Judge Taft's decision still stands as the law in federal courts. When the common pleas court in Cleveland took an opposite stand in 1903 the Ohio legislature in the spring of 1904 passed a law which made Judge Taft's decision one of the laws of Ohio. Who shall estimate the service that Judge Taft performed for all who labor in dangerous employment by his decision in the Narramore case, by which he made the law on the side of those who work?

The decision in the Narramore case was against gigantic corporate interests and in the face of Ohio supreme court decisions, but Judge Taft found a way to justice through the meshes of the law skilfully drawn to do incalculable service for all time to those who labor. His record on the bench is not one requiring explanation, but understanding, to see its convincing justness and fairness. In all this talk for the purpose of creating misguided prejudice there is not a Democrat in the land who has said that any of his decisions were wrong.

In all his career Judge Taft by deeds has shown the broadest sympathy for all who labor. No man will go further than he in efforts in their behalf, but he is not indulging in cheap talk of the Democratic type of hoodwinking by mere promises and misrepresentations to catch a vote.

WORLD BLAMES BRYAN.

Says He Must Have Been Familiar With Haskell's Record.

[From the New York World, Sept. 27.]

The main fault to be found with Governor Haskell's resignation as treasurer of the Democratic national committee is that it came a week too late.

Haskell should have been forced out at once, and Mr. Bryan should never have challenged Mr. Roosevelt to prove the Hearst charges or any other charges against the Oklahoma governor. Mr. Bryan must have known Haskell's record when he assumed personal responsibility for the man. If he did not it was because he had chosen to be "a fugitive from information." It was inevitable that the moment Mr. Roosevelt succeeded in making an issue of Haskell's record the Democratic organization would be compelled to drop him. The attempt to defend him was a sorry political blunder.

President Gompers and the Democratic Party.

President Samuel Gompers has allied himself with Bryan and the Democratic party.

Has he acted wisely?

The majority of the Democrats in the national house of representatives come from the south.

The south is an enemy of union labor and believes in child labor.

Some southern states have no laws regulating the hours of labor for women and children, and some have regulations that are not enforced.

What does Gompers expect from a party dominated by the south?

What benefit can the rank and file of labor receive by following President Gompers politically?—Wage Earner.

TAFT AND CONSTRUCTION or BRYAN AND DESTRUCTION?

"The Blood is The Life."

Science has never gone beyond the above simple statement of scripture. But it has illuminated that statement and given it a meaning ever broadening with the increasing breadth of knowledge. When the blood is "bad" or impure it is not alone the body which suffers through disease. The brain is also clouded, the mind and judgement are affected, and many an evil deed or impure thought may be directly traced to the impurity of the blood. Foul, impure blood can be made pure by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It enriches and purifies the blood thereby curing pimples, blotches, eruptions and other cutaneous affections, as eczema, tetter, or salt-rheum, hives and other manifestations of impure blood.

In the cure of scrofulous swellings, enlarged glands, open eating ulcers, or old sores, the "Golden Medical Discovery" has performed the most marvelous cures. In cases of old sores, or open eating ulcers, it is well to apply to the open sores Dr. Pierce's All-Healing Salve, which possesses wonderful healing potency when used as an application to the sores in conjunction with the use of "Golden Medical Discovery" as a blood cleansing constitutional treatment. If your druggist don't happen to have the "All-Healing Salve" in stock, you can easily procure it by inclosing fifty-four cents in postage stamps to Dr. R. V. Pierce, 663 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y., and it will come to you by return post. Most druggists keep it as well as the "Golden Medical Discovery."

You can't afford to accept any medicine of unknown composition as a substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, having a complete list of ingredients in plain English on its bottle-wrapper, the same being attested as correct under oath.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels.

REPUBLICANS NEED MONEY.

Expenses Heavy, and Appeal Is Made to Individuals.

The Republican state committee has been charged with the burden of meeting the expenses of the campaign in New York state, which all agree will be one of the pivotal states, if not the deciding one, in this national election.

The legitimate expenses of the campaign are necessarily very heavy. To prosecute the campaign along the usual lines, to say nothing of any special features, involves a tremendous outlay.

Among other expenses will be the trips of Governor Hughes through the state, as he addresses the voters in so many counties. The expenses for postage if a single letter were sent to each voter in this state would be more than $30,000. The renting of halls and the transportation of campaign speakers involve a further expenditure of thousands of dollars.

To meet these expenses the Republican state committee appeals to all who are interested in the election of Taft and Hughes for assistance.

Under the law corporations may not legally contribute. Consequently the state committee must rely upon individuals who are patriotic and believe that the welfare of the country and the state would be best served by the election of Taft and Hughes for funds with which to make the campaign.

Popular reports are that the race track interests and others who are opposed to the reforms effected by Governor Hughes will contribute largely to the funds of the Democratic national and state committees. It is a time when all good citizens who are able to contribute to the slightest should do so. Even the smallest amounts will be welcome and will help the work for Taft and Hughes.

Checks should be made payable to George J. Smith, treasurer, and sent to him at Republican state headquarters, 43 West Thirty-ninth street, New York city. A personal acknowledgment will be sent to each subscriber by the treasurer of the state committee.

All the Gold IN GEORGIA Could not Buy-

Roding, Ga. August 27, 1906.
Messrs. E. C. DeWitt & Co.,
Chicago, Ills.

Gentlemen:—In 1897 I had a disease of the stomach and bowels. Some physicians told me it was Dyspepsia, some Consumption of the Lungs, others said consumption of the Bowels. One physician said I would not live until Spring, and for four long years I existed on a little boiled milk, soda biscuits, doctors' prescriptions and Dyspepsia remedies that flooded the market. I could not digest anything I ate, and in the Spring 1902 I picked up one of your Almanacs as a poor speculated Dyspepsia wreck will grasp at anything, and that Almanac happened to be my life saver. I bought a fifty cent bottle of KODOL DYSPEPSIA CURE and the benefit I received from that bottle ALL THE GOLD IN GEORGIA COULD NOT BUY. I kept on taking it and in two months I went back to my work, as a machinist, and in three months I was well and hearty. I still use a little occasionally as I find it a fine blood purifier and a good tonic.

May you live long and prosper.
Yours very truly,
C. N. CORNELL.

FALL OPENINGS.

No attempt at elaborate display was made by any of the stores last week when the formal opening of Fall and Winter Millinery and dry goods took place. The merchants appreciate the low condition of finances under which our people have been laboring for some time, and that while conditions are rapidly bettering that it will take some time for the depleted pocketbooks to recover their once plumpness, so they shaved the profit bearing margin a little closer and cut off the expense of high priced store trimmings.

At the J. C. O'Brien store the different departments were stocked, as always, with the best of the season's offerings. The newest shades are Olive green, Sapphire blue and Toupe. These with the staple blues, browns, blacks and greys were found in an immense variety of weaves at an immense range of prices—from the cheapest that are any good to the best that are woven—and in all the prices a little lower than are quoted elsewhere. Among the fabrics shown were Chiffon Broadcloth, Gitona, Bertilo, Melrose, Panama, Tosca, Epingle, Elaine, Serge, Striped Serge, Scotia, Prunella, Venetian, Storm Serge, etc. The most varied line of worsted dress fabrics carried by any house outside of the Metropolis.

Silks, dress trimmings, all desirable novelties in neck dressing, belts, collars, gloves, laces, buttons, combs, pocket books, bags, hair goods and hair ornaments were shown in quantity.

The coat and suit department proved a point of more than usual interest as the styles were most desirable, the coloring and weaves the best and the prices 25 per cent. lower than quoted in larger cities. There were cloaks and capes for the elder ladies with separate skirts especially modeled for them. Nor had the very slender and the very stout ladies been overlooked in the purchasing. There were suits and coats for the younger ladies and everything for the Miss and the younger child. A peep into this department is all the confirmation one needs of the proof of these statements.

Miss O'Hare and her trimmer, Miss Casey, broke all previous records for beautiful headwear. Beauty, becomingness, rich colorings, desirable shapes, were here found and appreciation and approval were frequently expressed. Many sales were made during the opening days.

The carpet, curtain, rug, underwear, blanket, corset, hosiery, yarn, linen and other departments were replete with good things for the housewife and the maid. Nor will they be permitted to run shy of bargains this year.

Mr. M. C. Knofler, the store decorator, did his work tastefully and well, producing a pleasing effect throughout the store by his arrangement of fabrics and colorings. His window decorations elicted a great deal of praise from both sexes and all ages, so very choice were the articles displayed and with such rare taste.

W. H. Patterson.

Decorator Holden Pratt did good work in the arranging of the interior of the W. H. Patterson store and he was the recipient of many compliments over the appearance of the interior and of the window displays. Music enlivened the hours of the afternoon and evening, proving an enjoyable feature.

In the dress goods department a choice line of woolens in fashionable weaves and colorings were shown. There was nothing lacking to make the exhibit a comprehensive one for the ladies who daily visited the counter in quest of the newest and most desirable fabrics for Fall and Winter suits, house gowns and evening gowns. The silks and dress trimmings had been purchased with the dress fabrics in mind and a delightfully harmonious selection of dress and trimmings could be made with ease here.

The millinery department was an especially interesting place to the ladies, Miss Suydam having adapted the more extreme styles seen in New York, to the more modest tastes of the Fulton ladies and she achieved a success from an artistic as well as financial standpoint, with these hats. Many millinery novelties not to be found elsewhere, were here displayed.

The cloak and suit department afforded the ladies of this vicinity an opportunity rarely found, to select choice garments at reasonable prices. Nor were the ladies slow to grasp the opportunity presented.

Carpets, rugs, curtains, portierres, linens, novelties, cottons, upholstery goods, etc., were here found in variety of price and pattern and perhaps the best line of heavy laces to be found in Fulton were exhibited here.

J. L. Jones Stores.

The first formal opening of the J. L. Jones double stores, next to the Savings Bank, was most auspicious in its success. The boys orchestra and the singing of Frank Massaro were most enjoyable, unstinted praise being bestowed upon the young musicians. Indeed, so thoroughly enjoyable were their efforts that Mr. Jones announces that every Saturday afternoon and evening the Boys Orchestra and the talented soloist, Frank Massaro, will render programs at the stores for the entertainment of the patrons.

The exhibit of Arnolds Knit Goods proved most attractive to the ladies, mothers especially taking the keenest interest in the articles offered and buying liberally. Here are always found the faddy things for mi-lady in veils, scarfs, stocks, ruches, ties, belts, bags, purses, shirt waists, separate skirts, corsets, etc. All the distinctive styles are found here and moderately priced. Nothing that the baby needs to make it sweet, clean and comfortable is missing from the dainty display and for the lad and lassie there is ease, comfort and durability in the garments shown.

In the men's and boys' furnishing department much interest was taken and many sales made, the styles, quality and prices proving eye-openers for the first visitors to this emporium. The proprietor has cause to feel that he made very good with the public at this time.

O. Henderson & Company.

This store did not offer special attractions for last week other than are daily found. But several new departments were opened and many notable additions and enlargements of the lines always carried, were noticed by the ladies who visited the store during the opening days at the other stores.

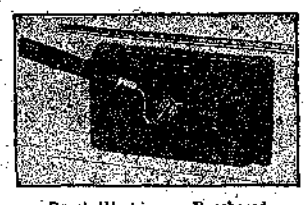
At the last meeting of Neahtawanta Lodge, No. 245, I. O. O. F., the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom, has thought proper to remove from this sphere of activity our beloved brother, Cornelius F. VanScoy, and,



Whereas, While we deplore and deeply mourn the separation from this life of our dear brother, who has been a faithful and conscientious member of Neahtawanta Lodge, No. 245, I. O. O. Be it therefore,

Resolved, That the usual emblems of mourning be displayed for the customary time within the sacred precincts of our lodge room, that a copy of these resolutions be placed upon our records and be sent to the relatives of our deceased brother and also be furnished to the city papers for publication.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Klein left to-day for Saratoga to attend the funeral services of Mrs. Klein's father, Theodore Doty. The funeral will be held to-morrow.

A Prohibition Mass Meeting will be held in the Universalist Church Friday evening, this week, to be addressed by Hon. Charles E. Newlin of Indianapolis and Marshall A. Hudson of Syracuse, candidate for Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. A. Ferguson on Monday received notification of the death of his nephew, "Jolly Zeb," a well known trick bicycle rider of Brooklyn. The remains will be brought to Fulton and placed in Mt. Adnah vault to await the coming of the young man's parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Ferguson of Long Beach, Cal.

John Casey and four children, aged 14, 10, 9 and 2 years, are ill with typhoid fever, the former four having been taken to the hospital while the babe is at home with the mother. It is thought that the father, who had been away from home working, contracted the disease and the family took it from him.

Mrs. Selah Taylor was painfully injured by being thrown from a carriage in which she and Mr. Taylor were returning from Minetto. Following their carriage was one containing their daughter and her husband. The second horse became unmanagable on account of its harness breaking as it was descending a steep hill and running into the carriage in front it upset it, throwing the occupants out. Mrs. Taylor received a bad gash on the forehead, several broken ribs and her thumb was dislocated.

At It Again.

The original mud bazoozoos, Udelle Bartlette, F. G. Spencer, the Mizens & Co., are about to start a mud slinging campaign through the county against the Republican County ticket, and District Attorney Baker in particular.

Let no one be deceived by these political tricksters. It will be found upon investigation that Republicans are not furnishing the power which makes these men go, and that the whole play is to carry Oswego county for the straight Democratic ticket this Fall. They may hang a Taft and Sherman banner from the window at their Square Deal headquarters in Oswego, but that is all that any or all of them propose to do for the ticket.

It will perhaps transpire before election day that the Democratic State, National and County committees are supplying the munitions of war to this very same aggregation.

District Attorney Successful.

On Tuesday District Attorney Baker received a telephone from Comptroller Glynn promising him that Examiner Mark Graves would reach Oswego on Monday. Mr. Baker has put the presenting of county matters to the Grand Jury over until his arrival.

MURDER AND ROBBERY

Boull Brothers Slain By Thieves Who Ransacked House In Search of Gold—Police Officials on Track of Murderer

One of the most dastardly crimes in the history of this county was committed either late Saturday night or early on Sunday morning, about five miles southeast of this city on the direct road to Phoenix in what is called the Love district.

Peter and John Boull, Germans, lived in a small house on the road named; they were unmarried and led a secluded life, doing their own housework and working day by day for the neighboring farmers. The Boulls owned about four acres of ground and four cows. The men were peaceable and inoffensive, but owing to their well-known frugal habits, it was thought that they had accumulated money and that a considerable amount was concealed in the house—that, at least, was the supposition and which undoubtedly led to the commission of the crime.

Charles Morgan, a neighboring farmer, had engaged John Boull to assist him in threshing on Monday morning, but as he did not put in an appearance on Monday, Morgan went to the Boull home on Tuesday morning at 6 o'clock and finding the storm and inside doors open about an inch, peered in and was startled to see a pool of blood on the floor. He did not pursue his investigations farther, but hurried back home and calling to his assistance his cousin, Emmet Morgan, they retraced their steps to the Boull house, and being satisfied that a crime had been committed, called Coroner Marsh on telephone, informing him of their suspicions.

Coroner Marsh summoned Drs. Bacon and Hall and hurried to the scene of the crime. The worst fears of the coroner were soon realized, and after fastening the door of the house and placing a guard there, he notified Chief of Police Ross and Sheriff Hilton. The 9:39 a. m. train from Oswego brought Sheriff Hilton and Assistant District Attorney Colony to Fulton. An automobile, with Mr. Ray Loveless as chauffer and the whole outfit complete with Photographer Langdon, was soon speeding toward the scene of the murder and a most thorough investigation was begun.

The room in which the bodies were found was evidently used as a living room; it was about 10 x 8 feet in dimensions and contained an ordinary cooking stove, table and kitchen utensils. The bodies lay side by side. Peter, the eldest brother, was bound around the ankles and loins with a clothes line; a red bandana handkerchief, which had evidently been used as a gag, was saturated with blood, and lay under Peter's right arm. In the struggle the unfortunate man had evidently worked his hands loose and had torn it from his face; a piece of wood also lay alongside, which was covered with blood. The head of the victim, which lay almost under the stove in about the center of the room, bore an ugly gash in the face and forehead.

The body of his brother John was alongside, but his head was toward the south window of the room. He was not bound like his brother, but a deep gash in his face and head, had ended his life. The lower part of his face looked as if a cat or rats had feasted on the gruesome object. Both bodies were fully clothed. An axe bespattered with blood, which the neighbors stated belonged to the brothers, lay alongside the bodies, bearing evidence that it had been the instrument used in the execution of the dastardly crime.

A small room adjoining the living room was used as a bedroom. The mattress was ripped, the clothes scattered in every way, but no blood stains were visible. A small closet at the side of the room was also disordered. To all appearances the murderer or murderers had searched everything for money, which they evidently believed was hidden in the bedroom.

An empty pocket book, jack knife and one cent were found on the floor in front of the door by Chief Ross.

No one had seen the brothers alive after Saturday night. John registered in Phoenix on Saturday afternoon. The cattle were penned up all day on Sunday and Monday and were released by Mr. Morgan on Tuesday morning, so that the crime must have been committed, as before stated, either on Saturday night or early Sunday morning.

The storm and outside door leading to the living room had not been forced open. Evidently whoever committed the crime must have been on at least friendly terms with the unfortunate men and had probably been invited into the house. When the crime was discovered both doors were open and unlocked.

A hurried post mortem examination was held by the physicians, when a gun shot wound was discovered on the body of John, the bullet entering the left shoulder, going down into the chest of the victim. Peter had also been shot in the back, the wound being under the right shoulder-blade. The clothes of each were powder-burned, showing that the revolver, which was a 32 calibre, must have been held close to the bodies of the victims.

Albert Patterson, living a short distance up the road, had stopped at the house on Sunday. He had borrowed an overcoat the week before and had left it on the wall in front of the house. His wife was with him at the time and both had noticed that the shades were down and the outer door was a little ajar. Beyond this nothing is known.

Suspicions were aroused about an Italian who had been on friendly terms with the Boulls. Another rumor, it is alleged, was that the life of one of the brothers had been threatened by a nephew who had come here from Germany.

The police officials of the city and county, including Captain Dempsey, are on a keen hunt for the criminal or criminals, and they are confident they will soon be captured.

SURROGATE'S COURT.

Letters of administration have have been issued to Elizabeth Pearman on the estate of her husband, James Pearman. The estate is valued at $4,000 real and $4,000 personal.

Letters have been issued to Albert Pomeroy on the estate of Louis Pomeroy who died on Sept. 24. The estate is valued at $2,000 real and $600 personal.

Objections to George L. Montague serving as executor of the estate of Electa S. Boardman, late of Fulton, were filed in Surrogate's Court to-day by J. Nell Boardman, of Syracuse, son of the deceased. The objections recite that Mr. Montague's circumstances are not such as to afford adequate security to the plaintiff who is a grandson of Mrs. Boardman and her sole heir. The objections also charge, that Mr. Montague and Emma Westfall, brother and sister of Mrs. Boardman, have entered into a conspiracy to deprive Mr. Boardman of his just proportion of the estate. It is alleged that they, acting together for the benefit of both, drew money out of the Syracuse Savings Bank and put it in the Fulton Savings Bank, also that Mr. Montague has removed personal property from the house and that it will be necessary to begin civil damages to recover it. The property is valued at $2,000 and $1,900 personal and the matter was adjourned until next Monday.

PROHIBITIONISTS LOSE.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has given the Prohibition party a great setback when the Oswego county case instituted by C. E. Pitts to have the Prohibition party recognized in the election boards of the towns of Boylston and Sandy Creek were decided against the Prohibitionists. These cases were appealed from a decision of Justice Andrews and his decision was affirmed by the Appellate Division.

In these two towns the Prohibitionists received more votes than the Democrats and therefore claimed that they should receive their share of the election officers while the Democrats be ousted from the places. Judge Andrews holds that it was the State and not the town vote that entitled the party to places on election boards and held that the Democratic members of the board should be allowed to sit.

They will be at home after October 20th No. 833 Oneida street, Fulton. Herald. [Mr. Castor is a member of the barge canal field force in this city and a very popular young man with his friends. Congratulations are extended the young couple.]

Charles W. Taft Popular.

Charles W. Taft, Republican nominee for Sheriff is proving one of the most popular candidates upon the county ticket. He is making a personal canvass of the county and is meeting with the most cordial reception from Republican and Democrats as well. The foolish, childish tales being circulated about the county regarding Mr. Taft are leaving him unscorched as upon investigation they are proven utterly without foundation in truth, he not even having been chairman of the Board of Supervisors during the years designated nor a member of either of the finance boards.

FULTON AND THE TARIFF

How Any Attempt at Tinkering By the Democrats Will Affect the Wage-earners in This City.

Forty-five per cent of the residents of Fulton are wage earners. This is a greater percentage of workers than can be shown by any other city in the State. This fact proves that we are a substantial manufacturing community. Fulton is prominent in its product of worsted goods, news, wrapping, tissue and roofing papers; its shot guns, buthchers' tools, paper machinery, canned goods, chocolate, and a variety of other commodities and every wage earner would be affected by the removal of the tariff from these products.

The Democratic platform reads: "WE DEMAND THE IMMEDIATE REPEAL of the tariff on wood pulp, print paper and the products of the forest."

The Republican platform proposes minimum and maximum schedules, the latter being intended "to meet discriminations by foreign countries against American goods entering their market." This feature of the tariff would not be available in case Canada should continue or extend her discrimination against this country in connection with the exporting of pulp wood. Therefore it would be safer to frame the paper and pulp schedule with the particular end in view of meeting Canadian efforts to transplant the industry from the United States to its own borders.

We would like to see in our tariff an "anti-dumping" provision such as Canada has, which practically makes it impossible for foreign manufacturers to sell their surplus in her market at lower prices than those prevailing at home.

The Democratic aim is to keep down the price of paper irrespective of the welfare of the paper making industry or of the importance of this industry in the employment of capital and labor, in the development of its natural resources, in the support of allied industries and in the traffic it affords to transportation companies.

Besides upwards of 4,000,000 tons of annual product, the paper mills furnish freight in the way of raw materials, supplies, etc., to the common carriers of the country, roughly estimated at four tons for every ton of product, or 20,000,000 tons of freight annually. They consume annually not less than 3,000,000 tons of domestic coal and sutain a large number of establishments which manufacture wholly or to a large extent machinery and supplies used only in paper mills. They furnish employment directly to nearly 100,000 operatives in the manufacturing plants, and to probably 50,000 in the woods, besides indirectly supporting the labor entering into the manufacture of the machinery and supplies which they purchase. It has been estimated that for every dollar which the consumer pays for paper SEVEN CENTS goes into the common wage-fund of the country. Paper manufacturers in many sections of the country have been the pioneers, stimulating the building of railroads to new points, building up thriving villages, and even cities, and utilizing water powers that had previously gone to waste, for which there might not be any other demand for years to come. In 1905, 43 per cent. of all the water power developed in the United States was used by paper and pulp mills.

The industry furnishes one of the most valuable uses to which certain kinds of wood may be put. Timber that has a value on the stump of, say $4, by the application of American labor and the use of American materials is converted into a product worth from $40 to $100, according

ANOTHER LIE NAILED.

The Times on Monday received from Deputy Sheriff Frank W. White of Pulaski, the following communication which denies absolutely the statements made on circulars which are being distributed throughout the county for political purposes and which are being paid for by Democratic funds:

Pulaski, N. Y.
Oct. 10, 1908.

Editor Times:—The statement issued by D. P. Morehouse and others that Mr. C. W. Taft, Republican candidate for sheriff, is under contract, if elected, to appoint me deputy and jailer at Pulaski.

In justice to Mr. Taft and myself, I desire through the columns of your paper, to state that I have never asked for the appointment either directly or through my friends, and that Mr. Taft has never promised it to me, and furthermore, I am not a candidate for the position.

A Bryan Shout.

"Protection is robbery!" shouted the Democratic party. "Out out all the protection to American workingmen!" shouts Mr. Bryan and enact "a tariff for revenue only." And then he has the monumental gall to turn around and ask the workingmen to contribute to "the cause."—Rochester Post-Express.

FULTON AND THE TARIFF

How Any Attempt at Tinkering By the Democrats Will Affect the Wage-earners in This City.

to the kind of paper for which it is used. All these facts, and many more which might be adduced, serve to demonstrate the seriousness of taking a step that would surely check the growth of the industry, if not partially ruin it.

We have as our neighbor on the north a country which has at least equal natural advantages for making some kinds of paper, where without doubt the industry would have reached much larger proportions but for the fact that our duty upon paper and pulp has given to the United States manufacturer a slight advantage in supplying our market. The result is we not only have an abundant supply, but the industry as well.

Has the effect been to increase the price of paper in the United States? On the contrary, the price has, with slight fluctuations, gone steadily downward. Better news paper, for example, is furnished today at 2 1-4 cents per pound than was furnished twenty-five years ago for from 6 to 8 cents. The cheapening of paper has in turn increased the demand enormously, but the increase in the capacity of our mills has never failed to keep pace with the requirements of publishers and other consumers. The normal condition, in fact, has been one of over-production.

Being assured by the existence of the tariff that the natural increase in demand in this rapidly growing country would inure to the benefit of domestic manufacturers, capital has been readily available. Only in a country where practically an unlimited demand for its product was assured could the scale of manufacture have reached such proportions as it has in this country. Throughout all the processes of manufacture of pulp and paper larger units prevail here than in any other country, except to the extent that American machines, ideas and methods have been appropriated elsewhere. Our pulp machines, our paper machines, and our plants are larger than in any country in the world. Thus to the conservation of our market is directly traceable the cheapening of production, resulting in lower prices, ALTHOUGH WE PAY HIGHER WAGES than are paid in the paper mills of any other country, two or three times those in European countries and considerably ohigher than in Canada.

If the duty is removed we must either force down wages in this country or transfer a large part of the industry to Canada. It would seem that this industry had justified its claim for future protection by past performance.

A change in the tariff will not only affect our paper industries, but every other industry in our city as well. If the products of foreign countries, where labor is cheap—in some countries 37 cents per day is high wages for average labor—are allowed to pour into the United States, it would be ridiculous to suppose that American industries could continue to pay American wages and survive. The Republican nominee for President, W. H. Taft, in his speech at Cincinatti truthfully said in part:

"What is the history of Mr. Bryan? It is from beginning to end a record of failures on public questions. We find him first in Congress in the second administration of Mr. Cleveland, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and most active in formulating the provisions of the Gorman-Wilson tariff bill. After five months' debate it passed both houses and came to Mr. Cleveland in such a shape that he denounced it as a piece of perfidy. It levelled the industries of this country to the ground. It threw out of employment wage earners. It destroyed all business profit. Farm products, for lack of a market, fell to a point never so low in forty years. Coxey's army marched from the West to Washington to protest against a government under which such things were possible."

The Times does not believe that the workingmen of Fulton desire a recurrence of those days when skilled mechanics went about our streets offering to work at anything at any price to keep their families from starvation. When many of our larger industries were driven almost to the wall because there was no demand for their products—saw total annihilation for this city and for all other manufacturing centers pending unless some relief came. And when that relief came it was from a Republican administration: and that medium was a protective tariff. Now, once again, the working man and his employers are to be asked to decide which of two political paths looks the most alluring to him. One—the Democratic path—leads to the silent whistle, the stilled machinery, the soup-house and the suffering for the very necessities for himself and his dependent ones. The other—the Republican path—leads to prosperity, to good wages, to a stable market for their products and to a snug bank account as a result of permanent employment.

The younger electors—the first voters—should ask their elders who passed through the last period of Democratic history, to relate their experiences.

Every voter in Fulton should give the subject of his vote this Fall his earnest attention and use his best endeavor to secure the election of William H. Taft, who stands for the protection of our industries and for the welfare of labor.

William J. Bryan says that "the unemployed will elect me." If the unemployed do elect him in November their present number will be augmented by such an army in the four years of privation, suffering and business stagnation in his administration, that four years hence the election of a Republican president will be practically unanimous.

A BOOMERANG FOR CHANLER.

His Speech of Acceptance Makes Enemies.

DEFEAT FREELY PREDICTED.

Democratic Nominee Surrenders to Bosses, Who Are Said to Have Dictated His Policy—Catches Backing of the Wall Street and Race Track Gamblers by Declaring For "Personal Liberty"—Party Organs Turn Him Down With Embarrassing Questions.

It is the belief among politicians of all denominations and shades of partisanship that the speech of acceptance of the Democratic nominee, Lewis S. Chanler, spells his overwhelming defeat. The two Democratic newspapers of New York that have been trying to support him practically turn him down. The independent members of his party declare that he has surrendered to the bosses, and the boss controlled element is furious at him because of a rebuke administered to Boss Conners by Mr. Chanler in a preface to his set speech for betraying the contents of his speech the day before it was delivered.

The leading Democratic newspaper calls on Mr. Chanler to read Governor Hughes' speech of acceptance, compare it with his own and then ask himself this question: "Why should the people of New York turn Charles E. Hughes out of office in order to make Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler governor?"

Mr. Chanler's speech bears the earmarks of boss dictation from beginning to end. He pledges himself to seek "the aid and advice of every Democrat of prominence." He makes a bid for the support of the gambling element by taking a slap at Governor Hughes' crusade against the race track gamblers and declaring for "personal liberty." In fact, the only newspapers in New York city that supported Mr. Chanler two years ago now charge him with being backed by the money and influence of the gamblers. He ignores the call of the conservative Democrats to place himself on record against Wall street gambling, and it is known that Wall street is raising a large fund for his campaign.

He not only accepts the Rochester platform, that was framed by Conners and Murphy in the interest of Ryan and the other big trust looters, but he accepts Conners and Murphy as well. He evades every single issue of the campaign in the way of recommending legislation in behalf of the people and makes no specific pledge or promise. He passes over every issue made by Governor Hughes for the good of all the people with glittering generalities and platitudes. He even goes back on the pledges and declarations for reform made during his term as lieutenant governor and practically repudiates the only record of affirmative action made during the past two years when he stood with Governor Hughes in the latter's battle against the race track thieves, for his reference to "personal liberty" is taken to mean an appeal to the men and their followers who were put out of business by the passage of the anti race track gambling bills.

Mr. Chanler swallowed the Rochester platform plank relating to the awful "extravagance" of the Hughes administration. How would he curtail this extravagance? Would he cut down the appropriations made for charity, that was one of the biggest items? Would be cut off the appropriation protecting human life at railroad crosings? Would be cut out the appropriation for good roads, which amounts to nearly a hundred millions, or would he abolish the public service commissions and allow Conners and Murphy to deal directly with the big corporations in accordance with the plan of the "good old days?" These are a few of the questions that are already being fired at the Democratic nominee.

The only criticism attempted by Mr. Chanler of the Republican party and the administration of Governor Hughes is that the governor is opposed to the bosses of his party and that "a house divided against itself cannot stand." Although he is known to have been in sympathy with the public service commissions, he climbs on the Conners-Murphy platform, dictated by the public service trusts and looters, by declaring that he favors "doing away with what is familiarly known as 'government by commission.'" As these commissions were created to stand between the people and the plunderers and to protect them against extortionate rates of all kinds, they have the full indorsement of the great mass of the voters irrespective of party, and it is believed that this declaration alone would be sufficient to defeat Mr. Chanler.

The speech was received with jubilation by the Republicans and with dismay by the conservative Democrats. And the boss ruled element of the party is also mad because of the lecture read Chairman Conners, whether it was made as a gallery play or not. Conners and Murphy left Mr. Chanler's home in a huff without even saying goodby to their host.

Governor Hughes has adopted this text in his whirlwind tour of the western states in the interest of the presidential ticket: "Words against deeds." The American people believe in who have done things.

Newspaper Man Who Heads the Republican Publicity Bureau.

It is a strenuous task which has been assumed by Richard V. Oulahan, who was recently chosen as head of the publicity bureau established by the Republican national committee to supply the country with information about the issues of the campaign and the candidates who represent Republican principles. To organize a publicity department of this kind so as to meet the demands of the hour in an up to date manner requires knowledge and executive capacity in just the proper combination, and a man who fulfills these specifications is not found every day. Mr. Oulahan's experience has been along the lines to fit him for such duties. He is forty years of age and has been in newspaper work at the national capital for the last twenty years. For ten years he was at the head of the New York Sun's Washington bureau, and prior to that he was with the United Press association. He knows nearly every politician of importance in the country, is exceedingly popular and is well versed in the political questions of the day. His writings on international subjects are well known.

You are just starting upon six months of dark days and long evenings. You will use your eyes constantly under very trying conditions—either dim or artificial light most of the time, and the eye strain will be correspondingly great.

Right now is when you should have your eyes examined to ascertain whether or not they are defective; whether or not you have any trouble that properly fittted glasses will correct.

Wisdom Mr. Taft's Strong Point.

There is a degree of inflexibility about Mr. Taft when he is right, and he knows he is right, and when the other man is wrong and inclined to be aggressive about it, that is apt to surprise those who seek to take advantage of his boundless good nature. He believes in discipline and he knows how to enforce it. When he was first placed in charge of the Panama Canal he received a delegation of steam shovelers who wanted more pay. They deserved it, and Mr. Taft favored giving it to them if possible, but they committed a mistake. They went at it the wrong way. Their attitude was not conciliatory, and finally the spokesman said:

"We'll strike right away if you don't agree to give us this raise."

"Let me understand this correctly," said Mr. Taft. "Do you mean to say that you will strike now; that you want that raise before I have had a chance to go into the merits of your claim and decide, and that you will strike if you don't get it to-day?"

"That's right," was the retort.

"Thank you," said Mr. Taft. "Then, gentlemen, will you kindly step out to my secretary and hand him your resignations?"

The men retreated They didn't, want to resign and they didn't, and finally the matter was adjusted on a basis which all agreed was just and proper.

Moral: Advertise

There was a man in our town,
And he was wondrous wise,
When business got a little dull
He'd always advertise.

And when his goods were all sold out,
With all his might and main
He'd hustle 'round and get some more,
And advertise again.

And now that man is very rich,
And he has just retired,
While the firms that didn't advertise
Have, most of them, expired!

Why Colds Are Dangerous.

Because you have contracted ordinary colds and recovered from them without treatment of any kind, do not for a moment imagine that colds are not dangerous. Everyone knows that pneumonia and chronic catarrh have their origin in a common cold. Consumption is not caused by a cold but the cold prepares the system for the reception and development of the germs that would not otherwise have found lodgment. It is the same with all infectious diseases. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough are much more likely to be contracted when the child has a cold. You will see from this that more real danger lurks in a cold that in any other of the common ailments. The easiest and quickest way to cure a cold is to take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The many remarkable cures effected by this preparation have made it a staple article of trade over a large part of the world. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

PERHAPS you don't like October. Some don't. To enjoy it the right toggery—the right haberdashery is necessary. October is transition, neither winter or summer. It is a nice problem to secure apparel of the right weight in texture and the appropriate tone in color—but the problem is solved here.

We take account of times and seasons. Be seasonable, that's all. Clad in our special October haberdashery, you will be in tune with the time, and can smile—even if the skies don't.

Justice DeAngellis Exonerates Baker.

The Oswego County Democrats, under their new leader, D. P. Morehouse, are spending all kinds of money and all kinds of energy in an effort to defeat District Attorney Baker for the County Judgeship. One of their strongest appeals to the electors is a statement that Mr. Baker was negligent of duty in that he did not bring the report of Comptroller Glynn to the attention of the Grand Jury in May, a few days after Mr. Baker received from the Comptroller a copy of his report.

This bone of Democratic contention, having reached the attention of Justice DeAngellis, a man who ranks high as a man and as an interpreter of law, who was the Judge presiding at the May Term of Court during which the May Grand Jury sat, wrote Mr. Baker on Saturday that he might give to the public at his pleasure a fact connected with the question under discussion which Mr. Baker had not felt was within his province to divulge,—namely, that it was acting under the advice of Justice DeAngellis, in whose judgment he had implicit confidence, when he did not present the case to the May Grand Jury. Justice DeAngellis knew how exhaustive a study must be made of the report of the Comptroller before District Attorney Baker could intelligently, and without injustice to any one, present it to the Grand Jury. And Judge DeAngellis frankly told Mr. Baker that he did not deem it wise nor expedient to present the report to the jury at the term, which only lasted for seven days, and during which a vast amount of work was done.

This statement of Justice DeAngellis completely exonerates Mr. Baker from the libelous charges of neglect of duty, failure to conduct his office right, etc., which are being peddled throughout the county at Democratic expense, and it also leaves Attorney Morehouse and his legal conferees in a rather peculiar position as applied to their knowledge of law and legal requirements. Had Mr. Baker plunged wildly into this most important matter that has confronted any District Attorney since Oswego county came into existence, the self-same disappointed politicians now attacking him for the one thing would have as willingly—as furiously—have attacked him for the reverse.

Protection Needed.

Our local merchants have a well-grounded complaint that our city ordinances afford them no protection against foreign concerns coming into the city, renting a store or room for a few days or weeks, gathering in all the ready cash in sight and then moving on to other fields and pastures greener. No license fee is exacted from any foreigner to protect our home merchants-men who pay taxes, rental and wages during the entire year.

The itinerant merchant in his wandering from place to place, may scoop up untold hundreds of dollars from the residents of this vicinity who do not appreciate value for the price paid, and decamp, leaving goods in many homes of such inferior quality that a home merchant would not offer it to these very same people, should they chance to become his patrons. The goods go to pieces upon the purchasers hands, their money is gone and again the home merchant is asked to extend credit for a recessity

An outsider may, by paying a dollar a day, sell on the streets whatever he pleases and as much as he can find purchasers for. If the goods were worth the price he asked he would not be travelling around to dispose of them. He would find a market in his own town, providing a sufficiently high license was demanded from outsiders.

The city fathers should give this matter serious consideration and provide some relief from existing conditions. Cut down the cartmens license and those of other resident workingmen; lower the water rental and make the foreigner who comes to Fulton for revenue only, pay the difference.

Fulton for outsiders has been the rule for years. The Times enters a plea of Fulton for Fultonians.

New hats and millinery novelties each week are added to the up-to-date stock of millinery at Young's.

Miss May Squires and Miss Katharine Rowlans of Northwood, N. Y., have returned home after a week's visit at B. E Holly's

Mrs. James Curran and nephew, Master Lawrence A. Conley, have returned to their home in Ossining, after a two months' visit with Mrs. Curran's father, Mr. Edward Conley

The first meeting of the Fortnightly Club will be held on Friday evening, Oct. 16, at the residence of the Rev. Mr. Olmstead, for the election of officers and the arrangement of the Winter's work. A full attendance is requested.

Mrs. C. M. Haven has removed to this city from Chicago, Ill., and will make her home at least for the Winter months with her father and brother, the Messrs. Partrick, in Cayuga street.

Mr. Gilbert L. Wells reached the City of Mexico on Monday enroute to a southern State where he will engage in the hard lumber business. It is told that from one mahogany tree in one of the forests on the property owned by the company in which Mr. Wells is interested, sufficient round table tops were cut to net the company $12,000.

The Democrats of the First School district of Oswego county, consisting of Hannibal, Granby, Oswego Town, Volney, Scriba and New Haven, have nominated Miss Carrie B. Hale for the office of School Commissioner. Miss Hale is a native of Volney and a graduate of Fulton High School. For two years she taught district school near her home, but for the past three years she has been a teacher in the Minetto High School. Miss Hale is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Hale of Volney.

Daughters of the D. A. R.

Kayendatsyona Chapter, D. A. R., met at the home of Miss Alice Schenck on Monday, Oct. 12, nearly every active member being present and each manifesting a renewed interest in the work. The year book presents many new features and reflects much credit on the chairman of that committee as well as Mr. A. P. Bradt for the very neat press work. Among the many items of business, arrangements were made for a food sale to be held on Saturday, Oct. 17, in the store of the Fulton Hardware Co. on First street. The chapter expects to have a benefit entertainment in the near future which will be in the line of a patriotic education, with the hope of augmenting the fund for the Revolutionary Soldiers Monument which is growing more rapidly each year. Some communications were read from parties in distant cities, proving the interest being taken in this branch of patriotic work. One substantial check from a distinguished descendant of one of these patriots, whose name will appear on the monument, was not only very encouraging but suggests the thought that if every living descendant of those more than twenty-five heroes would avail themselves of the privilege of aiding in this work, "lest we forget" to whom we are indebted for "The Star Spangled Banner" and who gave their lives that the United States of America might be a possibility, how much sooner the date might be fixed for the dedication of this memorial.

A graphic picture of every day life in the old Dutch homes in the Mohawk Valley, as well as a most excellent paper on the life of Sir William Johnson prepared by Miss E. J. Osgood was very instructive as well as entertaining. After light refreshments and a social hour the meeting adjourned to Nov. 9, at the home of Mrs. Grant.

TAFT AND COLOR LINE

None In Philippines While He Was Governor.

TREATED NATIVES AS EQUALS

Filipinos Welcomed to His Table and to Other Social Functions—Rich and Poor Alike Were the Objects of His Solicitude.

After Mr. Taft assumed charge of the Philippines there was no color line so far as he was concerned. There had been one for centuries. The Spaniards introduced it. The Spaniard would not permit even a suggestion of social equality between him and the Filipinos, although in intelligence, breeding, education and attributes which constitute manliness the upper class Filipino is fully on a par with the Spaniard or American.

Mr. Taft's first care in the prosecution of his "policy of attraction" in the Philippines was to demolish the color line. Leading Filipinos were bidden to dinner and to other social affairs at his home, and their wives and daughters were asked to stand on the receiving line with Mrs. Taft. At dinners Mr. Taft invariably took in the leading Filipino woman. He did not marry: himself in so doing, either, for the Filipino women are bright, vivacious and possessed of a keen sense of humor, which last quality alone would insure their getting on well with Mr. Taft. So far as he could Mr. Taft became one of the people. A man who accompanied him on his first tour of the islands tells of having seen Mr. Taft in close conference with a young Filipino lawyer, who, when he quit Mr. Taft's side, left with him a piece of paper covered with diagrams. The secret came out the next night at the ball, which invariably formed a conspicuous part of the ceremonious entertainments. The ball was opened with the rigadon, or Spanish quadrille. It is a more complicated dance than our quadrille, and the figures are not called out. Mr. Taft, to the surprise of his companions, stepped off with the wife of the presidente and led her through the quadrille without a mistake. He kept his eyes fairly closely glued to a bit of paper. It was the same that the lawyer had left him and upon which he had drawn a diagram of the figures of the rigadon for the instruction of the governor.

In his office and at all times Mr. Taft received the poorest as well as the richest and most influential Filipino. An American contractor tells of having waited in Mr. Taft's anteroom for an hour while he explained to an old Filipino woman what measures she should take to obtain a balance of $1 which, she asserted, the government owed her on an unsettled claim. Had he not met the Filipinos on such grounds of equality Mr. Taft could never have so successfully striven with the problem in the Philippines. He had to have the help of the Filipinos, and he obtained it by making friends of them.

RESTORING CONFIDENCE.

Country Impressed With Utterances of Judge Taft.

Judge Taft has steadily grown on the country since his nomination. His judicial poise, his sobriety of utterance and his attitude of deep responsibility have all impressed the country. They are what is wanted to give confidence in a period of doubt and depression.

S. M. Felton, president of the Mexican Central railroad, who was one of Mr. Taft's visitors last week, said in an interview: "In my judgment the election of Mr. Taft is of the utmost importance to railroad men as a class, because it means the restoration of confidence, which is necessary before we can hope for a permanent revival of business. The great trouble with the railroads has been their inability to raise the necessary money with which to carry on extensions and improvements. To get this money there must be confidence on the part of the investing public, and this confidence will certainly be secured by the election of Judge Taft."

The campaign has reached the point where it is wise to make the personality of Mr. Taft known and familiar over the country. The campaign is marked by its sober discussion and the manifest movement of the great current of public opinion toward a conservative desire to see the great issues now opening handled with care, consideration and a judicial scrutiny.

Judge Taft is a man of action, combative and aggressive. He appeals to the precise conditions of the campaign. He has the qualities which draw men to him in times like these. The speechmaking campaign on which he recently entered will not only win votes by arousing public interest, but it will add to the strength of the Republican party in every doubtful state he visits by showing the people a man they can trust.

Prosperity dwells with the American people, who are not going to turn it out at the door to make way for Bryanism.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS.

Many Important Measures Enacted by the Majority.

The Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth congresses will go down in history as record breakers because of the large number of important measures enacted, measures having directly to do with the great business interests of the country and standing between the people and corporate greed and oppression. The Fifty-ninth congress opened a new era in American legislation, giving emphasis to the fact that the constitution is amply sufficient for all the needs of the people, safeguarding their interests and furnishing them ample means of protection. The Fifty-ninth congress was a Republican congress, and all the great measures enacted by it were Republican measures, originating with the Republicans and passed by Republican votes.

There is still much to be done to perfect the work begun by the Fifty-ninth congress. Experience has demonstrated that a Democratic congress cannot be depended upon to work out any great system of reform. No reform in administration or in legislation has ever come about under a Democratic regime. As at present constituted the Democratic party is made up of too many isms to be safe in handling great questions of political economy. Two great questions will soon come up for legislation—a revision of the tariff and a remodeling of our currency system. Twice since 1880 the Democrats have attempted tariff legislation, and twice the business of the country was brought to the verge of ruin and hundreds of thousands of workingmen were thrown out of employment. Twice within the last thirty years the Democratic party has set up its standard of monetary legislation. First it declared in favor of putting the printing presses to work in manufacturing greenbacks without limit and, second, by declaring for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. No evidence has been furnished that the party has recanted from its stand for fiat money. Is it safe to trust the party now?

MR. TAFT ON BANK GUARANTY.

Explodes Bryan's Pet Proposition in Speech at Minneapolis, Sept. 26.

My information with respect to the Oklahoma system is that it is developing as might be expected. I have a correspondent who is intimately acquainted with the conditions in Oklahoma. In a letter of Sept. 22, 1908, in speaking of the effect of the guaranty of deposit law, he uses the following language:

"Conditions in Oklahoma are growing worse than was expected on account of the recent decision there whereby it was decided that the bank commissioner has no right to refuse to grant a charter to parties proposing to organize a bank. As an instance, in a town of less than 500 people as many as four banks have been organized. Application is now in for the organization of a fourth bank in one town of only 470 population.

"Men whose past record proved them to be incompetent are engaging in the banking business and getting in control of banking institutions. I have knowledge of one instance where a man was engaged in business some years ago and failed. He went to another town and engaged in the same line of business in his wife's name, but conducted her affairs in such an unbusinesslike way that she failed. Some time afterward he went to Oklahoma territory and started a small state bank, but found he could not succeed and sold to other parties and left the territory. A few months ago, however, he returned and started another state bank, advertising that the depositors are secured under the state guaranty law, and after sixty days' operation he now has over $100,000 deposits. I have it from the best authority that he now proposes to start fifteen new state banks throughout the state, two of which have already been organized and one now doing business."

Bryan declared for small appropriations and for sympathy with the suffering farmer. It isn't the size, but the purpose and the honest expenditure of appropriations, that counts, and the greater the purchasing and consuming power of the rest of the commonwealth the better off is the farmer.

"Shall the people rule?" It is a curious outgrowth of democracy that Bryanism should mean the quintessence of paternalism. If all the Bryan theories—abandoned, present and possible—could be put into practice, the United States would be Russianized.

The greater the prosperity of the wage earner the more jocund the farmer, whose produce the wage earner buys. The Republican party is the tried and proved friend of each.

The greatest productiveness and therefore the greatest reward of organized labor are directly in line with the policies of the Republican party.

The gospel of Bryanism regarding those who dissent from its dogmas begins, "With charity for none, with malice toward all," etc.

FAIRNESS OF TAFT.

Scrupulous in His Desire to Render Exact Justice.

REVIEWS OF COURTS MARTIAL

Refused to Approve or Disapprove Findings of Military Tribunals Until He Had Carefully Read the Evidence—A Case in Point.

When he was secretary of war Mr. Taft never unreservedly trusted to the judgment of courts martial upon offending officers to determine his action in approving or disapproving the findings of these military tribunals. He was scrupulous in insisting that all the evidence should be laid before him to be passed upon and weighed by him personally. No pressure of work could be too severe or lack of time too evident to prevent him from satisfying himself that exact justice had been done the accused, according to the evidence and the facts. One evening long after the rest of the departments had closed Mr. Taft, at the end of an unusually hard day, took up a bundle of papers relating to the case of a lieutenant who was sentenced to dismissal. The chief of staff was there, and he suggested, with a view to saving Mr. Taft work: "I think that you will not need to go deeper into the case if you read the conclusion of the judge advocate's memorandum and my memorandum. The man is a bad egg. The army will be better off without him."

"No," said the secretary; "I always prefer to go through these cases myself."

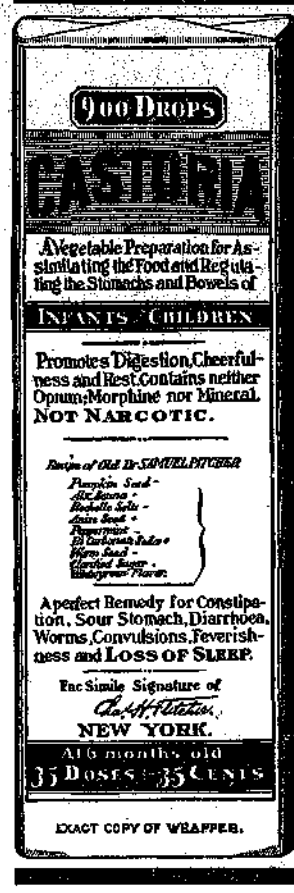
The officer had failed to pay his debts. Carefully and slowly Mr. Taft read the evidence through to the end. When he finished he looked up and exclaimed, "But he lied about it!" Rapidly he dictated a note to be sent, with the papers, to the president and continued as he laid them aside: "He tried, as he admits, to lie out of it. I think the sentence should be carried out. There might have been some excuse for the other thing, but there could be none for the lie. It is time to stop this tendency among the officers who get into trouble. It must be discouraged for the honor of the service.

"I want to go over the rest of these myself," said he, indicating another pile of court martial papers. "I have done that sort of thing all my life, and I'd rather do it than take the judgment of some one else."

BIG AND BROAD.

Methodists Indorse the Candidacy of William H. Taft.

An unqualified approval of William H. Taft as a presidential candidate was given by the Rev. James Coote, D. D., pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in Thompsonville, Conn., when he called at the headquarters of the Republican national committee. For years Dr. Coote has taken a prominent part in Methodist circles in New England and in New York, having been a presiding elder and occupied leading pulpits.



"No man has spoken so earnestly in favor of the great work that Christian missions are doing in the Philippines, in China and in the orient generally as Mr. Taft," said Mr. Coote. "In an address at Yale university he emphasized that idea particularly, and on several other occasions he spoke enthusiastically of the good being done by aggressive Christian evangelicalism in the different countries which he visited. It seems to me that no evangelical Christian should hesitate to support Judge Taft. He is just as big and broad in his religious ideas as he is in his physical proportions. He can be trusted to do what is fair and right with all denominations.

"I am convinced that what Judge Taft has said on religious matters was not for political effect. He has gone hither and thither doing the work before him, and at the same time his keen observation and his sense of fairness have led him repeatedly to give expression to his appreciation of the work of Christian missions everywhere.

"In Thompsonville is one of the largest carpet manufacturing plants in the world," continued Dr. Coote. "During the last Democratic administration that establishment was compelled to close, and the thousands of employees were thrown out of work. A very large proportion of those had to leave the town. My observation is that the people in that section of the country remember that experience and that they do not care for another administration that is likely to result so disastrously."

To oppose revision of the tariff by the believers in protection to American wage earners and industries might be to invite its revision by Democratic believers in importing the products of cheap foreign labor.

Nevertheless, friends and brethren, it must be admitted that for twelve years Mr. Bryan's voice has constantly vibrated for the native land.

For Chronic Diarrhoea.

"While in the army in 1863 I was taken with chronic diarrhoea," says George M. Felton of South Gibson, Pa. "I have since tried many remedies but without any permanent relief, until Mr. A. W. Miles, of this place, persuaded me to try Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, one bottle of which stopped it at once." For sale by E. A. Putnam.

A Moral Issue.

The Milwaukee Free Press, Senator Stephenson's newspaper, says: "The unanimous renomination of Governor Hughes is not only a great victory for that splendid American; it is a great victory for the cause of independence, fearlessness and righteousness in the administration of public office. When an official, not so much because of what he stands for as how he has stood for it, makes his renomination and re-election a moral issue centered in his own person, he is indeed a man among men. Such a man is Governor Hughes of New York."

Public ownership of the railroads would add $1,000,000,000 to the public debt, but William Jennings Bryan doesn't worry about a little thing like that.

More Than Enough Is Too Much.

To maintain health, a mature man or woman needs just enough food to repair the waste and supply energy and body heat. The habitual consumption of more food than is necessary for these purposes is the prime cause of stomach troubles, rheumatism and disorders of the kidneys. If troubled with indigestion, revise your diet, let reason and not appetite control and take a few doses of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and you will soon be all right again. What Will Mr. Chanler Do?

Not a word of adverse criticism has been said of Mr. Chanler personally by either his Republican opponents or Democratic adherents. But this is being said on all sides: "Mr. Chanler is urged by Democratic newspapers to repudiate the Rochester platform. He could not, however, repudiate the record written by his party in the state. He could not repudiate or make his repudiation good against the rule of Murphy and Conners, to whose favor he owes his nomination. He could not be a good governor without ceasing to be a Democrat."

Hughes or Tammany?

Governor Hughes was renominated by the people.

Lieutenant Governor Chanler was nominated for governor by Bosses Conners and Murphy.

If Hughes is re-elected Hughes will be governor.

If Chanler is elected Tammany will be governor.

Take your choice.—Schoharie Standard.

"Fingy" Conners in the United States senate would be a sight for gods and men and little fishes. But he says he is "goin' there" if the Democrats win this state election.

A Democratic "Indorsement."

The New York World seems to be backing the Democratic ticket with a feather duster in one hand and a blackjack in the other. It says:

Not only is the Democratic state platform silent on every one of these vital issues, but with incredible folly it assails the life of the public service commission, which alone stands between the people of this city and another looting of the traction system by Ryan and his associates when the lines pass out of the receivers' hands.

In another issue it declares:

It is a platform (the Democratic) for the protection of Wall street gamblers, for the protection of insurance criminals, for the protection of traction thieves, for the protection of Ryan-Harriman stock jobbers, for the protection of rich tax dodgers, for the protection of predatory corporations. It is a betrayal of Democratic principles. It is a betrayal of the Democratic party. It is a betrayal of the Democratic masses.

Lame Back.

This ailment is usually caused by rheumatism of the muscles of the small of the back, and is quickly cured by applying Chamberlain's Liniment two or three times a day and massaging the parts at each application. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Ward Issues Warning.

William L. Ward of Westchester county, member of the national committee, says:

I want each and every member of the Republican organization in Westchester to feel the responsibility of the situation and, regardless of any criticism which has arisen, do his best to get every vote for the entire Republican ticket. Any member of the Westchester organization who is derelict even to the slightest degree to Governor Hughes will not be entitled to be considered a regular Republican in the future.

David Bennett Hill in reply to the fervid appeal of Mr. Bryan replies that he is through with active politics and declines to sit in the game. The ex-senator always did hate to be a loser.

The silence of Mr. Chanler is becoming oppressive to the state Democracy, and the suspicion is growing that he will insist on being consistent and vote for his ideal, Mr. Hughes.

THE CLEVELAND STANDARD.

The Dead Democratic Leader Indeed Still Speaketh to the Living.

Since the last Democratic state convention one of our great leaders has passed away; but, although dead, Grover Cleveland yet speaketh both by example and precept. Who among us can be selfish or cowardly when we think of his unswerving devotion to true Democratic principles and to duty as he saw it, and who can willingly adopt a lower standard than his of patriotic service?—Ex-Judge Morgan J. O'Brien to the Democratic State Convention at Rochester.

There is fear on my part of being misunderstood in what I am about to say, but surely the fair minded man must realize when he considers my attitude toward my own party, all now a matter of immutable record, that it is prompted by a sense of simple fairness. Personally and officially I have had the opportunity of knowing many things concerning Mr. Taft that were not a matter of general knowledge, and with a keen interest I have watched his large share in the conduct of our national affairs in very recent years. His excellence as a federal judge in Cincinnati is something not to be underestimated or overemphasized, for should he come to the presidential chair the qualities which made him a judge of high ability, which I know him to have been, will be the most needful to him as president of the United States. His high ideals of honesty and of relative justice, his great capacity for severe labor and his humorous wisdom in the face of the serious problem are attributes equally valuable and commendatory to a people seeking him in whom they may repose the trust of their collective interests while they turn their increased attention to their pressing individual demands.—Grover Cleveland's Last Word to the American People.

Former Lieutenant Governor Edward F. Jones, a lifelong Democrat, who served two terms in that office with David B. Hill as governor, has created a sensation in Binghamton by declaring that he will support Governor Hughes in the present campaign.

KEEP IT UP!

MR. GOMPERS REBUKED BY TYPOGRAPHERS' CHIEF

Norman E. McPhail Declares Union Labor's Vote Cannot Be "Delivered" by Any Man or Set of Men.

"The vote of organized labor as a body will not, should not and cannot be delivered to any party or by any man or set of men." This is the declaration of Norman E. McPhail, president of the Typographical union, in a letter to Willis L. Moore, chief of the United States weather bureau. Thus another voice is added to the rising protest of union labor against the attempt of Mr. Gompers to "deliver" the vote of free American citizens.

President McPhail's letter is as follows:

"Dear Mr. Moore—Your letter of Sept. 22 has just been received and read by me, as I have today returned from a tour of some of our New England cities for our organization.

"In reply to the question you ask me, I will state that in my opinion the vote of organized labor in this country as a body will not and cannot be delivered to any one party by any one man or set of men. To allow such a thing would be suicidal to the labor movement of the country.

"Members of labor unions, as citizens, have the right and should carefully consider the platforms and promises of the different political parties and should vote as they believe the broadest and best interests of our country lie.

"There can be no objection to this from any source, and it is something which every citizen should do. To claim that any man or set of men, as has been blazoned forth in the newspapers, will deliver the vote of organized labor to any party is absurd as it is an impossibility. Sincerely yours,

"NORMAN E. M'PHAIL."

LABOR LEGISLATION.

Republican Party Aims to Conserve Interests of All the People.

Various injunction bills were considered in committee during both sessions of the Fifty-ninth and first session of the Sixtieth congresses. During the first session of the Fifty-ninth congress several bills were before the judiciary committee, and hearings were accorded and considered. It was found, however, that the labor interests of the country could not agree upon any one bill and that different labor leaders were opposed to one or the other bills under consideration.

Again, during the first session of the Sixtieth congress the judiciary committee of the house gave more time and attention to the various bills presented, but it was found that no bill could be introduced that would be satisfactory to all the labor interests and no bill upon which all members of congress could agree. This so called anti-injunction legislation is by no means a partisan matter, and so far neither Democrats nor Republicans have been able to agree among themselves to a bill that would seem to satisfy all concerned. There is no doubt, however, that in the near future some bill will be enacted into law, and when it is it will be found that it will provide protection for not only labor and capital, but for the public as well. First it must be constitutional, and then it must be of such a nature that it will not lead to disorder and riot, but will conserve the best interests of the people at large and not be drawn in the interest of either capital or labor, but for the good and protection of all.

Economic betterment, not partisan politics, is the true purpose of organized labor. Mr. Gompers has become a misleader.

REV. FRANCIS BURGETTE SHORT EXTOLS MR. TAFT.

It is striking that no one has yet declared that Bryan is a wise statesman. Those who are most anxious for his success do not urge especial fitness, but rather that he may at last have found an issue that the people will not repudiate at the polls. To return to power is the main thing of the Democratic party, no matter if it floats into office on Bryan bubbles or on any other conceivable pretext.

In pronounced contrast is the estimate that is universally expressed on Taft's equipment for the presidency. Irrespective of party, all attest to his mastery of affairs and wonderful administrative ability. The clergy are equally outspoken. Among those who called upon Mr. Taft at Cincinnati during the week was the Rev. Francis Burgette Short, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church at Salt Lake City. Discussing politics, Mr. Short said:

"Judge Taft is eminently fitted in character and practice to occupy the highest office in the land. His efforts to raise a high standard of life at home, his interest in and solicitude for nations across the sea, mark him as a man of sane visions and desire. Such a man this nation needs and requires at its head if we are to continue to hold the undivided admiration of those at home and those abroad. Such a man we must have if we would make history that is gloriously humane."

MILK PAIL IS FILLING.

Business Picking Up on Assurance of Taft's Election.

Business is becoming more active, factories are running, some full time, others nearly so; savings banks find that deposits are increasing and many new accounts are being opened. The horizon is rosy hued for the man who has goods to sell and the man who has labor to dispose of. The same conditions are reported east and west.

"The small country jobbers," writes a newspaper correspondent from Ohio, "are doing better, the railroad trains are jammed with travelers whose testimony is to the effect that things are slowly but surely righting themselves, and in the manufacturing districts there is a return to 90 per cent of the activity of a year ago."

The 100 per cent is not far off if the election of Taft shall give to manufacturers, merchants and wage earners the sense of security which attaches to impartial and efficient administration of the laws and protection from sudden changes which tend to unsettle commerce and labor and cause confusion, loss and disappointment to both.

Many patriotic Democrats frankly declare that their party has never had a leader like William Jennings Bryan. Whether this is an exultant boast or a melancholy admission is a matter of conjecture.

It is proudly contended by Bryan's advocates that he is a successful lecturer. So was the immortal Mrs. Caudle, for that matter. Yet the White House was never designed as a lyceum agency.

Of course the former United States senator who proudly boasts that he led the mob that recently lynched a negro wretch in Mississippi is solid for Bryan and the reign of law.

BRYAN HIMSELF AGAIN.

Preaches Economic Absurdities in Same Old Way.

Mr. Bryan, who started out very conservatively at the opening of the campaign, resolving evidently to get the confidence of certain editors and business men who could not stand his aforetime radicalism, has broken through the traces and given up trying to be good. His speech on the trusts at Indianapolis puts him back in his old position of advocating the destruction of anything that does not meet his views without regard to method or consequences.

As usual, he is not specific as to what means should be employed to carry out his designs. He simply in a general way wants to destroy the so called trusts, both large and small, regardless of the consequences to others engaged in similar business or of the consuming public. He tells us one day that the American people should be allowed to purchase where they can buy the cheapest, and another day he tells us that the money from the pockets of the people is flowing into the coffers of the trusts. If the latter be true it must be because the people are buying where they buy the cheapest, and if the trust made goods are the cheapest then they serve the consumer rather than injure him.

Mr. Bryan simply does not know what a trust is. Mr. Bryan does not know how to handle financial problems, industrial problems or even political problems. We have on our statute books today laws providing for the machinery to punish any illegitimate business and to remedy any inequalities or injustice. Mr. Bryan has not put forth any views showing how to improve present methods.

BRYAN AT TREASURY HELM.

How Would Business Men Regard Secretary Chosen by Him?

How would the financial community like to face a panic under a Bryan secretary of the treasury? This question goes to the heart of the degree of confidence which could be placed in a Bryan administration. Even if we had a new Bryan, sobered by the responsibility of his office, would business men feel the assurance of prompt, energetic and intelligent action to protect the public faith and save the money market from disturbance which would be looked for under a secretary of the treasury named by Mr. Taft? Business men are likely to ponder this seriously between now and November.

It is not necessary to assume that Mr. Bryan still favors opening the mints to the free coinage of silver to raise a grave doubt as to his attitude on all questions affecting the maintenance of the financial fabric of the country. Up to the convention of 1904 he would not even agree to an expression of opinion that the silver question had been sidetracked by the great output of gold, and his present associations and surroundings are such that it is doubtful if he could make any sincere declaration which would go far to establish confidence in his financial sanity.—Boston Transcript.

Colonel Henry Watterson in 1896 somewhat sneeringly described Mr. Bryan as "a boy orator." Mr. Bryan, it is fair to explain, is still an orator whose oratory retains all its boyish quality both as to extreme freshness and lack of meaning.

The supply of spellbinders may not exceed the demand this year, but it appears that spellbinding must be largely its own reward, and Bryan will get his.

Some of the Democratic prophets seem to be fairly aching to be without honor in their own country.

Do You Think For Yourself?

Or, do you open your mouth like a young bird and gulp down whatever food or medicine may be offered you?

If you are an intelligent thinking woman in need of relief from weakness, nervousness, pain and suffering, then it means much to you that there is one tried and true honest medicine, or Modern Compendium, sold by druggists for the cure of woman's ills.

The makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for the cure of weak, nervous, run-down, over-worked, debilitated, pain-racked women, knowing this medicine to be made up of ingredients, every one of which has the strongest possible indorsement of the leading and standard authorities of the several schools of practice, are perfectly willing, and in fact, are only too glad to print, as they do, the formula, or list of ingredients, of which it is composed, in plain English, on every bottle-wrapper.

The formula of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will bear the most critical examination of medical experts, for it contains no alcohol, narcotics, harmful, or habit-forming drugs, and no agent enters into it that is not highly recommended by the most advanced and leading medical teachers and authorities of their several schools of practice. These authorities recommend the ingredients of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for the cure of exactly the same ailments for which this world-famed medicine is advised.

No other medicine for woman's ills has any such professional endorsement as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has received, in the unqualified recommendation of each of its several ingredients by scores of leading medical men of all the schools of practice. Is such an endorsement not worthy of your consideration?

A booklet of ingredients, with numerous authorative profesional endorsements by the leading medical authorities of this country, will be mailed free to any one sending name and address with request for same. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

CORRUPT BOSSES WORK FOR RYAN.

Frank Declaration by a Democratic Newspaper.

The Democratic New York World, that is desperately, but evidently hopelessly, endeavoring to support the candidacy of Mr. Chanler in the contest for the governorship, printed the following frank and undoubtedly sincere editorial on the date of Sept. 28:

The Murphy-Conners state platform denounces "governing by commissions" as "a system never contemplated by the constitution." Governor Hughes showed in his speech of acceptance that the constitution itself provides for three commissions, that six commissions were created under the administration of Governor Cleveland and that half a dozen others were created under the administration of Governor Hill, who also recommended a gas commission and brought about a working revision of the act providing for a railroad commission.

Governor Hughes might have gone further and shown that the present public service commission law was passed unanimously by the assembly and that only six Democrats voted against it in the senate.

What New York needs is even a stronger public service law than the one on the statute books and a more aggressive public service commission than that of the First district. Instead of going too far in controlling public service corporations through commissions, Governor Hughes' administration has not gone far enough.

The Rochester denunciation of government by commission is a Murphy-Conners fraud concocted in the financial interest of Thomas F. Ryan. If the law were repealed Ryan would proceed to loot the traction system again as soon as the lines passed out of the receivers' hands. Opposition to necessary state commissions represents no Democratic principle whatever. In this case it is neither more nor less than the effort of a crew of corrupt bosses to prostitute the Democratic party for the benefit of Thomas F. Ryan's pocketbook.

D. P. MOREHOUSE A TRAITOR TO THE REPUBLICAN PARTY

After Being Supported for Justice of the Supreme Court He Declares War on the Entire Republican Ticket and Has Joined the Democrats—Opposed to the Payment of Alleged Unlawful Bill Except for the Experts Employed by Mr. Morehouse in the Manzer Murder Case.

A new political party has been set afloat in Oswego county. The leader of this new party is David P. Morehouse of Oswego. When William Randolph Hearst found that he could not control the Democratic party, after he had been honored with the nomination for Governor, he organized a party of his own and started out to defeat the Democratic candidates. Mr. Morehouse, after he was honored with the support of this county in the judicial convention has organized a party of his own and has started out to do everything in his power to defeat the Republican ticket this Fall, from President to Coroner. Both Mr. Hearst and Mr. Morehouse call their party the "Independent." The only difference between Hearst and Morehouse is that the former is helping the Republicans and the latter the Democrats.

Mr. Morehouse has girded himself in an armour of morality and donned a mantle of purity in politics. His battle cry is "down with extravagance and the unlawful methods used in the conducting of the affairs of the county." Mr. Morehouse, being a lawyer, is a great stickler for the upholding of the law and opposed to any and all unlawful acts, especially on the part of public officials. Mr. Morehouse has issued a proclamation, signed by himself as "Chairman" in which he says this. Mr. Morehouse has been stirred up by the revelations made in the Comptroller's report, which is compiled for the purpose of being used to manufacture political ammunition for the Democrats in this county. Mr. Morehouse holds up his hands in holy horror at these revelations and backs away from them as he would from a message from hades. His sense of morality has been shocked and in his proclamation he tells all about it. Furthermore, Mr. Morehouse can no longer be identified with a party which was in power when these awful, awful things which the Comptroller's report show, and which were made possible only through the methods used in conducting the affairs of the Treasurer's office by Thomas Moore, who inaugurated the policy of paying bills which had not been audited by the Board of Supervisors. We say again that Mr. Morehouse was shocked and believing as he does that he holds a proxy from Heaven as the arbiter of the morals of the people of Oswego County he has started out to purify the community.

Mr. Morehouse is especially shocked because William B. Baker, who for the past six years has been the District Attorney of this county and who, by the way, has made the best District Attorney this county has ever had, aspires to the office of County Judge and that the Republicans of this county had the audicity to nominate him without consulting Mr. Morehouse. Mr. Morehouse does not want Mr. Baker elected to this office for which he is eminently fitted and Mr. Morehouse is blaming Mr. Baker for all the things which County Treasurer Moore did and which every official in this county has done for twenty years back although Mr. Baker was not a member of the Board of Supervisors, although he did not pay one of the unaudited bills. Mr. Morehouse is charging laxity and derelection of duty on the part of the District Attorney in not presenting the Comptroller's report to the grand jury before, although Mr. Morehouse, as a lawyer knows that there has been no opportunity for the presentation of such report and that the grand jury now in session is the first grand jury which could have considered the report since it was made by the Comptroller. Anyway Mr. Morehouse is against Mr. Baker for County Judge and a few inconsistencies one way or another make no difference if he thinks that by advancing them he will injure the candidacy of the man he wants to see go down to defeat.

As to the real cause of Mr. Morehouse's enmity toward Mr. Baker. Mr. Morehouse has been hypnotised by the green eyed monster. Mr. Morehouse is jealous of Mr. Baker and the success he has made. He is jealous of Mr. Baker because Mr. Baker has proven himself the better lawyer when they have met on common ground—the court room. Didn't Mr. Baker as prosecuting officer of the county convict three men charged with the crime of murder who Mr. Morehouse defended? Isn't that enough to make one lawyer jealous of another? Mr. Morehouse was one of the lawyers appointed by the court, and for which the county paid $500, to defend Anthony Taldeboni who murdered Frank Roberts at the Standard Oil Company's plant in Oswego. At the suggestion of Mr. Morehouse expert witnesses were called in this case and the county paid the bills which amounted to $650. The prosecution had to call experts in rebuttal at large expense, the total cost of the Taldeboni trial being $3700.

Mr. Morehouse was assigned as the attorney of record to defend Henry W. Manzer for the murder of twelve year old Cora Sweet in the town of Scriba. This was one of the most brutal murders ever committed in this county. Manzer after arrest made a full confession of his crime. The county paid Mr. Morehouse $500 for acting as the attorney. After being assigned as the attorney in the case and before the trial, Mr. Morehouse was shown the confession Manzer had made and he was also allowed to interview the physicians who had been set to watch Manzer in the jail and who had reported that the man was not insane and that an attempt to put up a defense of insanity would fail. If ever a man deserved death for his crime that man was Henry W. Manzer and no one was more shocked at the crime than was Mr. Morehouse—before he was assigned as Manzer's attorney. It will be rembered that when the prosecution put in its evidence, including the confession which Manzer had made, that Mr. Morehouse expressed himself as shocked—Mr. Morehouse is often shocked—at the horrible details which were revealed and requested that the case be adjourned. His request was granted and when the trial was resumed Mr. Morehouse had in court an array of alienist experts to prove that Manzer was insane. The prosecution was surprised, seeing that Mr. Morehouse had before the trial read the confession and had talked with the physicians who had examined and watched Manzer, and had to secure alienists to be sworn in rebuttal to the experts called by Mr. Morehouse, at a large expense to the taxpayers.

At the conclusion of the trial, when Manzer was convicted of murder in the first degree and was subsequently taken to Auburn prison where he was electrocuted, County Treasurer Thomas Moore announced that he would not pay the bills of the alienists called in by Mr. Morehouse and that there was no law which would compel him to pay the bills even though an order for their payment was made by the court. And Justice Wright would not make such an order because he could not find any law which entitled expert witnesses for the defense to be paid by the taxpayers. When the Board of Supervisors assembled later in the year Mr. Morehouse tried to have the claims audited but failed, being opposed in the attempt by District Attorney Baker. The next year he presented the claims again and spent much time lobbying with the Supervisors and although they were advised that the Board of Supervisors had no authority to pay the bills, yet they were ordered to the amount of $400 and were paid by County Treasurer Moore. Mr. Morehouse was anxious that these bills should be paid by the taxpayers of the county for he had hired the alienists on his own authority and if the county did not pay them he would have to do so out of his own pocket and the bills would eat up almost the entire $500 which he was granted by the county for defending Manzer. Mr. Morehouse is shocked when bills not authorized by law are paid by the county—when Mr. Morehouse is not personally interested in them.

The other murder case which Mr. Morehouse was unsuccessful in defending was that of Willard Battles charged with the murder of his wife in Scriba.

Mr. Morehouse has charged Mr. Baker with derelection of duty and laxity in the manner in which he has conducted the affairs of his office. If Mr. Baker does his full duty he will present the case of Mr. Morehouse and the Manzer trial bills to the grand jury now in session.

Mr. Morehouse has had judicial ambitions of his own for many years. He has aspired to fill a place on the Supreme Court bench. He has long cherished this aspiration and two years ago he went to the members of the Republican organization of this county and solicited their aid in securing the delegates. And when this was done he most profusely thanked the organization which had helped him, stating that he had not been to the expense of sending out a single letter. It will also be remembered that Mr. Morehouse was the floor leader for Justice Wright when he was seeking a renomination and that it was Mr. Morehouse who kept Judge Wright in the field and prevented him from withdrawing from the contest after he had agreed to do so and allowing another Oswego County man to be nominated. In the light of subsequent events, rumors which were whispered at the time, to the effect that Mr. Morehouse himself knew that Judge Wright could not be nominated and that he prevailed upon the Judge to stay in the field so that no other Oswego county man could get the nomination [and by so doing made it impossible, for fourteen years at least for Mr. Morehouse to get the place he coveted,] now seem plausible. Anyway when the first opportunity presented itself for Mr. Morehouse to be a candidate he was in the field seeking the support of the Republican party of this county which he has now deserted.

But Mr. Morehouse has thrown off the yoke. He is no longer looking for honors at the hands of the Republicans of this county. He has a party of his own and he is the head and front of it. Mr. Morehouse's sole object from now on until election day will be to defeat the candidates of the party which helped him.

Mr. Morehouse is now in the position where he can say to the people of this county: "Look ye, now, how holy, how pure I am; you are polluted with the touch of bossism, I am free from it."

SLANDER AND VILLIFICATION

Such Is the Campaign Now Being Waged Against the Nominees of the Republican Party In County—Attempt to Defeat State and National Tickets Will Result In Failure

The campaign of slander and villification being conducted by D. P. Morehouse of Oswego, against the candidates of the Republican party, is proving a flat failure. Mr. Morehouse is protesting against and condemning practices in connection with the administration of county affairs which he has not only condoned in the past but which he has been a party to. He claims that the Board of Supervisors have audited bills which the law does not give them any right or power to pay and is blaming the Republican party of this county because Thomas Moore, as County Treasurer, paid unaudited claims against the county amounting to something like $29,000, nearly one-quarter of this amount going to his brother, Robert Moore, of Oswego.

Mr. Morehouse does not in any way hold Mr. Moore responsible but blames the Republican party and gives this as his reason for opposing the Republican candidates.

There is no man in Oswego county, knowingly or otherwise, who is more inconsistent than is David P. Morehouse of Oswego. Mr. Morehouse says he is not opposed to District Attorney Baker personally, believes that Mr. Baker is an excellent lawyer qualified in every possible way for the office of County Judge. But Mr. Morehouse says that he is opposed to the "system," that he does not like the manner in which State Committeeman John T. Mott, Judge Stowell and others who take an active part in the affairs of the Republican party, do things. Their ways of looking after the interests of the party do not measure up to the warped, twisted and perverted ideals which Mr. Morehouse holds. He believes that with himself as leader, Udelle Bartlett and Edwin Mizen as his chief lieutenants, and backed up by Charles N. Bulger and Fred T. Cahill, the Democratic bosses, and Clarence E. Pitts, the Prohibition boss, that he could bring the Republican party to a high state of efficiency.

While Mr. Morehouse is now condemning State Committeeman Mott and Judge Stowell in the strongest possible terms, yet two years ago when he was looking for delegates from this county for the nomination of Justice of the Supreme Court, he went to both State Committeeman Mott and Judge Stowell and asked their aid and assistance and at Pulaski, when the convention was held and he was allowed to name the delegates from this county to the Judicial convention, he appreciated what Judge Stowell and District Attorney Baker had done for him so much that he made Judge Stowell the chairman of the delegation and placed Mr. Baker second on the list. At that time MR. MOREHOUSE HAD USE FOR THE "SYSTEM" WHICH HE NOW CONDEMNS SO BITTERLY AND SAW NO IMPROPRIETY IN ACCEPTING FAVORS AT ITS HAND.

In a speech at Scriba Center last week District Attorney Baker charged that Mr. Morehouse knowingly and wilfully prevailed upon the members of the Board of Supervisors in the year 1906 to audit bills for the expert witnesses called in the trial of Henry W. Manzer for murder and that he did this knowing that there was no law allowing the Board of Supervisors to pay such bills and that the expense was not chargeable to the taxpayers of the county. In 1905 Mr. Morehouse had appeared before the Board of Supervisors with these same bills and when Supervisor Smith demanded that he produce the law giving the Supervisors the power to pay the claims Mr. Morehouse had admitted that there was nothing in the law books which would warrant the payment and the bills were not paid.

That year Mr. Morehouse went so far as to tell some of the Supervisors that unless the county paid the bills that he would have to do so out of his own pocket. MR. MOREHOUSE IS NOW PUBLICLY DENOUNCING THE PAYMENT OF UNAUTHORIZED CLAIMS BY THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS, YET HE KNOWINGLY PREVAILED UPON THE BOARD TO PAY CLAIMS WHICH HE KNEW THE COUNTY HAD NO RIGHT TO PAY BECAUSE HE DID NOT WANT TO PAY THE CLAIMS OUT OF HIS OWN POCKET.

This is not the first time that Mr. Morehouse has opposed the election of Oswego county men for office. Twenty years ago, the first time Judge Wright was a candidate for office, he opposed him and a few years ago he opposed the election of John C. Davies, because, he claimed, that Mr. Davies was without experience as a trial lawyer. Yet Mr. Morehouse is advocating the election of Louis C. Rowe, the Democratic candidate for County Judge, and Mr. Rowe never tried a case in the Supreme Court unassisted.

MR. MOREHOUSE POSES AS THE CHAMPION OF THE COURTS, YET MR. MOREHOUSE IS THE ONLY LAWYER IN THIS COUNTY WHO TO-DAY STANDS ADJUDGED OF CONTEMPT OF COURT. The following order made by Justice of the Supreme Court Pardon C. Williams, now a Judge on the Appellate Division of this district, was entered Monday, October 17, 1892, and still stands on the records.

At a CIRCUIT COURT held in and for the County of Oswego, at the Court House in the City of Oswego, commencing on Monday, the 3rd day of October, 1892.

Present, Hon. Pardon C. Williams, Justice presiding.

Monday, October 17, 1892, 10 A. M.

Court convened pursuant to adjournment and ordered opened.

Present, Hon. Pardon C. Williams, Justice presiding.

In the matter of fine

Imposed upon D. P. Morehouse.

ORDERED that a fine of $10.00 be and the same is hereby imposed upon David P. Morehouse for contempt of court and that he stand committed until fine is paid.

Fine paid into court.

In Oswego city where Mr. Morehouse is best known his opposition is helping instead of injuring the candidates on the Republican ticket. When the people of the county generally begin to understand just the kind of a man Mr. Morehouse really is, it is not believed that anything he may say or do will influence a single vote.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, At the call of the Grand Master of the Universe our worthy Chevalier, James Pearman, has passed from our earthly circle to join the unending assemblage of Eternity, and

Whereas, We, his brethren, have found him ever active and zealous, ever faithful and chivalrous to his Canton and its members of this great fraternity, be it

Resolved, That we sympathize with his family in this their hour of affliction. That their loss is also our own, they mourn a devoted husband and father, we a chevalier, kind and true.

BOLI'S MURDERER STILL AT LARGE.

Coroner Marsh, Assistant District Attorney Colony, Capt. Dempsey and Sheriff Hilton have labored unceasingly since the hour that brought the murder of the Boli brothers to light, but while they have found alleged criminals and have unearthed thieves, chicken fights and gross immorality in many instances, they have failed thus far to find a clue that will lead them where they can place their hands upon the assassin or assassins. Near Pennellville, in a tumble-down shack Harrison Beeles, Frank Ault and Ada Clemens were found, and they were brought to Fulton on Monday and examined as to their affairs. Enough being discovered to warrant their being held for further questing, although the trio stoutly denied knowing anything about the murder. Ault had a 32-calibre revolver in his pocket, which had been recently fired, and when questioned about it said he had used it to shoot at a mark. Since Oct. 3, the men admit to having stolen a stove, horse blanket, a filled milk can and vegetables enough to feed the family. Beeles also admits conviction for horse, chicken and personal property stealing.

On Tuesday the trio were again examined, as were several other persons, and numerous rumors were investigated and run down, but as yet nothing directly pointing to the criminals has been secured.

Out of the horrible double murder some good will come to this community in that some of the most depraved element will be either sent to prison or driven out of the county. Rumors of a mysterious death near Phoenix have been heard. Many small events hardly noticed have been recalled and this part of the county is being covered by plain clothes men and officers, strong in their belief that hereabouts a gang of desperadoes will be run to cover. The city police force can render but scant assistance, as the matter is out of their jurisdiction, but they are co-operating as far as possible with the county officials in their efforts. Certain it is that nothing is being left undone to bring the guilty to justice.

REGISTRATION RECORD.

Fulton did not fall far behind in registration this Fall and the concensus of opinion is to the effect that above the normal majority for the straight Republican ticket will be rolled up in the several wards. The registration figures are as follows:

First Ward—361.
Second Ward—429.
Third Ward—351.
Fourth Ward—275.
Fifth Ward—491.
Sixth Ward—418.

It may be interesting to compare this year's registration with that of four years ago. In 1904 the vote by wards was as follows:

First Ward—397.
Second Ward—493.
Third Ward—325.
Fourth Ward—290.
Fifth Ward—469.
Sixth Ward—425.

In 1904 there was a total registration in this city of 2407; in 1908 there was a total registration of 2395 or a difference of 12 votes.

Mr. F. McLennan, representing the Perfect Pantry Company of St. Louis, Mo., with offices over Farley's store, has left at the Times office for a few days one of the most marvelous pieces of fungus that freaky nature ever evolved. Upon this wonder of nature Mr. McLennan has written a five stanza original poem which is indeed very creditable and decidedly timely, as it deals with the two big parties and their candidates, Taft and Bryan. The initial words of the poem reading down, "While Bryan is kicked out." Mr. McLennan highly prizes this souvenir, which he secured beyond Newton Falls in the heart of the Adirondacks in September.

Wants to Get Even.

David P. Morehouse of Oswego is opposed to the election of Frank L. Smith of Schroeppel, for Member of Assembly. The only reason that Mr. Morehouse has for opposing Mr. Smith is that in 1905 when Mr. Morehouse presented the bills for the pay of the experts for the defense in the Manzer murder trial to the Board of Supervisors, Mr. Smith opposed the payment of the bills, made Mr. Morehouse say that there was no law which warranted the supervisors paying them and the bills were not paid that year.

Mr. Morehouse wants to get even with Mr. Smith and for that reason is opposing him, seemingly taking no interest in the fact that a United States Senator is to be elected by the Legislature this year and that in case of a tie that Mr. Smith's vote may be the one to send a Republican to the upper house in Congress. Mr. Morehouse don't seem to care what becomes of the Republican party so long as he can vent his own personal spite.

County Treasurer Moore To Blame.

David P. Morehouse in his speeches is charging that Charles W. Taft, the Republican candidate for Sheriff, had full knowledge of all the bills which were paid by the county for the running of the county jails. Mr. Taft was a member of the Committee to settle Sheriff and Jailers Accounts in 1906 and was Chairman of the Board of Supervisors in 1907. The bills which were presented to the Board of Supervisors in 1906 were practically duplicates of the bills which had been presented for audit for twenty years or more prior to that time and which it had been customary for the Board of Supervisors to pay without question. The only thing the committee had to do was to see that the bills were properly footed and that there had been no overcharges. This was done. Not one of the bills paid by the county in 1907 appear in the report of Comptroller Glynn. These bills were not audited until after the experts had completed their work and were not due to be paid until March of this year.

The bills which were presented to the Board of Supervisors for audit do not by any means show the cost of running the jails of this county. By far the greater part of the expense of the jails is shown in the unaudited bills which were paid by County Treasurer Thomas Moore and which Mr. Taft never saw or knew anything about. It is in these unaudited bills where the charges for clothing, boots and shoes, rubbers, corsets, fascinators and soft soap are found. It was the "COUNTY TREASURER'S RING" made up of merchants and others who knew the inside tricks, who benefited through this loose way of conducting the county's affairs. Examine these unaudited bills which are on file in the County Clerk's office and it will be an easy matter to see who composed this "ring." Mr. Taft cannot be held responsible in any way for these bills. The only person who is responsible for them is former County Treasurer Thomas Moore whose acts and methods of conducting the taxpayers' business is being upheld by Mr. Morehouse.

Ringing the Breakfast Bell.

An American family who had experienced the difficulty of obtaining and retaining the services of a reliable kitchen girl while on a visit to Ireland became acquainted with a promising young girl and brought her back home with them.

In a few weeks she was installed in her new home and made acquainted with her new duties. Among other things she was told that it was customary when breakfast was ready to be served to ring the breakfast bell. Her "all right, mum," came in such a confident tone that her mistress gave the matter no further thought.

The following morning at 6 o'clock the family were rudely awakened by the violent ringing of the front door-bell. Thinking that a messenger must be waiting with some unusual message, the gentleman of the house did not stop to dress, but hurried down in his night robe and opened the door. The new kitchen girl awaited him, her face beaming with a beautiful smile of triumph. Bowing low, she said in her rich Irish brogue, "Breakfast is ready, sor."—Los Angeles Times.

Diamond Cutting.

It is said that before the fourteenth century no one knew how to cut and polish diamonds. They were esteemed for their marvelous hardness, but not greatly admired for beauty. There is a tradition that a journeyman jeweler in Flanders, Louis Van Berghem, discovered the art of cutting diamond with diamond. But it is probable that he only made some notable advance in the art since associations of diamond cutters had existed in France and Flanders from the fourteenth century. Louis Van Berghem's most famous achievement was the cutting and polishing of a huge diamond belonging to Charles the Bold. Charles was so delighted with the result that he rewarded the artist liberally and declared that the diamond would now serve him for a bedroom lamp. This jewel, which was found on Charles' body after the battle of Nancy, is still in existence and celebrated under the name of the Sancy diamond.—Youth's Companion.

He Gave Them Latin.

Once, before he was president, Andrew Jackson was making a political speech in some obscure campaign in a backwoods Tennessee district. His address was very well received, but somehow there did not seem to be exactly the enthusiasm wanted for the occasion. Having vainly tried to "warm up" his hearers, the general was just going to sit down when the chairman of the meeting plucked him by the coattail. "For the Lord's sake, general, give 'em some Latin!" he hurriedly whispered in the speaker's ear. "They won't think you know anything at all if you quit like this. Smith, the opposition candidate, talked Latin to 'em half the evening."

Old Hickory rose to the situation. Advancing to the edge of the platform, he extended his arm and thundered out: "E pluribus unum! Sic semper tyrannis! Habeas corpus!"

The audience roared with applause. The credit of the orator was saved, and the Jackson ticket won out in that county.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

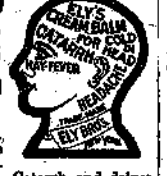
A CITY'S AWFUL EXAMPLE.

What the State May Expect Under Democratic Rule.

The Democratic New York World, that is telling Mr. Chanler that unless he immediately repudiates the bosses who nominated him he is foredoomed to defeat, indulged in some reflections the other day on the big reception that was accorded Socialist Debs. It concluded that the Socialist doctrine was impractical for the reason that "government is not likely to do more things well until it does a few things well." It went on to illustrate this point with an example of the way "government" is administered in New York city under supreme Democratic control.

"If it costs the city three times as much to operate a ferry," it says, "as it does a private corporation it would probably cost twice as much to operate a railroad. If the people of New York submit to having McClellan, Murphy and McCarren expend more than $200,000,000 of the public money a year, is there any likelihood that were the expenditure $400,000,000 the temptation to graft would be less and the administration more efficient, honest?"

Mr. Shearn's Question.



Clarence Shearn, the Hearst candidate for governor, speaking of Mr. Chanler to a large audience at Rome, said: "There is a specific question in this campaign that requires a specific answer. Mr. Chanler, will you work to destroy the leadership and control of the Democratic party by Conners and Murphy? Don't hem and haw. Don't duck and equivocate. Don't pass out generalities about slavery. Tell the public what they are entitled to know. Are you for Conners and Murphy or are you against them?"

A Spoiled Scene.

E. H. Sothern once found his wit fail him in time of need. It was in the fourth act of "The Lady of Lyons." Sothern played Claude Melnotte, and Virginia Harned was cast as Pauline. Beausant, the villain, was pursuing Pauline, and she cried loudly for help. Claude is supposed to dash to her rescue and catch the fainting Pauline in his arms. Sothern dashed on to the stage, but slipped and slid, sitting down near the footlights. Losing his presence of mind, he declaimed the line: "Look up, Pauline. There is no danger." As Virginia Harned was standing, this was, of course, an impossibility. By this time the audience was in an uproar, and when Arthur Lawrence, who played Beausant, scornfully said, "You are beneath me," the amusement of the audience knew no bounds.

D P Morehouse's Reason

David P. Morehouse is opposed to the election of District Attorney William B. Baker to the office of County Judge, Charles E. Taft for Sheriff and Frank L. Smith for Member of Assembly because Mr. Morehouse has a personal grievance against these three men and desires to "get even." District Attorney Baker convicted three of Mr. Morehouse's clients charged with murder. Two were sent to prison for long terms and one was electrocuted. Mr. Baker also opposed the payment of the bills of the experts in the Manzer murder trial and declared that there was no law which forced the taxpayers to pay such bills. Frank L. Smith, a member of the Board of Supervisors in 1905, when the bills were presented for the first time, also opposed the payment of them and succeeded in holding them up. In 1906 when Mr. Morehouse presented the bills for the second time Charles W. Taft, then a member of the Board of Supervisors, voted against their payment. All three were opposed to the payment of claims against the county not warranted by law.

MR. MOREHOUSE IS AGAINST MR. BAKER, MR. TAFT AND MR. SMITH BECAUSE THEY OPPOSED THE PAYMENT BY THE TAXPAYERS OF THIS COUNTY BILLS NOT AUTHORIZED BY LAW AND IN WHICH MR. MOREHOUSE WAS INTERESTED.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 21, 1908

The inconsistency of many Prohibitionists and church people has been made apparent this Fall by their attitude toward Governor Hughes. Many church conferences have adopted resolutions commending him for his attitude on the liquor question, gamblers and kindred topics. Yet they will, many of them, vote for Dr. Stockwell for governor, an act which in reality counts one vote for Chanler and one against Governor Hughes. There is not a sporting man in the State who will vote for Mr. Hughes. And the attitude which has won the approbation of the church folk, has driven the sporting element away from Mr. Hughes. Yet some Prohibitionists in this section will vote for Dr. Stockwell, who cannot be elected, and by thus doing they may defeat Governor Hughes and elect Chanler who stands for all that Governor Hughes does not. The Times is able to state truthfully, however, that not all of the good folks in this section will vote for Dr. Stockwell, nor for the Prohibition ticket at all, having so told a Times representative. These same folks prayed that some party would nominate a man for governor who was not a politician; who had high Christian ideals and for whom they could vote with a surety of electing him. The Republican party answered the prayer and renominated Governor Hughes. It now remains for these same people to elect him. The others will not.

Just as surely as the Mediterranean Sea is a British lake, guarded at Gibralter and at Port Said, thus enabling Great Britian through the Suez Canal to control the Indian Ocean and the Bay of Bengal, just so surely must the Pacific Ocean be an American lake guarded at Panama and the Philippines. By this control of the two great English speaking races must the English language, institutions and religion be spread over the face of the earth. The English language is the real "Esperanto" and "Volapuk." These artificial linguistic weaklings will fail. The English language is prevailing and will prevail.

"I want your support because I want the people of the other States whose eyes are upon you to know that it is possible for the executive to act squarely upon his convictions, to stand by the Constitution, to deal squarely by every man and fearlessly by every interest, keeping in mind ever his duty to the whole people and that having done this fearlessly he shall have the endorsement of the great Empire State,"—Gov. Hughes

Judge Stowell in his speech at Scriba Center last week charged Louis C. Rowe, the Democratic candidate for County Judge, with being a "bucket-shop" operator. Mr. Rowe practically admits the charge but denies that he ever "welched," that is, refused to pay when the market went against him and he lost.

Does "Fingey" Connors for United States Senator look good enough to you to lead you to vote the Democratic ticket this Fall?

Reports from the front state that Candidate Bryan looks somewhat worn. His political policies present a somewhat similar experence.

It has always taken a thorough course of Republican treatment to remedy the effects of a single dose of Democratic cure-all.

"Shall the People Rule?" shrieked the parrot, and the eagle screamed "You bet," or words to that effect.

CAN TAMMANY BEAT HUGHES?

Tammany's spokesmen are circulating a report that they regard Bryan as a "dead duck," anyhow, and that they propose very generally to offer to vote for Taft in exchange for Republican votes for Chanler for Governor. Tammany Hall has everything to gain and nothing to lose by such an exchange. Bryan is defeated, anyhow, and whether he were or not, Tammany Hall cares more for the spoils and plunder of the governorship than for all the Federal patronage of the State. No Republican should think for one moment that he is gaining anything by trading Hughes for anybody. The advantage is all on Tammany's side. After the splendid canvas that Governor Hughes has made, so unselfishly and so generously for Taft's election throughout the West, winning away from Bryan in more than one doubtful State, it would be the height of folly and injustice to permit Tammany Hall and its allies to punish him in this State. This abhorrent combination or conspiracy is something that the friends of Taft cannot contemplate without the deepest indignation. Governor Hughes has become a national asset, and to sacrifice him in his own State would be a blow at the Republican party little less destructive to it than the defeat of Taft himself.

Not since Van Buren's friend, Silas Wright, was induced to resign from the Senate in 1844 and become a candidate for Governor of New York, so as to strengthen Polk, who has received the presidential nomination which Van Buren tried to get, did so much depend on a governorship candidacy anywhere in the country in a presidential campaign as depended on the renomination of Charles E. Hughes. As he was expected to do, Wright carried New York for himself and for Polk, and this made Polk President. As against Clay, the Whig candidate, no other Democrat than Silas Wright could have carried New York in that year, notwithstanding the swing of several thousand anti-slavery Whigs away from Clay and over to Birney, the abolition nominee. Governor Hughes will render a similar service for Taft and the congressional ticket in the State of New York in 1908.

Outside of the State of New York Governor Hughes' nomination has been of far greater aid to the presidential candidate of his party than Silas Wright's was. Ever since the Governor, three months ago, consented to be a candidate in order to complete his reform programme, such stalwart Republican papers as the Philadelphia Press, the Pittsburg Gazette, the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune, the Detroit Free Press, the Milwaukee Sentinel, the Chicago Tribune and Inter-Ocean, the St. Louis Globe Democrat, the St. Paul Pioneer-Press, the Denver Republican, the Portland Oregonian, the Seattle Post Intelligencer, the San Francisco Chronicle, the Los Angeles Times, the Salt Lake Tribune, and many others have been telling his immediate constituency that his renomination was necessary for the welfare of the party throughout the entire North and West. As a reformer who has done a work so effectively and sanely that it will never have to be done over again, he represents the progressive Republicanism typified by Roosevelt and Taft, which is here to stay. Throughout the West he has shown his popularity, even with conservative Democrats. At the opening of the campaign at Youngtown, in Mr. Taft's own State, the speech by Governor Hughes was the star feature of the occasion, although several other orators of national fame also spoke. Nobody will be surprised at the rejoicings of Roosevelt, Taft, equally an admirer of Governor Hughes. Who votes for one should vote for both.—Leslie's Weekly.

ber 3d will be felt in every Republican and doubtful State that he has visited.

Every admirer of Taft should be Root, Sherman, Hitchcock, and the other Republican leaders at the outcome at Saratoga, with which they all had something to do, and especially President Roosevelt. Governor Hughes is a great national asset, and his influence in favor of the Republican presidential ticket on Novem-

WHO PROFITED BY COUNTY'S LOSS?

During the past ten or twelve years the Board of Supervisors have at all times been composed of practically one-third Democrats and always upon the Finance as well as other important committees Democrats were appointed. Now the Democrats insist upon it that any and all of their trumped-up charges of mismanagement, extravagance, etc., shall be charged up to the Republicans of this county and in particular, to the nominees upon the Republican ticket this Fall.

Where, pray, was the Democratic minority all this time? Why did they not keep a more watchful eye upon their majority colleagues? Were the minority members false to the trust imposed in them by the electors, or, if there was mismanagement in the conduct of county affairs, did they benefit in some way and remain silent? Or were the Democratic members careless and slack and unmindful of their duty?

Republicans discovered the slipshod, illegal methods employed in the conduct of county affairs. Republicans are pushing to the limit the investigation into the alleged short-comings of officials. Republicans are purging their party of men when it will be proven that they have been faithless to public trust and have placed in nomination high types of good citizenship. And as soon as Republicans found the unsatisfactory condition and made efforts to correct the evils that existed, where do we find the careless officials? In the Democratic ranks laboring hard to defeat clean Republicans. A pretty spectacle, is it not?

Instance, ex-County Treasurer Moore. The Comptroller's report finds that the bills in which corsets, fascinators, tobacco, soap, etc., appeared, were paid, unaudited, by Mr. Moore, and among all the bills paid during the years by him, practically 25 per cent. were paid to his brother, R. L. Moore. In fact, F. A. Glynn and R. L. Moore's names appear with startling frequency in its list. Yet the careless officials—and the Democrats—are striving to evade the consequences of their carelessness and pin onto the Board of Supervisors and the District Attorney the blame for their acts.

D. P. Morehouse wanted his own unauthorized bills paid, but he did not want any other bills paid illegally; and so he goes over into the Democratic ranks and yelps, the Republican nominees, because they did not nominate him for County Judge. By the way, this paper thought Mr. Morehouse held a higher position with the Bar and with the people of the county when it supported him for the Supreme bench than it finds he really held. And the revelation came as a result of the prominent dog-in-the-manger part he is playing in the present campaign.

When one looks over the records of the men and the papers opposing Republicanism in Oswego county, it should make one prouder of the Republican party, its history and its nominees in Nation, State and County this Fall.

Let's give the old time Republican majority for every man on the ticket under the eagle. They are all worthy of your suffrage.

HOW ABOUT THIS.

Clarence E. Pitts solemnly declares to the intelligent voters of Oswego County that if he is elected District Attorney he will close every liquor shop and drive every law breaker from the county, in fact, that he will make Oswego county the garden spot of the earth. In the same breath he loudly demands that "bossism" and "the one man power" be abolished.

In the first statement he announces that he will constitute himself not only district attorney, but Grand and Trial Jury, County Judge and public sentiment. The Times is just vaguely wondering if, in the grand exodus from the county which he will produce, if elected, any of his friends will be numbered.

Will he include in the clean sweep all bucket shop gamblers? All quitters—men who refuse to pay their obligations whenever the market goes against them? Men who violate the moral and social laws, etc.? And, in the many and varied positions which Mr. Pitts announces that he will fill if elected, is there no shade of "bossism" or "the one man power?"

The election of Freelon J. Davis to the office of District Attorney will save Mr. Pitts from failure to redeem pre-election promises such as was afforded by the election of Senator Gates. It would be indeed a calamity to find a man who knows so little law as Mr. Pitts in such an important position. A calamity to the law abiding citizens who might think differently; to the law breakers whose rights would not be protected and to the tax payers who would have to pay for errors made.

Bryan The Exterminator.

William Jennings Bryan went into business as an exterminator in 1896 and has stuck to it ever since. He got after the "gold bugs" that year and announced that he would exterminate the whole pesky species by copious applications of his celebrated free-silver powder. He announced his program in a speech in Albany, N. Y., August 25, 1896, in the following terms:

The Democratic party has begun a war of extermination against the gold standard. We ask no quarter, we give no quarter. We shall prosecute our warfare until there is not an American citizen who dares to advocate the gold standard. Then, after the big, red, band-wagon, the gaudy trappings and the rest of the outfit had been carefully stored away in winter quarters, some inquisitive person pertinently inquired: "But, after all, what did the Great Exterminator exterminate?" To which the reply was made, "Why the Democratic party, of course."

THE DRUMMER EVANGELIST.

Will Begin Services at State St. M. E. Church Sunday Morning, Nov. 1.

An evangelistic campaign which it is expected will rival in interest the present political campaign, will be opened at State Street Methodist Episcopal Church of this city Sunday morning, November 1. The well-known drummer evangelist, T. H. Osborn of Chicago has been secured to conduct the meetings. Mr. Osborn has been in the evangelist field for eighteen years and has manifested the same zeal and business ability which gave him success as a drummer in early life. He has conducted eight series of meetings in the city of Syracuse and is booked for his ninth series of meetings in Buffalo.

One of the great revivals recently conducted by Mr. Osborn was at Corning, N. Y., where three hundred professed conversion. He is a member of the International Association of Evangelists of which J. Wilbur Chapman is president, and was a personal friend of the late D. L. Moody. Some of Mr. Osborn's solos, such as "Throw a Line" and "Life's Railroad to Heaven," have traveled as far as the fame of the evangelist. A special song book will be used during these meetings and the singing will be led by a chorus choir.

FULTON PATRIOT FLOPS AGAIN.

The Fulton Patriot, having lost all influence with Republicans on account of its repeated treachery to that party, has flopped again, (undoubtedly for sufficient compensation) and is this Fall urging its readers to vote the straight Democratic ticket. The editor of The Patriot was heard to say recently that Roosevelt had led the Republican party in such an undignified manner and so inefficiently that he, the editor, could no longer stand it. That's why he has jumped the party of Lincoln, McKinley, Roosevelt, Root and Hughes to take up the party of Bryan, Croker, Conners, Murphy, etc.

Well, any old reason, providing there is a dollar attached, is sufficient inducement for The Patriot to flop.

Never since the writer can recall have so many drunken men been seen upon the streets of Fulton as were seen on Saturday. From morning until dark men of different ages were seen staggering through the streets, one, a peddlar with his pack upon his shoulder suspended from a stick, staggered into a citizen and it was good luck rather than good management that his eye was not put out by the edge of the pack. Certain it is that no Republican campaign money was being invested in the cup that inebriates so it must have been the combination Democratic Prohibition barrel that was tapped; one unfortunate much the worse for his tippling informing a Times representative that campaign money had helped him out and that Chanler, Rowe and Gray were his candidates. Such a spectacle and such a statement should be of interest to the Prohibitionists who are not playing politics but are simply supporting a principle in their political profession. Taken in its entirety the Republican nominees more nearly measure up to the highest Prohibition ideals than does any other ticket in the field this Fall. This is not always true, but this year it is beyond peradventure.

With its usual inaccuracy as regards Republican politics in Oswego county, the Syracuse Herald on Sunday announced that Sandy Creek would give a Democratic majority on Nov. 3, of 1,000. About Charles W. Taft.

The most inane charge ever brought against a candidate in any party for any office, is the one brought by Morehouse, Bartlette, Cornell, Bulger, Pitts & Co., that Charles W. Taft of Williamstown is not a resident of Oswego County. Mr. Taft is postmaster at Williamstown; all of his money has been earned in Oswego County and is invested in Oswego County property. He is chief of the Williamstown fire department; he conducts a drug store in Williamstown; he is an officer in two or three fraternal organizations in Williamstown and he has never voted outside of Oswego county.

But this charge against Mr. Taft is as nearly true as are nine and a half out of every ten charges brought by the Political Purification Committee, (limited) against the Republican nominees.

How Are Your Eyes?

You are just starting upon six months of dark days and long evenings. You will use your eyes constantly under very trying conditions—either dim or artificial light most of the time, and the eye strain will be correspondingly great.

Right now is when you should have your eyes examined to ascertain whether or not they are defective; whether or not you have any trouble that properly fitted glasses will correct.

We have the proper facilities for determining the condition of your eyes, and we will be pleased to tell you whether or not you need glasses. As glad to tell you that you do not as that you do.

GOV. HUGHES ON STATE ISSUES.

Inconsistency of the Democratic Platform.

HE IS FOR PERSONAL LIBERTY

Great Demonstration in Buffalo, Where the Governor Shows How the State and National Democratic Platforms Are at War With Each Other—One Asks For More Government by Commission and Other Denounces Policy. Would Democrats Repeal Anti-Gambling Law?

The reception given Governor Hughes at the meeting in the convention hall at Buffalo is said to have been the greatest political demonstration in the history of that city of political activity. The fact that the governor had met with ovations and aroused enthusiasm equal to that of the presidential candidate himself during his whirlwind tour of the western states, from which he had just returned, seemed to appeal to the pride of the people of his own state, and they were bent on showing the west and the entire country that there is no truth in this instance in the old adage that says "a prophet is without honor save in his own country." Although threatened with loss of voice from too much outdoor campaigning, the governor insisted on speaking, and his speech was received with tremendous enthusiasm. He said in part:

In the state campaign we have, I believe, most important issues presented. It is a question whether the work of the past two years is going to have the indorsement of the people. It is not so much the question of one individual as against another. It is really a question whether the kind of administration that I have been trying to give the people of the state of New York will have their approval or whether I shall be rebuked for giving it. That is the question before the people, and no argument or sophistry will permit it to be dodged.

Interstate Commerce Commission.

We are met at the end of nearly two years with extraordinary denunciation. This denunciation in the platform of our opponents seems more largely to focus on one subject rather than on others. That subject they call "governing the state by commission." That seems to be the red flag to the Democratic bull. It seems to arouse most of the bitter criticism which is now being indulged in in the discussion of our state affairs.

About twenty years ago there was established in connection with the federal government the interstate commerce commission. It was established in order that the laws in regard to freedom of interstate trade might be properly enforced. It was established so that there might be some means of preventing unjust discriminations in connection with interstate commerce. It was composed of a body of men appointed by the president, holding office virtually at his will, and certain powers were given for the attainment of these objects. It soon appeared to be an important body, but it also appeared to lack some of the necessary powers which would enable it properly to discharge its duties.

As time went on this became more and more apparent. During the national administration which is now drawing to a close a great deal of insistence has been laid upon the necessity of equipping this body with suitable powers, so that as a commission it might properly perform this administrative work of enforcing public obligations.

Now, the Democratic party met in national convention after we had had for a considerable time government by commission in the nation's affairs. We have had during the present administration a very large increase in the powers of that commission. We have under debate the suggestions that other powers should be granted to the commission. What does the Democratic party do? Does it denounce government by commission? Does it say that it is unsound in principle? Does it accuse President Roosevelt of treachery to constitutional principles because he has sought to enlarge the domain of its authority? Does it regard such enlargement as antagonistic to the theory of our government?

Let me read you what the Democratic platform adopted by the Democratic national party has to say on this subject, and in what it says we may gather some information as to what the party thinks of governing by commission. It says, "We demand such enlargement of the powers of the interstate commerce commission as may be necessary to compel railroads to perform their duties as common carriers and prevent discrimination and extortion." They apparently want more government by commission in the United States.

Democratic Inconsistency.

Now, our friends, the Democratic party in this state, met in convention at Rochester. You would suppose from their later proposals that these declarations of the Democratic national platform would almost have nauseated them. You would suppose that because of their disgust of government by commission the candidacy of Mr. Bryan and the proposals which he makes and the demands for the extension in the nation of government by commission would almost have led them to disregard if not expressly to repudiate the national ticket and the national platform. But that was not so. They could not laud too fulsomely the great leader of the national party. They could not express too ardently their admiration for the principles of the national platform.

Let us look at the government by commission in this state. Congress cannot legislate for the state any more than the state can legislate for congress. The state has no power over interstate commerce. Congress has no power over commerce inside of the borders of the state.

The Democratic party has again and again asserted its demand for the proper exercise of the state powers and for drawing the line between the exercise of the state authority and of the authority of congress. I wonder if the Democratic party knows when it is consistent. I wonder if it really cares about it.

At all events, we have the state, with its authority over the corporations of its own creation engaged in trade within the limits of the state. If any one is to regulate those corporations, it must be the state itself.

If government by commission is bad in New York, it is equally bad in Washington. If the interstate commerce commission should have the powers which Mr. Bryan says it should have with regard to the railroads engaged in interstate commerce, then the public service commissions should have the powers that they now have with regard to the carriers engaged in business within the state. If you denounce the one you must denounce the other. If you approve the one you must approve the other or else you must throw political sincerity to the winds and simply say that you are after the votes and will advance whatever doctrines you think will catch them in any place.

Under this banner of denouncing government by commission we shall find every one who desires to escape regulation by the state. We shall find everyone who desires to be free to engage in financiering schemes that won't pass muster before an honest administrative body. We shall find every one that finds it irksome to comply with the laws of the state as to public service. We shall find every one who desires to evade the requirements of public obligation which are in consideration of the public privileges that have been received. But it is easy to imagine who will range under the banner of denouncing government by commission.

Now, I think those business men who feel that the exercise by the state of these powers through the public service commissions is too strong and rigorous are making a great mistake. I would say to them that if they want to meet a harvest of revolution and disaster in this country all they need is to get this freedom that they think is so attractive and use it to the disadvantage of the public. We cannot afford that. Good business cannot afford it.

"Personal Liberty" Cry.

Referring to the "personal liberty" slogan that has been taken up by the Democratic platform and Mr. Chanler, the governor said:

I don't know exactly what issue is sought to be injected into this campaign by talk about personal liberty. Do our opponents mean that they would reinstate the Percy-Gray law with its trickery of the constitution? If so, let them say so, and we will discuss it. Do they mean that they would repeal the laws passed at the recent session of the legislature? If so, they should say so clearly and distinctly and let the people know it, and we will debate that issue in this state if it is necessary. But if they mean anything more than that they are hitting beside the mark.

I have never said or done anything against the personal liberty of any citizen. I have never had any such thought or intention. I am most desirous that our people should have an abundant life—a life full of recreation and enjoyment. I want to see our people happy and contented, with every opportunity for the pleasant and agreeable enjoyment of their leisure hours. I have never harbored a thought to the contrary. Now, if they mean under the talk of personal liberty to give the impression to those who are against the enforcement of the constitution as to public gambling that they are going to restore former conditions, I should be glad to have them specify, and we will see whether any one can be elected governor of the state who does not propose to uphold the constitution of the state.

On the other hand, if they do not mean that, they are not aiming at me, for I have not been opposed to any wholesome or legitimate enjoyment of any of the people of the state.

Who will rejoice if I am defeated? Every man who has been fighting the efforts that I have made for the last two years, every one who desires to escape the just penalty of the law, his just obligations to the people, the just requirements of the constitution; every one who believes in trades and dickers, every one who believes in compromises and in government by pull and favor and not government by principle—he will rejoice.

Curious School Customs.

Mexican schoolmasters show their appreciation of a pupil's efforts in a curious manner. The diligent student is allowed to smoke a cigar during the lesson. When the whole class has given satisfaction, permission is given for a general smoke, and even the little Mexicans are allowed to light a cigarette for the occasion. Needless to say, the schoolmaster himself smokes a cigar of a size and quality proportionate to his superior position. But the scholars are not allowed to drink, this privilege being accorded to the master only. On his desk he always keeps a bottle of liquor, which, when empty, occasions much dispute among the parents of his scholars, as it is considered an honor to be able to fill the schoolmaster's bottle.—London Standard.

Do not let anyone tell you that something else is just as good as DeWitt's Kidney and Bladder Pills because there isn't anything just as good for weak back, backache, rheumatic pains, inflammation of the bladder, or any Kidney and Bladder disorder. A week's trial will convince you. Sold by all druggists.

'Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

"OLD BILL TAFT."

By REV. RY J. BOATMAN.

[Tune: "America."]

For leader strong and great
To man the ship of state,
Both fore and aft;
To guide where breakers roar,
To safely land our store,
To quiet all uproar,
There's old Bill Taft.

To White House, there to stay
And Bryan send away
Upon a raft;
To do, as Teddy did,
What all our people bid,
For man upon the lid,
There's old Bill Taft.

To do what's good and just,
Strike down the evil trust
And all of graft;
To keep our money pure
And plenty, too, and sure,
The hard times' only cure,
There's old Bill Taft.

Reform his flag unfurls,
Against all evils hurls
Unerring shaft.
Then let our trumpets blare,
"He's always on the square,
At home and everywhere,
Is old Bill Taft!"

The Eyes.

"Long, almond shaped eyes, with thick and creamy lids covering half the pupil and with a forehead that is full above the brows—there you have the eye of the man of genius." The speaker's own eyes answered that description strikingly, but he was far from being a man of genius, being, in fact, a magazine editor.

"Protruding eyes," he went on, "show mental and bodily weakness. Eyes close together denote cunning. Those far apart denote liberality. Thin lashes without any upward curve to them and thin brows poorly marked are signs of melancholy and indecision. The eyes of a voluptuary move slowly under heavy lids. Those of a miser are small, deep sunken and blue, set in a bony and perpendicular forehead. The most beautiful eyes—large, brilliant and clear, glancing and flashing with a rapid motion—the most beautiful eyes denote elegance of taste, gayety, some selfishness and a great interest in the opposite sex."—New York Press.

For Chronic Diarrhoea.

"While in the army in 1863 I was taken with chronic diarrhoea," says George M. Felton of South Gibson, Pa. "I have since tried many remedies but without any permanent relief, until Mr. A. W. Miles, of this place, persuaded me to try Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, one bottle of which stopped it at once." For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Cutting It Short.

Like Father Like Son.

Four-year-old Clyde was a precocious youngster—very talkative and a close observer. He and his father were strolling through the meadows one morning when Clyde observed for the first time some tadpoles in a pond. He waded in and cried out, "Oh, father, what are they?"

"Tadpoles, son," the father replied.

"Please, father, let's take them all home with us, then come back and find the mamma and papa, and we'll have the whole family in our pond at home."

The father explained how impossible this would be, and as they walked on a few steps a large, ugly frog hopped across their path. Clyde's father said: "Look, son. Perhaps there is the papa."

Clyde was very thoughtful. He looked at the frog, then at his father, then at himself and exclaimed:

"Well, father, was there ever so much difference between me and you?"—Delineator.

Why Colds Are Dangerous.

Because you have contracted ordinary colds and recovered from them without treatment of any kind, do not for a moment imagine that colds are not dangerous. Everyone knows that pneumonia and chronic catarrh have their origin in a common cold. Consumption is not caused by a cold but the cold prepares the system for the reception and development of the germs that would not otherwise have found lodgment. It is the same with all infectious diseases. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough are much more likely to be contracted when the child has a cold. You will see from this that more real danger lurks in a cold that in any other of the common ailments. The easiest and quickest way to cure a cold is to take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The many remarkable cures effected by this preparation have made it a staple article of trade over a large part of the world. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

The Stick For Wives.

In the old Anglo-Norman marriage ceremony the gentlewoman used to promise her husband to be buxom "unto my gentil manne." The word buxom corresponds to the modern German biegsam, meaning bending or pliant, and the old English was "buck-sh," all of which goes to show that things must have been very pleasantly ordered in the good old days that are dead and gone. According to the old English law, which is still unrescinded in the statute book, the "gentil manne" was allowed to beat his goode wife with a stick the diameter of which did not exceed a quarter of an inch.—New York World.

What She Wanted to See.

The chauffeur was taking his load of tourists for a ride through the residence portion of the metropolis and pointing out to them the state mansions of the nabob. "I've often heard," said the portly dowager with the diamonds, "of these Oliver Wendel homes. Would you mind showing us one of 'em?"—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Story of a Medicine.

Its name—"Golden Medical Discovery" was suggested by one of its most important and valuable ingredients—Golden Seal root.

Nearly forty years ago, Dr. Pierce discovered that he could, by the use of pure, triple-refined glycerine, aided by a certain degree of constantly maintained heat and with the aid of apparatus and appliances designed for that purpose, extract from our most valuable native medicinal roots their curative properties much better than by the use of alcohol, so generally employed. So the now world-famed "Golden Medical Discovery," for the cure of weak stomach, indigestion, or dyspepsia, torpid liver, or biliousness and kindred derangements was first made, as it ever since has been, without a particle of alcohol in its make-up.

A glance at the full list of its ingredients, printed on every bottle-wrapper, will show that it is made from the most valuable medicinal roots found growing in our American forests. All these ingredients have received the strongest endorsement from the leading medical writers, teachers and writers on Materia Medica who recommend them as the very best remedies for the diseases for which "Golden Medical Discovery" is advised.

A little book of these endorsements has been compiled by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., and will be mailed free to any one asking same by postal card, or letter addressed to the Doctor as above. From these endorsements, copied from standard medical books of all the different schools of practice, it will be found that the ingredients composing the "Golden Medical Discovery" are advised not only for the cure of the above mentioned diseases, but also for the cure of all catarrhal, bronchial and throat affections, accompanied with catarrhal discharges, hoarseness, sore throat, lingering, or hang-on-coughs, and all those wasting affections which, if not promptly and properly treated are liable to terminate in consumption. Take Dr. Pierce's Discovery in time and persevere in its use until you give it a fair trial and it is not likely to disappoint. Too much must not be expected of it. It will not perform miracles. It will not cure consumption in its advanced stages. No medicine will. It will cure the affections that lead up to consumption, if taken in time.

[No tune.]

Billy Bryan, Billy Bryan,
Still a-tryin', still a-tryin',
Vainly tryin';
Thrice before us like a chorus,
Jackass chorus most uproarious,
Tried to floor us.

Billy Bryan, Billy Bryan,
Far too high your kite's a-flyin'—
Wind's allayin'....
Cease to mouth us, cease to mouth us.
Jackass discords don't affright us,
Only rouse us.

Billy Bryan, Billy Bryan,
Vainly cryin' like sage dryin'—
Calf a-dyin'.
Once you'd give us halves for whole one—
Silver dollars, them sixteen to,
For our gold ons.

Billy Bryan, Billy Bryan,
Give up tryin'; quit your tryin',
Call your "try" in.
Once you hitched the ass and monkey,
Now you'd ride that poor old donkey—
Played out donkey.

Billy Bryan, Billy Bryan,
Forces routed, forces flyin',
Still you're tryin'.
Still you're pleadin' like a lover,
Oft rejected for another,
Better brother.

Billy Bryan, Billy Bryan,
You're a good un; you're a lion
(Little chained un),
But your roarin' sounds too chatty—
'Tood it's daffy. Give us Taft-y!
Give us Taft-y!
T-A-F-T!

Campaigning in 1908.

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.]

The train comes whizzing down the track
And halts amid the cheers,
And on the platform at the back
The candidate appears.

And then the engine hoarsely shrieks
His words are far from plain.
And then the engine hoarsely shrieks
And drags away the train.

TRIBUTE TO MR. TAFT

How China Apologized For the American Boycott.

JUDGE SIGNALLY HONORED.

Recognition of His Efforts to Bring About Remission of Boxer Indemnity. National Friendship Reaffirmed and Commercial Amity Restored.

It was through Mr. Taft, when he was in Shanghai last fall, that the Chinese apologized for the American boycott that was instituted in the kingdom a few years ago and expressed their appreciation of the remission by our government of the indemnity granted because of the Boxer rebellion. When it became known that Mr. Taft was coming to Shanghai representatives of all the Chinese guilds in the city met and arranged to give him a suitable reception. The guilds in China control every branch of commercial activity and united form in every city and community a thoroughly representative body. Each of the scores of guilds in Shanghai took part in the demonstration to Mr. Taft. For the purpose the beautiful Tuyuen gardens in Bubbling Well road were obtained. Governmental cognizance of the greeting to Mr. Taft was through the vicarious participation of Tuan Fang, viceroy of the Liangkiang province, in which Shanghai is. The viceroy ordered his representative, the taotai tong, to spare no expense in arranging a suitable reception for Mr. Taft and to present the bills to him.

Americans long resident in Shanghai agreed that no such signal honors had ever been paid to another foreigner by the Chinese. A heavy rainfall, which began the previous night, threatened to mar or wholly prevent the garden party. At great cost and an expenditure of labor the committee completely roofed over with canvas a good share of the gardens, including long walks and paths, so that Mr. Taft and the other guests were enabled to move about freely, fully protected from the storm.

"All of the speakers referred to the obligations under which China had been laid by the remission of the Boxer indemnity and the contributions made by Americans for the relief of victims of the recent famine in China. Mr. Taft was cheered and applauded for several minutes when he said:

"When I was here a little more than two years ago there was just a little bit of mist, a little bit of fog, in the clear sunshine of our friendship. But we gave assurances at that time which I am glad to say have been carried out on the one hand, and on the other there is every evidence that the mist has cleared away. The boycott is a thing of the past. It is a closed episode."

Two young Chinese ladies bore forward a massive silver bowl and presented it to Mr. Taft as a memento of his visit. The bowl, which was a rare specimen of Chinese silver work, was inscribed, "Presented to the Honorable William H. Taft, Secretary of War of the United States of America, as a Memento of the Garden Party Given In His Honor by the Chinese Residents of Shanghai."

Copious comments were printed by the eastern press upon the reception by the Chinese to Mr. Taft and its significance as a tribute to the man and as a renewal of the old time bonds of amity between the nations.

LABOR MOVEMENT IS NONPARTISAN.

Daniel J. Keefe, Sixth Vice President of the A. F. of L., Insists That President Gompers Has Been Misrepresented and Denies That Any Attempt Has Been Made to Swing Labor Vote to Bryan.

TAFT A FRIEND OF LABORING MAN.

"We insist that the labor movement shall remain as free and independent from political domination as it has ever been in its history."

That sentence is the keynote to a statement made by Daniel J. Keefe of Detroit, Mich., president of the International Longshoremen, Marine and Transport Workers' association and sixth vice president of the American Federation of Labor.

In his statement, which he made in answer to a query from the editor of the Buffalo Republic, Mr. Keefe says:

"I desire to say that the American Federation of Labor is not committed to any political party, nor has any candidate for president been indorsed by the executive council.

"I am of the belief that the general public does not fully understand the position of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor in the present campaign. The policy of the labor movement is nonpartisan and is as follows:

"We desire to refute here the aspersions that have been cast upon the executive council and particularly one of its members, President Gompers, that it is our purpose or his to dictate to the working people of our country how they shall cast their votes in the coming elections, nor has any one promised the vote of the working people to any particular party. We have strongly, clearly and emphatically, as it was our duty, presented the situation in which the working people of the country find themselves, the demands which labor has made upon both political parties as to necessary action, which they should take, the treatment they have received, and have appealed to the judgment and patriotism of the working people and the friends of labor throughout the country, since both political parties have spoken, to make their choice as their conscience may dictate.

"The misrepresentation of newspapers and others to the contrary notwithstanding, we repeat and insist, and we have so conducted and propose to so conduct our course, that the labor movement shall remain as free and independent from political domination as it has ever been in its history.

"The foregoing does not commit the American Federation of Labor to any political party and is nonpartisan, which permits union men to vote for whom they may please for president and other offices without fear of criticism. All of which I heartily indorse.

"Some of the members of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor no doubt will support and vote for Mr. Bryan, which is their individual right. I shall support and vote for Mr. Taft, who was admitted to membership in the International Brotherhood of Steam Shovel and Dredge Men on account of his strong advocacy of the enforcement of the eight hour law on all government work coming under the jurisdiction of the war department, and if the eight hour day did not become an established fact in connection with dredge work it was the fault of the workmen and not the fault of the secretary of war.

"I might add further that Mr. Taft, as secretary of war, has done more to inforce laws in favor of organized labor than all his predecessors."

NOT A FAIR PLAYER.

L. C. Rowe, the candidate for County Judge of the advance agents of political purity in Oswego County, C. N. Bulger, C. E. Pitts, D. P. Morehouse, Udelle Bartlett, the Fulton Patriot, the Palladium and the Syracuse Herald, admits the charge that he is a bucket shop player and a very fretful, unfair loser when the market is against him. In fact, the name "welcher," one of the most contemptuous known to the sporting fraternity, has been pinned onto him and the "damned spot will not out."

S. A. O'Brien, who conducted the brokerage shop in which Mr. Rowe lost some money after years of successful playing, and then turned tearful, had this to say of Mr. Rowe upon inquiry as to the truth of the charges made against him:

"The statement that L. C. Rowe's failure to settle his account in my office because I failed to sell Ontario and Western stock when he told me to is untrue. Mr. Rowe knows what he was dealing in when I was representing the Municipal Stock and Grain Company of Albany in the Grant Block and he knows that his refusal to pay up was through no fault of mine. The Ontario and Western stock transaction sounds good but it is not so. I have refrained from saying anything in this matter but when Mr. Rowe or his friends attempt to question my business integrity I cannot remain silent.

I notice a published statement that Mr. Rowe does not know the definition of a "welcher." Well, my definition of a "welcher" is a man that grabs everything in sight when things are coming his way but fails to make good when he is called upon to settle when things go the other way." When asked if it was true that he started an action against Mr. Rowe for failure to make good alleged stock operations Mr. O'Brien said: "Yes, I did begin a suit against Mr. Rowe and an associate of his in the Grant Block through Attorney Joseph H. Gill but they settled for just part of the original indebtedness after the papers had been served. The reason I followed Mr. Rowe up was because he and two associates had been extremely successful in their stock operations with me and it was practically the first time the market had went against them. As a result of Mr. Rowe's refusal to settle, the Municipal Stock and Grain Company cut out the loop running into my office and put me out of business. Then when I insisted on a settlement from Mr. Rowe at a conference in his office he declined and when I again pressed the payment of the money due the Company he said: "Well, O'Brien you can't get blood out of a stone." The two men involved in the transactions were with him when he made this remark. I thought such a remark uncalled for from a customer who was always ahead of the game and who had been busy for several years cashing yellow checks at the First National for winnings."

Against W. B. Baker, Republican nominee for County Judge, no such charges lie. His record is clean and manly. He tackles a proposition head-on and with the confidence in his position that only a clear conscience can inspire. Mr. Baker is a fair fighter, a competent official, a loyalist to his party, a good son, a worthy citizen and an excellent lawyer. Upon these grounds the Times earnestly asks the support of all men who believe in such traits in public servants.

TAXPAYERS, VOTE YES.

The proposition whether or not to appropriate $1,500 per annum for the maintenance of the Albert Lindley Lee Memorial hospital to be donated Fulton by Mrs. Lee, should be granted without a dissenting voice. Our residents certainly will not throw away the only opportunity that will ever come to them to secure a beautiful, spacious, modern hospital building, and without expense. Of course, after the project has been acted favorably upon by the taxpayers, very different conditions will exist in its conduct.

For instance, as it now stands, the Board of Directors are personally financially responsible for its maintenance. They stand in the same light to the hospital as did the Board of Directors to the Baseball Association. With the completion of the new hospital free wards will be available for those who are unable to pay, a something that cannot exist while the hospital is conducted by a private corporation.

Again, a regular nurses training school from which it will be possible to graduate as a regularly trained nurse with diploma, will be organized and conducted, making it possible for intelligent young women to have excellent training and instruction right at home.

It has been stated that all taxpayers, whether men or women, may vote at the special election upon this hospital proposition. This is not true. A married woman may be upon the tax list but she cannot vote, her husband exercising that right for her. None but men taxpayers, of age and properly registered, can vote upon the proposition.

Some slight opposition to the measure on the part of uninformed voters has developed but when the truth is ascertained no one believes that a single vote will be registered against paying the small amount of $1,500 per annum necessary to secure the beautiful $30,000 building.

Voting upon this proposition at the regular election will be without extra expense, whereas a special taxpayers election, should there not be a full vote and the proposition be lost, would entail considerable expense.

Vote yes upon the hospital proposition.

JUDGE DE ANGELIS'S ADVICE.

He Counseled District Attorney Baker Against Precipitate Action on Glynn's Report.

David P. Morehouse in his speeches is declaring that District Attorney Baker had been lax in his duties in not presenting the report of Comptroller Glynn to the May Grand Jury. Mr. Morehouse is fully aware that Mr. Baker received the report at five o'clock on the night of May 2 and that the May Grand Jury convened at Pulaski on Monday, May 4. Mr. Morehouse says that the District Attorney could have gone over the report and prepared to present it in two days. Justice DeAngelis presided at the May Term of the Supreme Court, at which the Grand Jury in question was in session and District Attorney Baker took the report to him and after examining it JUSTICE DE ANGELIS TOLD DISTRICT ATTORNEY BAKER NOT TO ATTEMPT TO PRESENT SUCH AN IMPORTANT MATTER TO THE GRAND JURY WITH SUCH A SHORT TIME IN WHICH TO FAMILIARIZE HIMSELF WITH ITS CONTENTS AND IT WAS ON THIS ADVICE AND THE UNANIMOUS VOTE OF THE GRAND JURY NOT TO CONSIDER THE REPORT THAT IT WAS NOT PRESENTED AT THE TIME.

The report is now being considered by the Grand Jury. Every item in it is being gone over thoroughly and when the Grand Jury completes its work will report its findings to the Court.

[Official Circular.]

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 7, 1908.

To the Officers and Members United Mine Workers of America:

Greeting—We are in the midst of a political campaign. Every method known to political managers will be used to secure votes for their respective candidates. This is especially true in the attempt to obtain expressions from those holding official positions in labor unions.

I am in receipt of hundreds of letters from men of all shades of political beliefs and from all parts of the United States asking for my opinion of the different candidates or my views upon the issues involved in the political campaign.

The United Mine Workers did not elect me international president to influence your political preferences or how you should cast your vote on election day. You have elected me to direct the affairs of the United Mine Workers. The success of the United Mine Workers and the welfare of its members have and will receive my first and only consideration as long as I have the honor of representing you.

I am not responsible for interviews appearing in the newspapers, alleged to be from me, that I favor any particular candidate. I have declined to express or to give any statement politically for or against any candidate or issue, nor do I intend to do so. This letter will be my answer to all who ask me for any advice along political lines.

I have the honor to represent an organization of nearly 300,000 members of every known nationality and different political views. We have among our members Prohibitionists, Populists, Independents, Socialists, Democrats and Republicans. From what I know of our members you are fully competent to decide for yourselves how you will vote on election day.

All my time is required to look after the interests of the United Mine Workers. Those interested in the subject matter of this letter will please refrain from writing me in connection with politics if they hope to get an answer.

The United Mine Workers as an organization has been in existence for many years before this political campaign, and we all wish that it may live many years after the present campaign has passed into history and until every wrong of which the miner complains is honorably adjusted. Yours fraternally and for harmony,

T. L. LEWIS,
President U. M. W. of A.

THE ELECTORAL VOTE OF 1908.

It is conceded that Bryan will carry the "Solid South" composed of thirteen states and having an electoral vote of 151.

Taft can win and loose to Bryan the following ten states with a combined vote of 89 which will give him 240 or two less than the required number of 242. Colorado, 5; Idaho, 3; Montana, 3; Nevada, 3; Nebraska, 8; Oklahoma, 7; Utah, 3; Wyoming, 3; Indiana, 15; New York, 39; twenty-three States in all. The remaining twenty-three States are sure Republican States with an electoral vote of 243, or one more vote than is needed to elect Taft.

But no sane politician believes that Bryan can carry to exceed half of the ten States, and these the lesser ones. Taft is reasonably sure of New York, Indiana, Wyoming, Utah and Nebraska—68 votes which added to the 243 gives Taft 311 electoral votes as against 172 for Bryan.

STRONG ENDORSEMENT OF WILLIAM B. BAKER

Members of the Legal Profession in this County Testify to the Legal Ability and Uprightness of Character of the Republican Nominee for County Judge---A Worthy Tribute

FROM MAURICE L. WRIGHT, LATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. William B. Baker, as District Attorney, was engaged in several murder trials in the courts over which I presided as Justice of the Supreme Court, and in them Mr. Baker exhibited marked ability. He possesses brilliant natural talents, fine legal attainments, and I may add that in my judgment he will, if elected, make an able and efficient County Judge.

M. L. Wright,
(Ex-Justice of the Supreme Court.)

Mr. Mead, in an interview to-day, when asked for his opinion as to the candidate for County Judge, said: I have known Mr. Baker for many years and know him to be a strong, aggressive and resourceful lawyer, whom no difficulties can daunt. His experience as District Attorney necessarily adds very materially to the qualities to be desired in a County Judge, and I believe him to be thoroughly qualified for that position. While I have differed with Mr. Baker and his friends in the past, I have always maintained that the proper place to settle such difficulties is at the Primaries. No good Republican can afford this year to jeopardize the election of Taft and Hughes by bolting the County ticket. I shall support the entire National, State and County ticket.

S. E. Mead,
Ex-Surrogate of Oswego County.

I have known William B. Baker for twelve years. He is absolutely honest and a good lawyer. As District Attorney he has shown himself an able, astute and fearless prosecutor. He is well qualified for the position of County Judge.

Clayton I. Miller,
Surrogate.

I have known Mr. W. B. Baker for many years, and have known him quite intimately. During that time I have had considerable law business both with him and against him, so that I have come to know him thoroughly as a lawyer. He is honest, capable, efficient, industrious, painstaking and well versed in the law, and there is no lawyer in Oswego County more worthy of the best effort of his opponent than he. In my judgment he is well qualified to fill the office of County Judge and will make a most efficient officer in that capacity.

Elisha Powell,
Oswego.

I have known Mr. Baker for many years, both in a personal and professional way, and believe him to be eminently fitted for the office of County Judge of this county. I know him to be a square, honorable and upright man and a competent lawyer, and think he will make a fearless and impartial Judge. I shall take great pleasure in voting for him.

Claude E. Guile,
Fulton, N. Y.

I have known Honorable W. B. Baker well and intimately for more than ten years past. During that period of time every personal, professional or official act of his that has come to my notice, has been open and above board, and strictly in accordance with the most approved ethics of the legal profession.

His course as District Attorney, a position which requires rare tact, besides great capacity for work and great ability, should be a matter of pride to all citizens of this County irrespective of party.

His experience as District Attorney, coupled with his humane temperament and great knowledge of the law, will prove invaluable to him and to the people of the County in his administration of the office of County Judge, to which position I predict his triumphant election.

Francis D. Culkin,
City Attorney, Oswego.

In my opinion our citizens can make no mistake in voting this Fall for William B. Baker for County Judge.

Mr. Baker is splendidly qualified by ability and experience for this judicial position.

As has been well said, no District Attorney has prosecuted more cases or obtained more convictions than has Mr. Baker as District Attorney.

As the prosecuting officer of our County, he has been constantly before the County Court during the last six years and I know no other lawyer in our County who is more thoroughly acquainted with the work of that Court, than is Mr. Baker.

For over twelve years I have been personally and intimately acquainted with Mr. Baker, and know him to be a man of great independence, of high character, of fine ability as a lawyer, and I know he would make a most excellent Judge.

Norman S. Bentley,
Recorder of the City of Oswego.

I have known Mr. William B. Baker during his entire professional career in this city. During his term as District Attorney he has tried in the neighborhood of 187 criminal cases resulting in convictions in 173 cases. In my opinion his long service and experience as District Attorney and his ability as a lawyer abundantly qualify him for the position of County Judge. He is a logical candidate for that office. He received the nomination without opposition and if elected would, I believe, discharge the duties of County Judge in an able and competent manner and would, I believe, treat all parties coming before him with fairness and impartiality and decide each controversy according to law and justice applicable thereto.

Avery S. Wright,
Oswego.

Mr. W. B. Baker is liked personally by the lawyers I think and is generally regarded as a vigorous prosecutor. His word is as good as his written stipulation. That kind of a man ought to make a good judicial officer, and I believe he is a safe man to handle the County Court business.

Albert C. Coon,
Oswego.

Mr. W. B. Baker should be elected County Judge and should receive the full Republican vote. Mr. Baker is better fitted by training and experience than Mr. Rowe. A good trial lawyer is likely to make a good judge and Mr. Baker during his last term as District Attorney has successfully tried more closely contested cases, without counsel to aid him, than Mr. Rowe has tried with the aid of counsel during his experience as a lawyer. Mr. Baker has been raised in what might be termed a legal atmosphere. His father is a lawyer of wide experience, he has several uncles who are successful lawyers and at least one of whom has been a judge. With a sound knowledge of the rules of law and an intimate and practical knowledge of the conduct of business in court and the trial of cases Mr. Baker makes an ideal candidate. I am heartily for him.

E. A. Barnes,
Oswego.

Every Lie Circulated By D. P. Morehouse Regarding the Republican County Candidates Refuted and Nailed Down.

The campaign in this county will come to a close next Tuesday. On that day the voters will go to the polls and assert their right of suffrance by casting their ballots for the candidates they want to have represent them in office.

The campaign of 1908 will long remain in the memory of the people of this county as one of the dirtiest, nastiest, slanderous, mud-slinging campaigns of vituperation and villification that any community ever knew.

It has been a campaign of misrepresentation, falsification and lies—a campaign which has disgusted every honest, fair-minded man who believes in truth, fair play and a "square deal." The one person responsible for this slimy, nauseating, disgusting and loathsome campaign is David P. Morehouse of Oswego, who has come down from the high pedestal of virtue and morality which he heretofore professed and has wallowed in the dirty, nasty mess with evident enjoyment.

WHY HAS MOREHOUSE DONE THIS? IS IT BECAUSE HE IS A FOE OF WRONG DOING? IS IT BECAUSE HE IS OPPOSED TO THE "SYSTEM" FROM WHICH HE SOLICITED HELP WHEN HE WAS LOOKING FOR THE NOMINATION FOR JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT? MR. MOREHOUSE IS ADVOCATING THE DEFEAT OF THE ENTIRE REPUBLICAN TICKET BECAUSE HE THINKS BY DOING SO THAT HIS CLOSE PERSONAL FRIEND, LOUIS C. ROWE, WILL BE IN A BETTER POSITION TO SECURE VOTES FOR COUNTY JUDGE, AND MR. MOREHOUSE KNOWS THAT IF MR. ROWE IS ELECTED THAT HE WILL CONTROL HIM ABSOLUTELY. MR. MOREHOUSE NEEDS A COUNTY JUDGE IN HIS LAW PRACTICE AND HE KNOWS THAT HE WILL HAVE ONE IF ROWE IS ELECTED.

That is the reason, voters of Oswego county, why David P. Morehouse, the purist, is opposing the Republican ticket this Fall. He knows that he will own Rowe and he also knows that HE WILL NOT OWN WILLIAM B. BAKER, THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE. HE COULD NOT GET MR. BAKER TO CONSENT TO THE ILLEGAL PAYMENT OF THE BILLS FOR THE EXPERTS FOR THE DEFENSE IN THE MANZER MURDER TRIAL AND HE COULD NOT GET MR. BAKER TO CONSENT TO ANY OTHER UNLAWFUL ACTION.

Mr. Morehouse knowingly and maliciously allowed himself to be used as the mouthpiece through which the lying, slanderous circulars, prepared by personal enemies of Mr. Baker, have been issued. Morehouse has fathered these circulars, knowing them to be lies, and he has been out through the county reiterating these lies by word of mouth.

District Attorney Baker is charged with being responsible for the acts of Thomas Moore, who as treasurer of this county, paid out something like $29,000 of the taxpayer's money for claims which had not been audited by the Board of Supervisors. A search of the records of this county will show that Mr. Moore inaugurated this practice twenty years ago when District Attorney Baker was a boy on his father's farm in Constantia. But how can Mr. Baker be held responsible for Mr. Moore's acts?

District Attorney Baker is also held responsible, because, it is alleged, that the Board of Supervisors have paid illegal claims. THE ONLY ILLEGAL CLAIM WHICH

STRONG ENDORSEMENT OF WILLIAM B. BAKER

I have known the Hon. W. B. Baker for many years and have watched his career with much interest. He stands high among the members of his profession at the bar of this County. His administration of the office of District Attorney has been one to which any man may well point with pride. He is eminently fitted both from experience and temperament to occupy the office of County Judge which he now seeks.

Geo. M. Fanning.
Fulton.

I should say that the principal business of the County Court is criminal business and as Mr. W. B. Baker with his long experience as District Attorney, his marked ability and good judgment, his thorough knowledge of the law and practice eminently qualifies him to discharge the duties as County Judge, I think that the Republican party made no mistake in selecting him as their candidate for that office and I shall cheerfully support him.

H. L. Howe,
Oswego.

A statement has been circulated, in order to defeat W. B. Baker's election to the office of County Judge, that the majority of the bar of Oswego County does not desire his election to that office. I have talked with a number of attorneys of this County, both Republican and Democratic, and every one has told me that he was strongly in favor of his election. We realize the amount of good that he has done for the County as District Attorney, and believe that he will continue the good work as County Judge. We can see what straits the opposition are in in trying to defeat him, when they resort to charges so utterly foolish and unconvincing as those contained in the statements circulated about the County. These charges to an attorney are absurd, and show only malignant dishonesty on the part of their author.

Coming from his home town, I know what the people think of him who have known him all his life, and know that on election day the town of Constantia will prove that it still believes and trusts in his honesty and ability.

Wm. M. Gallagher,
Cleveland, N. Y.

William B. Baker is the best qualified man in Oswego County for County Judge, not only on account of his long experience as District Attorney, but also, and what is equally important, on account of his possessing a well poised mind and a wholesome, fairminded judicial temperament.

I have taken occasion to search the county records and make a careful investigation for the express purpose of ascertaining to my own satisfaction what truth there was in the statements recently appearing in print insinuating that Mr. Baker did not take the proper course, or did not do his whole duty in certain proceedings in which he appeared as District Attorney or as Counsel in the more or less remote past, and I have found that in every instance the facts were distorted, evidently for the purpose of casting unjust insinuations upon Mr. Baker's conduct. The records and history of each case convinced me that Mr. Baker's position and actions were justified in every particular, and that he could not have honorably done differently than he did.

In my judgment, all this talk is inspired by certain disappointed politicians who would like to get into power and run the county. I am heartily for Mr. Baker for County Judge.

A. T. Jennings.
Fulton, N. Y.

Much calumny and political rant seems to be rife in National as well as State affairs. But the names of Taft and Hughes stand untarnished as honest and true leaders of the people. In local politics unwarranted and extravagant recriminations seem to be conceived to confuse and mislead the voters. Men with clean hands are besmirched because somebody has a personal grudge to satisfy. Someone has done wrong, consequently these grievance-seekers are determined to sully the good name and reputation of an innocent man. As an onlooker and a Republican voter, I feel bound to protest against the method adopted to defeat a worthy candidate. I speak of the Hon. W. B. Baker, nominee for the Oswego County Judgeship. What duty has the District Attorney neglected? And last but not least, isn't he abundantly qualified to be Oswego County Judge? After canvassing these questions, I am firmly convinced that Mr. Baker should be elected.

John C. Henry,
Oswego.

During a long acquaintance with W. B. Baker, I have found him at all times able as a lawyer, upright as a man and fearless as a District Attorney, and because of these qualifications consider him eminently fitted to assume the duties of County Judge.

His fair and impartial conduct of the District Attorney's office has shown that he possesses the "judicial temperament" so essential among the qualifications of a Judge.

Other men might make as good County Judges as W. B. Baker, but as yet they are untried, but his record in private as well as public life affords a firm foundation for the belief that he will be a just and impartial Judge.

Joseph T. McCaffrey,
Oswego.

favor William B. Baker for County Judge because I believe him to be honest and that he will prove himself faithful to the trust and make a most efficient and competent Judge. His ability cannot be honestly questioned and six years experience as District Attorney much better fits him for this office than one who has never had any experience along the lines of the duties of a County Judge. On his record, he merits the support of every Republican voter in Oswego County.

Harry M. Stacy,
Oswego.

I favor the election of the Hon. W. B. Baker to the position of County Judge of this County. He has proven himself to be an able, efficient and fearless District Attorney in his conduct of that office for the past six years, and I believe that the experience and training that he has received as District Attorney especially fits him to fill the position to which he aspires. Mr. Baker's honesty, integrity and ideals are of the highest order and his wide experience as a trial lawyer add to the many other qualifications which he possesses and which are essential to an honest and upright Judge.

Torrey A. Ball,
Clerk of the Surrogate's Court.

Demand Indicates That Governor Will Run Abreast With Taft.

The Republican state committee has received advices from throughout the state indicating that the interest in the candidacy of Governor Hughes is not secondary to that of Mr. Taft, as has been frequently asserted. On the contrary, it looks as though the governor would run at least even if not ahead of the presidential candidate and that the plurality for both will be surprisingly large.

One indication of Hughes enthusiasm is the immense demand for pictures of the governor, a demand so great that the state committee has been unable to keep up with it. There was some delay in getting started on these pictures, as Governor Hughes had not expressed a preference of the many lithographs submitted to him until about a week ago. The presses are now turning them out as rapidly as possible, and they will be sent throughout the state as fast as they come from the press.

BUCKNER BOLTS BRYAN

Veteran Kentucky Democrat Criticises Nebraskan.

CALLS HIM "JACK O' LANTERN."

Declares For Taft as a Man Qualified by Training and Experience to Discharge the Duties of the Presidency.

General Simon Bolivar Buckner of Kentucky, the nominee of the sound money Democrats in 1896, having been asked by a sound money Democrat of Missouri for an expression of opinion on the present political situation, says:

Mr. Bryan's platform has many planks which express an ardent wish to see many things accomplished, but it seems impotent to suggest any policy which will tend to promote the desired results.

It seems that in his whole political career he has been flitting from place to place, flashing in every direction a sort of jack o' lantern, as a beacon light, to attract to his support numerous political bands wandering through a wilderness of error, each in pursuit of its own special will o' the wisp, each straying farther than the other from the plain highway of Democracy and having but one purpose in common—the overthrow of the existing order of society and the erection upon its ruins of a governmental fabric which, if constructed, must inevitably crumble under the mutually repellent action of its own discordant elements, leaving behind only a nihilistic chaos from which it would require generations of mankind to evolve a sane and stable government.

I believe there is enough of true patriotism in all the parties of our country to save us from the perils that threaten the destruction of our institutions.

WAS EVER PRESENTED TO THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS FOR PAYMENT OF WHICH DISTRICT ATTORNEY BAKER EVER HAD KNOWLEDGE, WAS THE CLAIM FOR THE PAYMENT OF THE EXPERTS FOR THE DEFENSE IN THE MANZER MURDER TRIAL, PRESENTED BY MR. MOREHOUSE, AND HE PREVENTED THE PAYMENT OF THESE CLAIMS THE FIRST YEAR THEY WERE PRESENTED, AND WOULD HAVE PREVENTED THEIR PAYMENT THE SECOND YEAR ONLY MR. MOREHOUSE HAD CLUBBED THE SUPERVISORS INTO AUDITING THEM BEFORE MR. BAKER KNEW ANYTHING ABOUT IT.

District Attorney Baker is held responsible because certain supplies were purchased for the county jail. THESE SUPPLIES WERE ORDERED BY THE MEMBERS OF THE SUPPLY COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS. THE BILLS WERE "O.K.'D" BY THEM AND THEY WERE PAID BY THOMAS MOORE. THE THEN COUNTY TREASURER, AND THEY NEVER CAME BEFORE THE AUDITING COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS. HOW CAN MR. BAKER BE HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR THESE BILLS? ARE NOT THE MEN RESPONSIBLE, THE SUPERVISORS WHO ORDERED THE GOODS, AND MR. MOORE FOR PAYING THE BILLS WITHOUT THEIR BEING AUDITED?

District Attorney Baker is charged with practice not becoming a lawyer in the Mexico Cheese Factory case. It is claimed that he tried to defraud F. P. Matty of Mexico out of a sum of money because he secured a chattel mortgage, when acting as attorney for John J. Lamoree, who was ill and unable to take charge of the case. Mr. Matty does not think Mr. Baker tried to defraud him or that he did a single thing which he should not have done, for Mr. Matty has written Mr. Baker a letter in which he exonerates him in every particular, is surprised that any charges of the nature shown in the Morehouse circulars should have been made and assures Mr. Baker that he will support him on election day and is asking his friends to do likewise. IF MR. MATTY THOUGHT MR. BAKER HAD TRIED TO INJURE HIM IN ANY WAY WOULD HE SUPPORT HIM FOR COUNTY JUDGE? AND THE LETTER FROM MR. MATTY CAME UNSOLICITED AND WAS A SURPRISE TO MR. BAKER.

Mr. Baker is charged with unprofessional conduct in the case of Hattie C. Porter against Fred R. Foster. The plaintiff in this action owned a farm in the town of Constantia which was composed mostly of sand hills and not fit for cultivation. She wanted to get rid of it. She got in communication with Mr. Foster who owned a farm in Alabama. The Alabama farm was worth about as much as the Constantia farm. There was an exchange of deeds and when Hattie C. Porter learned that she had not bettered herself in the trade she began an action to have the deeds set aside. District Attorney Baker was retained by Mr. Foster to defend the action. It was a case where both parties were trying to get the better of the bargain, and neither of them were satisfied. It was shown that Foster had made misrepresentations, and Justice Rogers told Mr. Baker that it was a matter that he should look up as District Attorney. Mr. Morehouse claims that Mr. Baker never took any action in this matter. In court Mr. Baker told Justice Rogers that he did not want to defend an action in which his client might be criminally liable, and Justice Rogers said, "We will take that up when it comes." Mr. Baker, as District Attorney, did investigate the matter. He found that he could not make out a case against Foster, and further received a letter from S. M. Wing, the attorney for Mrs. Porter, asking him not to present the case.

Mr. Baker did investigate and found that Foster was an inmate of an insane asylum in Wisconsin and did not believe that the taxpayers of this county desired that any action should be taken under the circumstances.

MOREHOUSE KNEW THAT THIS CHARGE AGAINST MR. BAKER WAS FALSE WHEN HE MADE IT.

Mr. Baker is charged with not properly investigating the report of Comptroller Glynn. THIS IS THE MOST MALICIOUS CHARGE OF ANY MADE.

Mr. Morehouse knows that Mr. Baker did investigate the Comptroller's report at the first opportunity that he had to do so and that the Grand Jury which has been in session in this county, has spent two weeks in going over the charges contained in the report, and that the matter has been fully and thoroughly gone over, and that it is for the members of the Grand Jury to determine the persons who are guilty of any criminal act and that the presentation of indictments is left solely with the Grand Jury. Mr. Baker could only advise the grand jurors as to the law, and it was for the members to act. MR. BAKER DID NOT PRESENT THE REPORT TO THE MAY GRAND JURY BECAUSE JUSTICE DE ANGELIS ADVISED HIM NOT TO DO SO, AND THE GRAND JURY AT THAT TIME VOTED UNANIMOUSLY NOT TO CONSIDER THE REPORT. MR. MOREHOUSE KNOWS ALL THESE FACTS, YET HE CONTINUES TO REITERATE HIS FALSE AND LYING STATEMENTS.

A circular, purporting to be an affidavit of James Graham, of Sandy Creek, who was the foreman of the January Grand Jury, charges Mr. Baker with getting Mr. Graham drunk. Mr. Morehouse fathers this circular also. Mr. Graham, who admits that he was drunk while the Grand Jury was in session, must be a weak-kneed sort of a man to make such an affidavit. MR. BAKER DENOUNCES THE CHARGE AS A DOWNRIGHT FALSEHOOD AND A LIE. A man is his own master. If he does not want to drink, he need not drink, and this affidavit of James Graham cannot but be met with the contempt which it deserves. GRAHAM GOT DRUNK, WAS REPREMANDED BY DISTRICT ATTORNEY BAKER, AND THINKS HE WILL GET EVEN BY SUCH A CHARGE AS THIS.

Mr. Baker is charged with securing indictments against Dr. J. T. Dwyer and B. D. Houghton in the celebrated Board of Health case in Oswego and then not arresting the men and bringing them to trial. The complaint on which these indictments were found was made by W. J. Dempsey. Mayor Mansfield had appointed men to the Board of Health and County Judge Stowell also appointed members for the same positions. Dempsey claimed that the men appointed by Mayor Mansfield were holding office illegally. At the same time when the indictment was found, a civil action was brought to test the legality of the appointments made by Judge Stowell. Mr. Baker did not make any movement with the indictments because he was awaiting the decision of the courts in the civil action. The Court of Appeals decided that the law under which Judge Stowell had made the appointments was unconstitutional. When this decision was rendered the indictments were dismissed and neither Dr. Dwyer or Mr. Houghton were put to the disgrace of an arrest or the expense of a trial. Mr. Baker did his full duty in this matter, and instead of being censured, should be commended, and certainly the men who were indicted have never complained of the treatment they received at the hands of Mr. Baker.

A circular was issued by Pomona Grange in which the charges in the Comptroller's report were gone over. This circular was prepared by the Democrats and was put out as a political document by that party. Pomona Grange is a non-political body. Hundreds of its members are angered by the fact that an attempt has been made to use the organization for political purposes and will resent the acts of certain members of the organization by voting the straight Republican ticket. Hundreds of Grangers, who are Democrats, will vote the Republican ticket this year because of this circular.

There is not a single thing in the circulars which have been sent out under the name of D. P. Morehouse which reflects in any way on the integrity and fitness of William B. Baker for the office of County Judge. there has not been a single charge made against him which has not been answered and which has not been found to be a lie, sent out for the purpose of trying to create a prejudice against Mr. Baker. On the other hand, it has been shown that Louis C. Rowe, the Democratic candidate, is without court experience. It has been shown that he never tried a case in the Supreme Court unassisted; that he has never tried but one case in the County Court, and that he is absolutely unfamiliar with the criminal law. He showed this last year when as the candidate of the Democratic-Prohibition party he contributed $200 to the Prohibition Campaign Committee, and now admits that he did not know at the time that there was a law which prohibits candidates for judicial offices to contribute to political committees. It has been shown that he is a "bucketshop operator," and Stephen A. O'Brien of Oswego, who conducted a "bucketshop" in that city, declares that Rowe took all the money which he won, and when he lost, refused to pay, and that he was forced to threaten an action and that Rowe settled for one-half the amount due.

WILLIAM B. BAKER IS QUALIFIED IN EVERY WAY FOR THE POSITION OF COUNTY JUDGE. LOUIS C. ROWE IS ABSOLUTELY UNQUALIFIED FOR THE POSITION. WHICH OF THESE TWO MEN ARE YOU GOING TO VOTE FOR ON ELECTION DAY?

That William B. Baker is qualified for the position of County Judge is clearly shown in the letters he has received from the members of the Oswego County Bar Association. Among those who have sent Mr. Baker letters and assured him of their support are the Hon. Maurice L. Wright, former Justice of the Supreme Court, Hon. H. L. Howe, Hon. S. B. Mead, Hon. N. S. Bentley, Claude E. Guile, Torrey A. B. Ball, H. M. Stacy, E. A. Barnes, A. C. Coon, S. C. Huntington, F. G. Whitney, E. B. Powell, F. D. Culkin, W. M. Gallagher, A. S. Wright, A. T. Jennings, G. M. Fanning, J. C. Henry, J. T. McCaffrey, D. A. Colony, Clayton I. Miller, and many others. When the lawyers of the county believe that Mr. Baker is better qualified for the position of County Judge, that is pretty good evidence that he is the best man for the place.

THE MAN THE MAIN THING.

Difference Between Bryan and Taft. What the Baltimore Sun Says.

The Baltimore Sun, which caused one of the big sensations of the campaign by its advocacy of Taft for the presidency, points out that, while Bryan on his speechmaking visit recently to Baltimore attracted a large number of people to hear his message, twelve years ago he spoke there to one of the greatest outpourings that that city had ever seen at a political meeting and that shortly afterward Baltimore gave a majority against him of 21,098 votes.

This editorial states that in opposing the election of Mr. Bryan the Sun is not opposing true Democracy or Democratic principles. The choice, it says, is not so much between parties as between men. "The people, we believe, will decide in favor of restoring prosperity through Mr. Taft rather than in turning prosperity from the door through Bryan. The people now desire above all things the return of normal business and industrial conditions and industrial peace. The working people want employment and good wages. We do not believe that these things can be attained by a man who has won prominence, not by sound and enlightened statesmanship, but by ceaseless agitation, by ceaseless strivings after something new and strange. Mr. Taft will carry out fearlessly and faithfully the policies which the people demand, but he will not consider it necessary to throw the country into bankruptcy and business stagnation in order to make it virtuous."

More Than Enough Is Too Much.

To maintain health, a mature man or woman needs just enough food to repair the waste and supply energy and body heat. The habitual consumption of more food than is necessary for these purposes is the prime cause of stomach troubles, rheumatism and disorders of the kidneys. If troubled with indigestion, revise your diet, let reason and not appetite control and take a few doses of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and you will soon be all right again. WILLING AND ABLE.

"Taft Can Clean Off the Desk," and He Will Do It.

Considering Mr. Taft in the light of the things he has done and will have to do as president, a close student of public men in Washington recently wrote of him as follows:

"The times demand not a man bearing promise of new things, but a man who is to finish the things begun. Such a man is Taft, a hewer of wood, who has no ambition to link his name with new measures, but who, with a steady hand and a heart always kind and a mind always generously just, can clean off the desk.

"He knows that the desk is cluttered up. He knows that it may take six or eight years to get down to the mahogany under things now pending. But the American people must know that in some way this must be done before this nation can go further, and hence there is a belief that the man who can make the Hepburn railroad law as much a part of our common life as the postal regulations, who can grind the rough edges off the Sherman law through the courts, who can finish the canal and deal with Cuba kindly, honestly and firmly, who can lead the brown men of the islands farther into the light, is this big, hardworking, soft hearted, fair minded, unselfish man Taft. He can clean off the desk."

Tammany's Lost Votes.

The result of the registration in Greater New York forecasts a heavy loss to the Democratic vote in those boroughs. The loss in the registration in the nineteen Tammany strongholds amounts to over 15,000. On the other hand, there has been a gain of over 10,000 in the Republican districts. This means that the Democratic majority will be cut down at least 25,000 votes. The city has increased enormously in population since four years ago, and still the registration has fallen over 5,000 in that time. In the opinion of experts the Tammany loss proves the assertion made for years that the Democratic organization has been casting a heavy fraudulent vote.

Bricks and Bouquets.

I will sign no bills for popularity—would not hold the office of governor if I had to do what any one told me. Walk in the middle of the road and you will get bricks from both sides.—Governor Hughes.

But the governor will get more ballots and bouquets than bricks on Nov. 3.

[Entered as second class matter, April 12, 1882 at the postoffice at Fulton, New York, under the act of Congress of March, 3, 1879.]

E. K. HUGHES, Editor
W. E. HUGHES, Proprietor

Issued Every Wednesday at No. 66 South First street, Fulton, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 28, 1908

THE LAST WORD.

This is the last visit of the Times to the electors before Nov. 3, and it begs your attention for this last word.

The Republican National ticket must be elected to carry on the work commenced by President Roosevelt. No other ticket can or will do that for which the Republican nominees stand pledged.

The Republican State ticket must be elected to prevent a continuance of the shocking methods revealed in the Attorney General's and the State Engineer's offices. The defeat of Governor Hughes will make the Empire State an object of contempt and distrust throughout the United States. His election will be a triumph of principle over politicians of the "Fingy" Connors type.

The Republican County ticket must be elected to insure a complete revolution in the manner of conducting affairs in Oswego county. What chance will Oswego county stand to recover the large amount of money which is due it, if A. S. Barker should be elected District Attorney and L. C. Rowe elected County Judge? County Attorney Coville would be hampered and hindered in his every move toward the recovery of the monies if the Democratic ticket is elected. Every suspect, every one charged with illegally paying or receiving money from the county, is working strenuously and contributing freely of money and lies to defeat William B. Baker for County Judge and Freelon J. Davis for District Attorney. Why?

With Republicans in the district attorney's office, the county judgeship, the county attorney's office, and with a Republican Board of Supervisors, a square deal will be accorded the county and her taxpayers. Prompt, vigorous, prosecution of the lawbreakers will follow, and Oswego county will come to her own again.

On these grounds the Times urges all electors to support the nominees of the Republican party. They are everyone worthy of your suffrage, and your best interests demand their election.

DYING GASP OF AN UNWORTHY CAUSE.

The electors of this county will soon be deluged with another circular letter from the "Political Purity Slanderbund," of which D. P. Morehouse of Oswego is the chairman. This letter will probably be the last effort of this coterie which has not hesitated to stoop to any degree of meanness in their infamous efforts to hoodwink the Republican electors of Oswego county.

The letter will be an attack upon the Sandy Creek News, which is edited and published by F. D. Corse, the complaint being made that Mr. Corse had "thus far declined to publish anything in the interest of the candidates for County Judge and Sheriff who are running in opposition to the (alleged) machine-made ticket, although he had been asked to do so by the "Independent Judiciary Committee." In other words, Mr. Corse refused to be coerced into supporting the nominees of the Democratic-Prohibition party for county offices at the dictation of Morehouse, Bartlett, et al., preferring, it is presumed, to use his own judgment in the course he determined to pursue through his paper in that as well as in other matters.

This alleged apostacy by Mr. Corse from the Morehouse Slanderbund has been seized with madness by the "reformers," who will remind Mr. Corse in the letter about to be issued that his paper was identified with the alleged "Square-deal" cause in 1907, but he now refused to accede to a request by Mr. Bartlett to publish an attack on the Republican nominees and in favor of the men on the Democratic-Prohibition ticket whom Morehouse and Bartlett are anxious to boost into office.

The largest charity can offer little excuse for the conduct of the men composing the "Slanderbund" who have been honored beyond their just deserts by the Republican electors of this county; indeed, the man who has been the most active in his efforts to give Morehouse political prominence is now showered with his abuse. Even among sycophants there are degrees of meanness, and the apostacy from the Republican party of the coterie in this county, who are now trying to destroy the influence and reputation of any one who might disagree with them has not only earned for the apostates additional infamy, but their efforts are being followed by languor and nausea on the part of the electors.

Whatsoever things are false, whatsoever things are dishonest, whatsoever things are unjust, whatsoever things are impure, whatsoever things are hateful, whatsoever things are of evil report, if there be any vice and if there be any infamy, all these are blended in the attacks of the "Slanderbund" on the nominees of the Republican party in this county by a few men who are under pay for the ignominious services they are trying to render.

GOVERNOR HUGHES COMING TO FULTON.

Tomorrow, Thursday morning, Governor Hughes will arrive in Oswego at 8:30 and will address a meeting in the Richardson Theatre at 8:45. He will leave by special train on the O. & W., following his address in Oswego and will reach Fulton at 9:45. A delegation of prominent Republicans of Fulton will accompany him from this city to Oswego and will escort him back and to the Foster Theatre where he will address a Mass meeting which it is hoped will be attended by every voter in the city regardless of his political belief. The Governor will leave on the 11.17, D. L. & W., to continue his tour of the State. In the party with him will be eighteen men prominent in State Republican circles, nine of whom are newspaper men.

Governor Hughes will be in Fulton just one hour and it has been decided to eliminate all musical programs, etc., that he may devote every moment of his sojourn here to the issues of the day.

Fulton is indeed fortunate to entertain even for so brief a period a man so prominent in every State in the Union and whose services are so eagerly besought. He occupies a position most unique before the entire civilized world today, yet when his schedule is arranged so that he can come to our little city, he grasps the opportunity gladly. Our citizens may well take pride in giving him a royal welcome as he stands high in the ranks of statesmanship and is in verity the pioneer of a safe and sane administrative method.

Not only do Republicans delight to do him deference but of him that bitter partisan Democrat, Charles N. Bulger, of Oswego, has said:

"Just as long as wrong needs to be resisted, just so long as right needs to be assisted, it is important for the people in this great State of ours as well as in this great beloved country of ours at large, and particularly for us of New York, that we might have in the executive chair with the mighty power vested in that office under our Constitution a man who is intelligent, a man who is honest, and a man like Governor Hughes, who is absolutely fearless in the discharge of his constitutional duty."

Come to the meeting, citizens. Let us show Governor Hughes and the people of New York State that we appreciate a man of ability, integrity and honor.

Vote on Hospital Proposition.

When you go the polls on Tuesday next, taxpayer, do not fail to register your vote in favor of the $1,500 per annum for the maintenance of the new city hospital which will be made possible only by your vote in the affirmative. After the small appropriation is assured, the $30,000 hospital will become the property of the city instead of being a private institution and many of the grievances, real or imaginary, which now exist, will be done away with.

Vote yes on the appropriation proposition.

Erroneous Statement Corrected.

I understand that the statement has been made and circulated that I said that I would vote against Governor Hughes, and I wish to say that any such statement is absolutely false and without foundation in fact. I intend to vote the straight Republican ticket as I have done in the past.

TORREY A. BALL,
Surrogate's Clerk.

Eastern Star Social.

The members of the Eastern Star and their friends held an unusually pleasant social on Wednesday evening, Oct. 21, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Blodgett, Cayuga street. There was a large number present. Games were played. Refreshments of the most dainty kinds were served, after which one of the most pleasing features of the evening were the songs rendered by Miss Nellie Tilling of Watertown. All were so thoroughly delighted that she was obliged to respond again and again to the requests for just one more. At a late hour the guests took their departure, feeling that it had indeed been a most social evening.

STATEMENT OF CHARLES W. TAFT

Republican Candidate for Sheriff Controverts the Malicious Stories Which Have Been Circulated Against Him.

To the Voters of Oswego County:

While regretting the occasion for doing so, yet owing to the fact that my opponent and others are trying to poison the public mind by spreading false accusations against me through printed circulars and otherwise, accusations detrimental to my canvass for the office of Sheriff, it seems necessary in my own defense to bring the real facts before you.

In a circular purporting to be issued by D. P. Morehouse, Henry Stevens and P. A. Welling they charge that in the second year of the Comptroller's report concerning the County's business I was solely responsible for the bills audited by the Sheriff's and Jailer's Committee of that year. Now, whatever the nature of those bills, it is due to me to say that I was not on that committee at all that year.

Another falsehood is the allegation that I was on the committee that authorized the payment of $691.26 for extra board. Neither was I on that committee as the records show. A further falsehood in the circular is that I was chairman of the Board of Supervisors during the last year covered by the Comptroller's report when in fact I was not chairman in any one of the three years the report deals with.

Another falsehood, wholly baseless, is that, if elected Sheriff, I am under a pledge or contract to reappoint Frank White, present deputy and jailer at Pulaski. In justice to Mr. White and myself I wish to say that no such pledge was ever given and that we never have had a word together on that subject. More than that, I am under no pledge or promise to appoint anyone to any place under me and in that respect am absolutely free, if elected, as I fully expect to be, to make such appointments as I see fit and the duties of the place demand.

Unable to find anything in either my public or private business life detrimental to any trust imposed in me, my opponents have started a story that I am not a good faith resident and tarpayer of this County. While the people of the Eastern part of the County know better, yet some in other parts of the County have been led to credit what is without a particle of truth and as malicious in its inception and circulation as it is false.

The simple fact is that I was born in the Town of Constantia, this County, and have lived in the County practically all my life with the exception of the few years in which I was learning the druggist business in Oneida, Syracuse and New York City. I started the drug business in Williamstown in my own name sixteen years ago and still continue in it. In all this time I have voted and resided nowhere else. In this time, too, I have been postmaster of Williamstown for eleven years, connected with the Board of Education twelve years, supervisor for four years and the head of the Fire Department from the time of its organization.

While I do not claim to be wealthy, yet all the property, real and personal, I have on earth is located in Williamstown and it is there and nowhere else that I am assessed. The apended affidavit of the Democratic assessors of Williamstown shows that I am assessed there and another affidavit of the Chamberlain of the City of Oneida, Madison County, where my calumniators claim I have property, shows that I am not assessed there at all. These affidavits of the officials of both counties should suffice to refute all fabrications that have been or may hereafter be put afloat charging that I have property interests or a residence anywhere except in the Town of Williamstown, this County.

Another falsehood industriously circulated by my opponents and defamers is that I have sold out my store in Williamstown. In disproof of this falsehood I refer you to the records in the office of County Treasurer Moore, which show that the store license is taken out in my name as senior member, which could not be the case had I not an interest in the business.

Another malicious fabrication industriously circulated is that if I had not spent a large amount of money I could not have been nominated. This is an insult to my friends throughout the County, who worked hard and unselfishly for my nomination and whose kindnes and fidelity I never can forget and whose only reward will be my best efforts to so discharge the duties of Sheriff that no reproach may come to the office or them through me. I will say here that I was offered twice over all the expenses the canvas cost me if I would withdaw from the contest and this from a quarter now opposing me on grounds that are a web of falsehoods throughout.

It is because of the persistent circulation of falsehoods like the foregoing that I am taking this course to appraise the public and you, sir, in particular, of the actual facts in the case.

I am, believe me,
Very Sincerely Yours,
CHARLES. W. TAFT.

ELECTORS, do not be beguiled into voting for a Democrat for the Assembly from this district. A joint session of the incoming Senate and Assembly will select a United States Senator, and if this State is to be saved from discredit it can only be done by every Republican voting a straight ticket, thereby defeating the arch-conspirators who want to land "Fingy" in one of the highest offices within the gift of the people of this State.

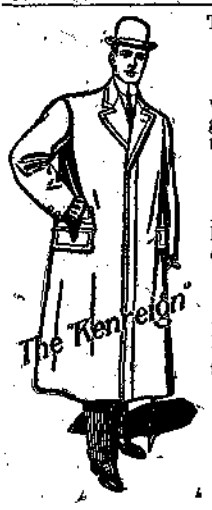
"THE people don't want no principles; they want to be on the winning side." This is one of "Fingy" Connors's epigrammatic sayings. No matter how good a man Mr Chanler is, "Fingy" is the issue now in the Empire State, and a vote for Chanler means the elevation of a man of the Connors' stripe to a position of prominence in the affairs of this State and probably his election to the United States Senate. "Fingy" is credited with being able to sign his name with a rubber stamp.

MR. CHANLER thinks he has answered Governor Hughes. As a matter of fact he has only replied to him.

SUPREME COURT.

The jury in the case of Anna Holleran against the New York Central Railroad company in Supreme Court at Oswego brought in a verdict of $60 for the plaintiff. The plaintiff asked damages on account of an alleged depreciation of her property by reason of the building of a siding.

After being out all night the jury in the case of Madison Dominick against Thomas Vanderlinder and Myron Stranahan, disagreed and was discharged by Justice Rogers. Mr. Dominick sued for $10,000 damages for injuries he claims to have received by the defendants last election night.



The action of Cora Chetney against the Continental Casualty Company, of New York, to recover $1,000 on a policy has been settled. Mrs. Chetney's brother, Patrick Casey, was killed by falling into an excavation of the New York subway. His sister was the beneficiary.

"The House That Makes Good"

First Street — Lewis Block — Fulton, N. Y

When Bryan Had A Chance.

Mr. Bryan was in the house of representatives for four years and was a prominent member of its most important committee, the Ways and Means. The president and congress were both Democratic. It was Bryan's opportunity. What does the record show that he ever did? This was a time when he held an office in Washington next door to the White House, when he was part of one of the coordinate branches of the government and when if he had employed himself with the same zeal he is now displaying in his own behalf he might have induced his democratic associates to take up some of his theories and see what they were worth. Was he afraid or were they afraid to do so? Mr. Bryan failed to act when he had the chance. If he could do nothing as a member of congress, not even talk in favor of his ideas, what could he do in the White House?

When he was in congress the administration was democratic and Mr Bryan had a clear field. President Cleveland was so dissatisfied with the tariff bill—that Bryan and his associates on the Ways and Means committee insisted on passing that he declared it "a perfidy and dishonor," and refused to sign it. It became a law without signature. We all know what happened when Bryan's tariff bill, better known as the Gorman-Wilson measure, went into effect. The recent panic is nothing compared with that which occurred as soon as the Bryan tariff was assured. In the language of Judge Taft "the passage of the bill prostrated all industries and brought about four years memorable in the history of the country as the worst financial disaster it has ever seen." For this depression what was Mr Bryan's remedy? Free silver, the very thought of which intensified the depression! Is such a man to be trusted with the destiny of the American republic?

DEMOCRATIC MASS MEETING.

Mr. Kern, who was to have spoken in the Foster theatre on Wednesday evening, failed to appear, having been called home by the critical illness of his only son. Mr. W. D. MacNamara became chairman of the meeting and an attorney named Sears from Buffalo spoke. There was but one thing out of the ordinary that the speaker said and that statement filled every veteran with just rage at the speaker and caused deflections from the Democratic party therefrom.

The statement in question was the questioning of the parentage of Abram Lincoln, the speaker stating that it was generally accepted that Nancy Hanks was his mother but that his male parentage was shrouded in mystery. This was a base and dastardly attack upon one of the most revered characters in the history of this country and one which has never been perpetrated before, to the knowledge of the writer or that of any of the audience. However lowly Lincoln's parentage may have been does not matter. The only one thing th he was responsible for was risin above his early conditions and it was left after all the reverence vouchsafed Lincoln by the world, for the whiffet who occupied the boards at the theatre on Wednesday night, to call into question his parentage.

One thing may well be said of th speaker from Buffalo. He proved b this act that he had never risen above a very lowly level of mind and public conduct.

The women of America are year by year becoming more and more attached to La France shoes —a shoe made in strict accordance with the latest Parisian styles adapted to the uses and high standards of the American women.

Women are attracted by this shoe first because of its refined and beautiful appearance. Then they find — often much to their surprise — that no other shoe they ever wore was so remarkably comfortable or held its shape so well.

This is indeed a rare combination to be found in one shoe — due to new and improved methods of leather selection and workmanship.

Mere description does not do this shoe justice — trying it on is a revelation.

We hope you will come in and try on a pair of La France shoes, as we think they will give you some entirely new ideas.

A. B. SIMPSON, Clerk.

War Veterans And Pension Legislation.

Republican Party Wholly Responsible For Caring For Old Soldiers.

Democrats Opposed All Friendly Aid—A Damning Record. Taft Great Friend of G. A. R.

The Republican party has just cause to be proud of its pension record. With the aid of patriotic men from other parties it waged to a successful conclusion the greatest war of modern times.

It has never ceased to honor the officers and men who composed the victorious army. Every Republican president elected since the close of that war had been a conspicuous officer of the Federal army with the exception of President Roosevelt, whose brilliant record in the Spanish war is a matter of just pride to the American people.

Republican Pension Legislation.

Republican legislation for the old soldier, his widow and his minor children has been generous and bountiful. The invalid pension law of July 14, 1862, and the dependent law of June 27, 1890, are monuments of Republican achievement and bear witness to the country's tender care of its soldiers and its sailors and their families.

The act of June 27, 1890, is a fitting illustration of the generosity of the Republican party toward the veterans of the civil war. This law was passed by a Republican congress, was signed by a Republican president, and through its administration there was expended during the next fiscal year a total amount of $88,708,850.71. The number of soldiers receiving the benefit of this act was 443,721, while the number of the dependents relieved by this act was 171,259. The gains in the number of pensioners under this act over the previous year was 8,643, and the gain from June 30, 1890, to Jan. 5, 1904, was 4,993.

The Republican party passed the act of April 19, 1908, increasing pensions of all widows from $8 to $12 per month and granting pensions without reference to the value of property or income. The Republican party also passed the act of Feb. 6, 1897, granting pensions to soldiers by reason of age alone, without regard to disability.

Democratic Opposition Record.

The Democratic party, as such, has opposed every measure voting appropriations for pensions. Its record for the past forty years is one of opposition to those men who bore the hardships of war and jeopardized their lives that the Union might be preserved. Here is a brief list of their official adverse acts in congress toward the veterans of the civil war:

In 1878 a bill passed the house repealing all limitations of time in which applications for arrears of pensions should be made. This was opposed by a majority of the Democrats. The bill increasing the pensions for widows from $8 to $12 per month was opposed by the Democrats. The amputation bill passed Aug. 4, 1886, was opposed by the Democrats and voted for solidly by the Republicans in the house. The widows' arrears bill and the disability pension bill were both fought bitterly by the Democrats.

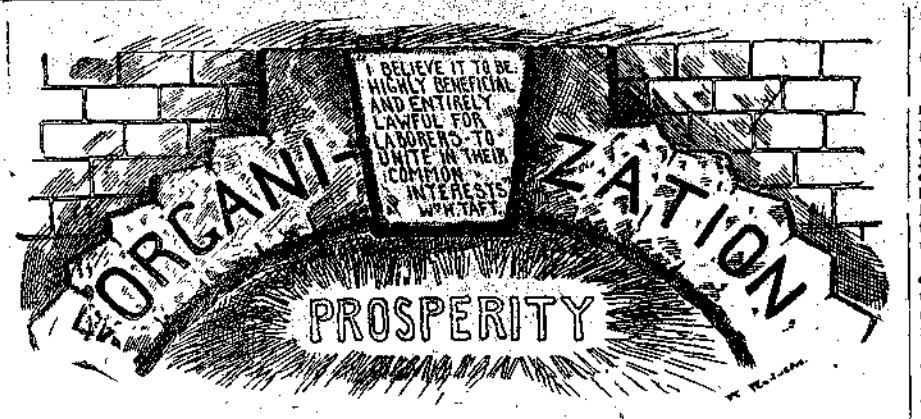
In the Forty-third congress a dependent pension bill was voted on in the senate, the Republicans supporting it solidly and the Democrats opposing it by a two-third vote. In the house this bill was voted for solidly by Republicans and opposed by a majority of the Democrats. After it had passed the house and senate it was vetoed by President Cleveland, a Democrat. An effort was made in the house to pass the bill over Cleveland's veto, the Republicans voting 138 for it and the Democrats voting 125 against it.

This vote showed that twenty-nine Democrats who had originally voted for the bill hastened to avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by the president's veto to vote against it, thus testifying their real sentiments, while twenty other Democrats who had dodged the first vote came up promptly and supported the veto. The dependent pension bill was bitterly opposed by the Democrats, the Republicans putting it through despite the opposition. This bill, as the old soldiers well know, was promptly signed by President Harrison.

Democrats Dislike Veterans.

To sum up, the following gives the total of fourteen votes of congress upon the most important of the various pension measures presented since the war—viz:

Democrats for the bills	417
Democrats against the bills	648
Republicans for the bills	1,066
Republicans against the bills	None



The official records of national legislation show that of all the Republican presidents since the war only one has withheld his signature from any pension bill, and that was General Grant, who was forced to decline to approve five of these bills. The Democrats have been in power for only a few brief years since the war, and their president, Grover Cleveland, vetoed 620 pension bills. The records show that every pension law has been passed by Republican votes, and every pension bill defeated has been defeated by Democratic votes. Every pension bill vetoed, 529 in number, was vetoed by a Democratic president except five.

Pension Planks in Platforms.

For the past fifty years the Democratic politicians have juggled with the soldier vote and pension question in their platforms. While giving every evidence of being really hostile at heart, they have thrown out bits of political bait from time to time in the hope of cajoling the veterans into voting the Democratic ticket. During all these years the Republican platform has rung as clear as a bell on the pension question, as per this plank in the 1908 platform:

"Another Republican policy which must ever be maintained is that of generous provision for those who have fought the country's battles and for the widows and orphans of those who have fallen. We commend the increase in the widows' pensions made by the present congress and declare for a liberal administration of all pension laws, to the end that the people's gratitude may grow deeper as the memories of the heroic sacrifice grow more sacred with the passing years."

The Democratic platform favors pensioning "the surviving veterans and their dependents because it relieves the country of the necessity of maintaining a large standing army." The patriotism of the veterans is ignored. This platform does not favor pensioning widows and dependents of deceased veterans, only "surviving veterans and their dependents."

THE KEYSTONE.

BUCKNER BOLTS BRYAN

Veteran Kentucky Democrat Criticises Nebraskan.

CALLS HIM "JACK O' LANTERN."

Declares For Taft as a Man Qualified by Training and Experience to Discharge the Duties of the Presidency.

General Simon Bolivar Buckner of Kentucky, the nominee of the sound money Democrats in 1896, having been asked by a sound money Democrat of Missouri for an expression of opinion on the present political situation, says:

Mr. Bryan's platform has many planks which express an ardent wish to see many things accomplished, but it seems impotent to suggest any policy which will tend to promote the desired results.

It seems that in his whole political career he has been flitting from place to place, flashing in every direction a sort of jack o' lantern, as a beacon light, to attract to his support numerous political bands wandering through a wilderness of error, each in pursuit of its own special will o' the wisp, each straying farther than the other from the plain highway of Democracy and having but one purpose in common—the overthrow of the existing order of society and the erection upon its ruins of a governmental fabric which, if constructed, must inevitably crumble under the mutually repellent action of its own discordant elements, leaving behind only a nihilistic chaos from which it would require generations of mankind to evolve a sane and stable government.

I believe there is enough of true patriotism in all the parties of our country to save us from the perils that threaten the destruction of our institutions.

S. B. BUCKNER.

Explanatory, Not Exclamatory.

[Hartford Courant.]

Judge Taft is not an exclamatory man, but an explanatory man. He is not denunciatory, but analytic. His mind does not ring, but it thinks. His nature is not pugnacious, but conciliatory. His attitude is not that of an opponent, but that of an intelligent and candid friend. His instinct is to deal fairly and justly by all men, no matter what they think or say about him—to abhor the sin, but to deal kindly with the sinner. He does not play upon public emotions—he does not know how—but he both knows how and has the courage to enlighten the public sense. He is a serene, instructed, experienced and self reliant figure in the noisy whirl of our politics.

WHAT TAFT HAS SAID

Things That Show Intellect and Sound Judgment.

TERSE ECONOMIC TRUTHS.

Fallacies of Bryanism Exposed in a Few Sentences—His Position in Regard to the Trusts—Exact Justice the Highest Ideal of Government.

By WALTER J. BALLARD.

Here are some of the striking things Taft has said:

"The Democratic party today as organized is nothing but organized incapacity."—At Montpelier, Vt.

"Bryan would have the initiative and referendum because he distrusts representative government and has no confidence in the ability of the people to select conscientious representatives. He would take away from courts, because he distrusts the ability of judges to resist the malign influences of the money power, the power to enforce their own orders."—At Columbus, O.

"Anything which makes capital idle or which reduces or destroys it must reduce both wages and the opportunity to earn wages."—At Cooper Union, New York City.

"The course of the administration has only been directed against such organized capital as was violating the statutes of the United States—and no other. The business men of our community as a whole are honest and their methods are sound."—At Boston, Mass.

"The so called colonial policy of the United States has added to our trade already something over a hundred million dollars a year."—At Cleveland, O.

"The administration of exact justice by courts without fear or favor, unmoved by the influence of the wealthy or the threats of the demagogue, is the highest ideal that a government of the people can strive for, and any means by which a suitor, however unpopular or poor, is deprived of enjoying this are to be condemned."—At Columbus, O.

"I believe that a navy is the greatest insurer of peace that we could possibly have—a navy commensurate with our resources, and commensurate with our coast line, and commensurate with the number of dependencies we have, and commensurate with our population, and commensurate with our influence as a world power."—At Cleveland, O.

"If we assume control over a people for the benefit of that people (as in the Philippines) and with the purpose of developing them to a self governing capacity and with the intention of giving them the right to become independent when they shall show themselves fit, the charge that we are imperialists is utterly without foundation."—At Cleveland, O.

"The present business system of the country rests on the protective tariff, and any attempt to change it to a free trade basis will certainly lead to disaster."—At Columbus, O.

"The Democratic party has no policy which the country can depend upon. Its whole stock in trade is that of irresponsible criticism and obstruction, and when charged with the responsibility of doing anything it utterly fails."—At Greensboro, N. C.

"Mr. Bryan asks me what I would do with the trusts. I answer that I would restrain all unlawful trusts with all the efficiency of injunctive process and would punish with all the severity of criminal prosecution every attempt on the part of aggregated capital to suppress competition."—At Columbus, O.

"As a party shows itself homogeneous, able to grasp the truth with respect to new issues, able to discard unimportant differencies of opinion, sensitive with respect to the successful maintenance of government and highly charged with the responsibility of its obligation to the people at large it establishes its claim to the confidence of the public and to its continuance in political power."—At Kansas City, Mo.

"The course of the Republican party since its organization in 1856 and its real assumption of control in 1861 down to the present day is remarkable for the foresight and ability of its leaders, for the discipline and solidarity of its members, for its efficiency and deep sense of responsibility for the preservation and successful maintenance of the government and for the greatest resourcefulness in meeting the various trying and difficult issues which a history of now a full half century has presented for solution."—At Kansas City, Mo.

THE MAN THE MAIN THING.

Difference Between Bryan and Taft. What the Baltimore Sun Says.

The Baltimore Sun, which caused one of the big sensations of the campaign by its advocacy of Taft for the presidency, points out that, while Bryan on his speechmaking visit recently to Baltimore attracted a large number of people to hear his message, twelve years ago he spoke there to one of the greatest outpourings that that city had ever seen at a political meeting and that shortly afterward Baltimore gave a majority against him of 21,098 votes.

This editorial states that in opposing the election of Mr. Bryan the Sun is not opposing true Democracy or Democratic principles. The choice, it says, is not so much between parties as between men. "The people, we believe, will decide in favor of restoring prosperity through Mr. Taft rather than in turning prosperity from the door through Bryan. The people now desire above all things the return of normal business and industrial conditions and industrial peace. The working people want employment and good wages. We do not believe that these things can be attained by a man who has won prominence, not by sound and enlightened statesmanship, but by ceaseless agitation, by ceaseless strivings after something new and strange. Mr. Taft will carry out fearlessly and faithfully the policies which the people demand, but he will not consider it necessary to throw the country into bankruptcy and business stagnation in order to make it virtuous."

WILLING AND ABLE.

Taft Can Clean Off the Desk," and He Will Do It.

Considering Mr. Taft in the light of the things he has done and will have to do as president, a close student of public men in Washington recently wrote of him as follows:

"The times demand not a man bearing promise of new things, but a man who is to finish the things begun. Such a man is Taft, a hewer of wood, who has no ambition to link his name with new measures, but who, with a steady hand and a heart always kind and a mind always generously just, can clean off the desk.

"He knows that the desk is cluttered up. He knows that it may take six or eight years to get down to the mahogany under things now pending. But the American people must know that in some way this must be done before this nation can go further, and hence there is a belief that the man who can make the Hepburn railroad law as much a part of our common life as the postal regulations, who can grind the rough edges off the Sherman law through the courts, who can finish the canal and deal with China kindly, honestly and firmly, who can lead the brown men of the islands farther into the light, is this big, hardworking, soft hearted, fair minded, unselfish man Taft. He can clean off the desk."

OPPOSITE AS THE POLES.

The Liberalism of Taft and the Radicalism of Bryan.

The radicalism of Bryan and the radicalism of Taft are as opposite as the poles. The radicalism of the former, by training and profession a politician, prompts to the advocacy of anything as good if new. The radicalism of the latter, by training and profession a statesman and jurist, prompts to the adoption of anything new if good.

There are false teachers everywhere, and they are the chief obstacles to the spread of that species of radicalism that in its greatest and best interpretation means the uplifting of humanity and the progress of the nation. The sort of radicalism or liberalism which adopts and advocates anything and everything in the category of theory and originality for personal aggrandizement or momentary political gain is the sort of radicalism that this country can well do without.

At twenty Mr. Taft was graduated from Yale, at twenty-two he was admitted to the bar, at twenty-three he was assistant prosecutor of Cincinnati, at twenty-four he was collector of internal revenue, at twenty-nine superior court judge in Ohio and at thirty-three solicitor general of the United States. When he received his degree of doctor of laws from Yale he was thirty-six and the youngest man upon whom the degree had ever been conferred.

With his children Mr. Taft is mighty chummy, especially with Charley, his youngest. He likes babies, too, and they like him.

THE TRUE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT.

As Exemplified by William Howard Taft and Bishop Brent.

Another American has shown the same noble spirit that moved William H. Taft to request President Roosevelt to withhold his appointment as justice of the United States supreme court that would have brought him back from his arduous work in the Philippines to the lighter labors and the more congenial scenes of his native land.

Missionary Bishop Brent of the Episcopal church in the Philippines, offered the bishopric of Washington, with its social advantages and agreeable surroundings and its opportunities for intercourse with many of the ablest men of this and other countries, preferred his life of self sacrifice in the far off oriental islands and declined to leave his work among the Filipinos for a mansion in the capital of the United States.

In the motives that actuated Mr. Taft and that led Bishop Brent to refuse to desert the Filipinos there is no essential difference.

"It has always been my dream to be in the supreme court," said Mr. Taft in reply to President Roosevelt when Mr. Taft had come to Washington to state the case of the Philippines to a committee of congress, "but if you should offer me a justiceship now, and if at the same time congress should deprive me of my entire salary as governor, I should go straight back to the Philippines nevertheless, for those people expect me back and believe I will not desert them."

"I believe I have the missionary spirit," he had told the senate committee.

Such is the true missionary spirit. It is the spirit that has carried Christian doctrine and Christian civilization to the uttermost parts of the earth, that has taught the brown man and the black man to feel that there are those of the whites who do not regard them merely as prey for the greed and ambition of the stronger race. The altruism of such men as Taft and Brent is a revelation to the people of our oriental possessions which must go far toward convincing them that Americans really have their welfare at heart and are leading them along the path of education and self reliance toward the goal of a stable and well ordered government.

BRYAN HAS A VARIETY OF NOSTRUMS.

Governor Hughes in his Lincoln speech said:

"Mr. Bryan has announced himself in favor of the extermination of trusts.

"To exterminate them he offers a variety of remedies. He has a large assortment of remedies, so that if you do not like one you may try another, and so on until you find one that pleases your fancy.

"But, analyzing all of them, you find that he makes three proposals which he thinks suitable and practicable in limiting the power of corporations. In the first place, he says, 'Let us prohibit the duplication of directors in competing corporations—that is, make it unlawful for a director in one concern to be a director in another.' This is a very pretty theory. But is it workable?

"You know quite well if a man owned the majority of stock in a number of corporations he would have such directors as he wanted, and whether there was any duplication or not the effect would be the same. 'Well, if you don't like that,' says Mr. Bryan, 'here is another proposal.

"'Let us go through the tariff schedules and put on the free list the things that are being manufactured by the trusts. That will destroy them.' True enough, but would it not also destroy the weaker manufacturers in the same line who are fighting against the trusts and who, being small, have the least power to resist. 'Well, then,' says Mr. Bryan, 'here's another that's bound to win. Let's cut down the output of each monopoly to 50 per cent.'

"Another pretty but wholly fanciful theory. I say that an attempt to regulate manufactures by percentages would entail such a complicated system of bureaus that government would be obnoxiously bureaucratic. All these schemes are an attempt to bring about reform by magic.

"I recognize the oratorical powers and believe firmly in the sincerity of the Democratic candidate, but I believe just as firmly that an enforcement of his principles would end in disaster."

An Old Campaigner.

From Rome rode a henchman stout
In alarm,
Said some folks were coming out
To the farm.
Cincinnatus heard his news
With a smile,
Donned his patent leather shoes
And his tile.

Baggy jeans did Cincinnat
Quickly don
And a battered old straw hat
Hustle on

Then into the fields he went.
That is how
The committee found the gent
At the plow.

Wheels Will Go Round if Taft Is Elected.

SO SAY MANUFACTURERS.

The National Association of Manufacturers, through its organ, American Industries, has just completed a canvass of its 3,000 members throughout the United States in nearly every line of trade to ascertain the country's commercial status twelve months after the panic. The canvass was not made to serve any political purpose, and the forthcoming election was not mentioned, but the members of the association have taken advantage of one of the questions to declare that prosperity depends upon the election of Taft.

The canvass was made by means of letters sent out two weeks ago. Four questions were asked of the members relating to the exact condition of trade at present, the percentage of increase in business in the last ten months, the possibilities for future improvement and any suggestions which might serve to better future conditions. Everybody answered the last question by suggesting that Taft be elected.

Agricultural implements show the largest percentage of increase and vehicles the lowest. The textiles show a small percentage of increase with a rather unfavorable outlook, while leather and its manufactures and the lumber industry are fairly satisfied and optimistic. Very little attention is paid to the tariff as a disturbing element, but a number of manufacturers, especially those interested in railway supplies and allied trades, complain against pending or threatened railway legislation.

The steel trade and the movement of pig iron, which form the most accurate barometer of trade conditions, make a distinctly encouraging report, as 70 per cent of the iron and steel plants in the association report conditions good, 78 per cent have had an increase during the last ten months, and 85 per cent have reason to believe that prospects for the immediate future are reassuring. Machinery, including all classes throughout the country, shows present conditions 68 per cent good, and 76 per cent of the machinery manufacturers have had an increase since Jan. 1 last. Only one manufacturer of agricultural implements is pessimistic regarding the future.

In food products 80 per cent report business good, 94 per cent have had an increase, and all are optimistic for the future. Lumbermen report 85 per cent good, and 80 per cent have had an increase, while 93 per cent of them are hopeful for the future. Of the leather manufacturers 91 per cent report good, 94 per cent have had an increase, and 93 per cent are optimistic.

Other percentages from the various trades reporting conditions good, an increase of business and good possibilities for the future are as follows:

Tools and hardware, 77, 87 and 92; drugs and chemicals, 83, 80 and 82; paper and printing, 75, 76 and 94; textiles, 68, 71 and 89; vehicles, 52, 56 and 85.

James W. Van Cleave, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, says of the outlook:

"Nearly every issue of the trades papers all over the country reports the reopening of steel, cotton and woolen mills and the increase in the working forces of some of these already open. There are fewer idle persons in the United States now than at any previous time since the beginning of the scare last November. Aside from the chance—the very remote chance—that Bryan may be elected there is not a cloud on the business horizon, so far as I can see at this moment.

"Let it be remembered that in the shape in which it presents itself tariff adjustment will cause no perceptible halt in the revival of trade. By its platform and the repeated promises of its candidate the dominant party is pledged to revision. Just as I have urged, the revising is to be done by an extra session of congress just as soon as the new president enters office in March, 1909. The adjustments will be done in the interest of the American manufacturer, the American worker and the American consumer and not in the interest of the manufacturers and workers of Great Britain, Germany, Japan and the rest of Europe and Asia."

As a resigner Mr. Taft probably holds the record. He resigned as assistant prosecutor of Cincinnati to become internal revenue collector, resigned to become superior court judge, resigned to become solicitor general of the United States, resigned to become federal circuit court judge, resigned to head the Philippine commission, resigned to become secretary of war and finally resigned that to run for president.

Each of Mr. Taft's three brothers is a lawyer, although Charles P. finds more fun in running a newspaper than he does in law, and Horace has made schoolteaching his life work, being the head of the Taft school in Watertown, Conn. Henry W. Taft is one of the leaders of the New York bar.

If Tom Watson has found the lost Populist platform, as he contends, he should forward it to Lincoln, Neb., without delay. It is William Jennings Bryan's personal property. His initials will be found carved in the southwest corner of the cheap money plank.

Journal:—After camping on the trail of a thief, who stole his watch and chain nearly a year ago, in true Indian fashion, George E. McNally, a prominent Red Man of Syracuse and a member of the Mystique Krewe, not only located the thief, but recovered his watch Monday night. McNally was acting as entertainer at a banquet of the Lewanee Fishing club at the Jefferson hotel on Feb. 22, and left his watch and chain in a dressing room. When he went to get it, it had disappeared. He reported the matter to the police, but according to his statement that was the last he ever heard from that source. McNally says that when he saw that the police were not going to recover his property for him, he determined to do it himself, and, accordingly, started to work. He claims that he finally located the watch and traced it through the hands of four different persons. Monday night he completed his work, when he had his watch handed to him with the assurance that the thief would return the chain if his name was not given to the police. "I'm going to get that chain," said McNally, "and I'm going to give the name of the thief to the police. It's their business to get thieves and recover stolen property at the same time. I have been interested in the recovery of my property, and if they had made the investigation as I did, there is no reason why one of the detectives might not have had the credit of the recovery and an arrest as well."

DOCTORS MISTAKES

Are said often to be buried six feet under ground. But many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous prostration, another with pain here and there and so this way they present alike to themselves and their easy-going or overbusy doctor, separate diseases, for which he, assuming them to be such, prescribes his pills and potions. In reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some uterine disease. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, keeps up his treatment until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better, by reason of the wrong treatment, but probably worse. A proper medicine like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery. It has been well said that "a disease known is half cured."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a scientific medicine, carefully devised by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate system. It is made of native American medicinal roots and is perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the female system.

As a powerful invigorating tonic "Favorite Prescription" imparts strength to the whole system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," house-keepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, St. Vitus's dance, and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the uterus. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels. One to three a dose. Easy to take as candy.

PRAISE FOR COMMISSIONER.

Thanks Extended to Directors, Instructors and Faculty of Hannibal High School—A Successful Institute.

One of the most successful Teachers' Institutes in the history of Oswego county was held at Hannibal last week. The program for the entire week was replete with topics of interest and helpfulness to teachers. At the close of Friday's session the following resolutions were offered and unanimously adopted by the teachers:

Since in the course of human events all things must have an end and since institutes are no exception to the general rule, it is altogether fitting and proper that we, the teachers of this First Commissioner District of Oswego, do hereby express our gratitude to all who have spent their time and effort this week in our behalf.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we hereby make acknowledgement of our appreciation of the work of our conductor, Mr. A. J. Merrill, who by his genial spirit, his happy mood and the helpful and masterly presentation of his work has made this the most helpful institute in our history.

Furthermore, be it resolved, that we extend to our instructors, Dr. Reveley, Mr. Farnham, Mr. Warren and Mr. Jones our heartfelt thanks for the practical instruction which they have given us this week.

Furthermore we do hereby promise to make use of their instruction in our daily work and to "do it now."

And, be it resolved, that we here express our appreciation of the kindly welcome and the fine courtesy which the faculty of this, the Hannibal High School, have extended to us throughout the week that we have spent with them.

We also wish to thank the secretaries and the musical directors for the work which they have so graciously performed this week, and should they ever desire a recommendation for a similar position we shall be only too willing to furnish them with one.

And furthermore be it resolved that we hereby express our gratitude to the people of Hannibal for the hospitality which they have shown us. "We were strangers and they took us in."

Lastly, but not least, we wish to thank our commissioner, W. S. Gardner, who, not only during institute week but throughout the year, is working in our behalf. We feel that we cannot adequately express our gratitude to him for the kindly word and the helpful advice that he is ever willing to give. Long may he prosper and dwell in the land and long may he be spared to us by the fates who rule on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November.

And, since this is so solemn an occasion, we feel justified in assuming to ourselves the perogative of a minister and having another "lastly," said "lastly" to be:

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the papers of Hannibal, Oswego, Fulton and Syracuse.

VERY GOOD.

The following letter was clipped from the Mt. Vernon Daily Argus of Oct. 17, and the writer is a stranger to The Times, but the letter itself is good enough to commend its re-publication for the benefit of our readers:

Editor Argus: After hearing Mr. Chanler's speech at the Opera House last night, I was no longer surprised at the widespread defection of the more progressive, up-to-date rank and file of New York Democracy in favor of Governor Hughes.

Mr. Chanler seemed absolutely distressed from beginning to end in his attempt at evading every vital issue of the New York state campaign.

Hundreds of voters went to the opera house to learn how Mr. Chanler stood upon the Public Service Commission law; his attitude upon the race track gambling issue; the Wall street gamblers and the traction, gas and other predatory interests of this state that seek the defeat of Governor Hughes.

How did Mr. Chanler answer? Echo answers simply, "How!"

Mr. Chanler did not dare to invite the resentment of any of these friends of his—these traction and other masters and bosses—by repudiating that part of the Ryan-Sheehan-Belmont Rochester platform, which, in its denunciation of "government by commission," aimed a blow at the regulation of the traffic trust and the gas and electric lighting interests.

Mr. Chanler says he stands upon what he "has done and is doing today."

Not having done anything of special note whatsoever in the past and with no likihood of changing his silk stocking life of luxurious ease during the next two years, it seems very plain what the intelligent, progressive and home-loving people of the empire state will do on November 8.

Every indication points to the overwhelming victory of the man whom all the political jobbers, tricksters, shysters, bosses and corruptionists fear and seek to overthrow.

The people of New York have tried Governor Hughes and found him loyal and true to their interests. They love, honor, revere and trust him because of the sane and popular measures he has championed and because of the enemies he has made. His victory will mean that the people of this state, and not greed, graft and gambling, shall rule.

In the Enemy's Country.

Samuel S. Koenig, the Republican candidate for secretary of state, has lived on the great east side of New York all his life. This is a Tammany Democratic stronghold, but Mr. Koenig's immense popularity will undoubtedly cut down if not wipe out the Democratic majority in that populous district not only for himself, but for the entire ticket.

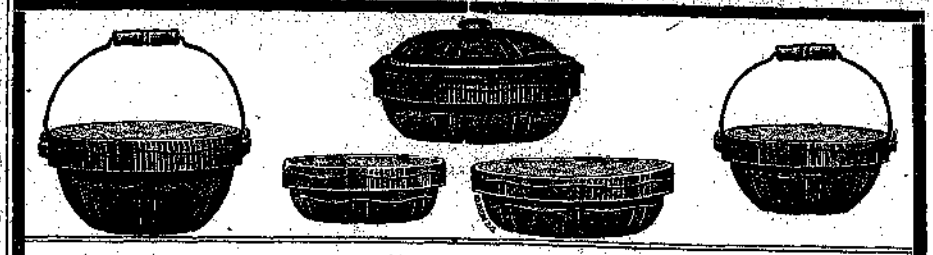
For Coughs and Colds

Nearly all other Cough Cures are constipating, especially those containing opiates. Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup moves the bowels. Contains no opiates.



Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup

"A Cold or a Cough nearly always produces constipation—the water all runs to the eyes, nose and throat instead of passing out of the system through the liver and kidneys. For want of moisture the bowels become dry and hard."

Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup relieves Colds by working them out of the system through a copious action of the bowels.

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

OPPOSITE AS THE POLES.

The Liberalism of Taft and the Radicalism of Bryan.

The radicalism of Bryan and the radicalism of Taft are as opposite as the poles. The radicalism of the former, by training and profession a politician, prompts to the advocacy of anything as good if new. The radicalism of the latter, by training and profession a statesman and jurist, prompts to the adoption of anything new if good.

There are false teachers everywhere, and they are the chief obstacles to the spread of that species of radicalism that in its greatest and best interpretation means the uplifting of humanity and the progress of the nation. The sort of radicalism or liberalism which adopts and advocates anything and everything in the category of theory and originality for personal aggrandizement or momentary political gain is the sort of radicalism that this country can well do without.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Canada's Inland Sea.

People at home who have only seen Hudson bay on the map have mainly regarded it as a patch of polar desolation, forbidding and unexplored. In reality it is nothing of the kind. It is a huge inland sea as large as the Mediterranean reaching down into the center of the Canadian continent—Milling.

For Chronic Diarrhoea.

"While in the army in 1863 I was taken with chronic diarrhoea," says George M. Felton of South Gibson, Pa. "I have since tried many remedies but without any permanent relief, until Mr. A. W. Miles, of this place, persuaded me to try Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, one bottle of which stopped it at once." For sale by E. A. Putnam.

As a resigner Mr. Taft probably holds the record. He resigned as assistant prosecutor of Cincinnati to become internal revenue collector, resigned to become superior court judge, resigned to become solicitor general of the United States, resigned to become federal circuit court judge, resigned to head the Philippine commission, resigned to become secretary of war and finally resigned that to run for president.

A Democratic Taunt.

The Democratic New York World hurls this bitter taunt at its own party: "A Democratic house of representatives helped pass the original interstate commerce act of 1887, and a Democratic president, Grover Cleveland, signed the bill. This is 'government by commission' which the Ryan-Connors-Murphy state platform denounces as unconstitutional and un-Democratic. Why must a boss be an ass?"

Lame Back.

A Democratic View.

It is both asserted and denied that the brewers and liquor interests have combined to fight the re-election of Governor Hughes. In the opinion of the Democratic New York Times "it is worth many votes to any candidate for public office in a decent community to have the so called 'liquor interests' openly against him. But nobody knows what Governor Hughes has done or is likely to do to imperil the liquor trade in New York state. He observes the law. He insists on the enforcement of all the laws. Are all men in the liquor trade opposed to him on that account? We do not believe it. It is asserted that the 'police vote' is against Mr. Hughes, and the 'gambling vote' is assuredly opposed to him. Everybody opposed to 'boss rule' and to defiance of laws and in favor of good government ought to vote for Governor Hughes."

Every Lie Circulated By D. P. Morehouse Regarding the Republican County Candidates Refuted and Nailed Down.

CHARLES W. TAFT
Republican Nominee for Sheriff

Republican Nominee for Sheriff.

The D. P. Morehouse circulars try to make it appear that Charles W. Taft, the Republican candidate for Sheriff, is responsible for the condition of affairs which have been revealed in connection with the manner in which the Sheriff's office of this county has been conducted. THE TRUTH OF THE MATTER IS THAT MR. TAFT HAS NOT HAD ANYTHING TO DO WITH THE BILLS CONTRACTED FOR THE JAILS, EITHER IN OSWEGO OR PULASKI. HE WAS A MEMBER ONE YEAR OF THE COMMITTEE TO SETTLE WITH SHERIFFS AND JAILOR'S ACCOUNTS, BUT THE ARTICLES WHICH WERE PURCHASED FOR THE JAILS, AND WHICH ARE THE SUBJECT OF COMMENT BY MR. MOREHOUSE, WERE NOT IN THE BILLS WHICH WERE PRESENTED TO THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS FOR AUDIT. THESE BILLS WERE PAID BY COUNTY TREASURER MOORE BEFORE THEY WERE AUDITED BY THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

And another thing which the voters of this county should bear in mind in connection with the slanderous statements which Mr. Morehouse and his colleague, Udelle Bartlett, are making in connection with the purchase of corsets and fascinators for the prisoners at the jails, while Mr. Taft was Chairman of the Board of Supervisors. THESE ARTICLES ARE FOUND IN THE UNAUDITED BILLS PAID BY COUNTY TREASURER THOMAS MOORE, AND THAT THEY DID NOT COME BEFORE THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS FOR AUDIT. THE SYSTEM USED BY THOMAS MOORE AS COUNTY TREASURER IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THESE UNAUDITED BILLS. HAD MR. MOORE CONDUCTED HIS OFFICE AS THE LAW DIRECTS NONE OF THE MATTERS NOW COMPLAINED OF COULD HAVE HAPPENED.

It is impossible for Mr. Morehouse, Udelle Bartlett, or anyone else to find a single thing in the public or private life of Charles W. Taft which reflects in any way upon his integrity or his honesty. Mr. Taft received the nomination of the Republican party for the office of Sheriff. He secured the nomination after an honest fight in the caucuses and the convention, and he is entitled to the vote of every Republican in this county. There never was a man nominated by the Republican party for the office of Sheriff of this county who is better fitted or qualified for the place than is Charles W. Taft.

For Member of Assembly.

Frank L. Smith, the Republican candidate for Member of Assembly, is a resident of the town of Schroeppel, and for several years represented that town in the Board of Supervisors. He held the office of Supervisor just as long as he wanted to. He surrendered the position of his own free will, doing so contrary to the wishes and desires of hundreds of the taxpayers of that town, who wanted him to remain as their representative because of the most satisfactory manner in which he had conducted the business of that town. Mr. Smith was one of the leading members of the Board of Supervisors. He held places on the important committees of the Board and was at the head of several of the most important committees. He was what is known as one of the working members, he not only looked after the interests of the people of his own town but he looked after the interests of the people of the entire county. BUT FOR FRANK L. SMITH THE COUNTY OF OSWEGO WOULD NOT HAVE RECEIVED THAT $40,000 WHICH HAD BEEN ERRONEOUSLY PAID BY THIS COUNTY FOR THE BONDING OF RAILROADS. IT WAS MR. SMITH WHO LOOKED UP AND DUG OUT ALL THE EVIDENCE IN CONNECTION WITH THIS MATTER AND PUT IT IN SHAPE SO THAT THE CLAIM OF THIS COUNTY WHEN PRESENTED TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS, WAS MADE VALID AND THE MONEY WAS PAID OVER TO THIS COUNTY.

Mr. Smith has a most enviable record as a Supervisor. He is qualified in every way to represent this county in the Assembly at Albany and will make as good a representative as this county has ever had. The taxpayers of this county can make no mistake in entrusting the affairs of this county in Mr. Smith's hands.

Mr. Smith's opponent, John O'Brien, is also from Schroeppel. Mr. O'Brien served as a member of the Board of Supervisors from that town from 1887 to and including the year 1891, and although he desired another term, was turned down by the voters of that town and A. P. Merriam was sent in his stead. Mr. O'Brien's record as shown by the Journal of the Board of Supervisors is not to be compared with that of Frank L. Smith's. Mr. O'Brien was not a working Supervisor. He was a member of minor committees and for three years was Chairman of the Committee on Erroneous Assessments. This committee has very little if any work to do and stands in the same class as the committee on ventilation in the higher legislative houses of the government. Mr O'Brien and his friends have been going about the county claiming that while he was a member of the Board of Supervisors he saved thousands of dollars to the taxpayers. There is nothing in the Journal of the Board of Supervisors which bears out this statement, and the truth of the matter is that Mr. O'Brien did not save the county a single dollar while he was a member of the Board of Supervisors. If this statement is not true, Mr. O'Brien maybe can produce the page in the Journal of the Board of Supervisors to controvert it. HE IS CHALLENGED TO DO SO.

The truth of the matter is that in 1891, just before he went out of office, Mr. O'Brien got ready for a "grand-stand" play. That was the year when there was considerable talk about the office of Superintendent of the Poor. Mr. O'Brien thought the amount asked for to run the office, $21,520.51, was more than it ought to be. Mr. O'Brien's resolution was for the purpose of investigating this estimate. When the resolution was submitted, Mr. O'Brien learned for the first time THAT SEVEN DAYS BEFORE HE PRESENTED HIS RESOLUTION THAT THE COMMITTEE TO SETTLE WITH THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE POOR HAD REPORTED CUTTING THE AMOUNT OF THE ESTIMATE TO $15,000. NOW WHERE WAS JOHN O'BRIEN THAT HE DID NOT KNOW OF THIS REPORT. CERTAINLY HE COULD NOT HAVE BEEN ATTENDING TO THE BUSINESS OF THE TAXPAYERS.

John O'Brien is either "four-flushing," or else he has told this story of saving thousands of dollars to the taxpayers so often that he actually believes it himself.

There is more at stake this year than simply the question as to who shall represent this county in the Assembly at Albany. THE MEMBERS OF LEGISLATURE ELECTED THIS FALL WILL SELECT THE NEXT UNITED STATES SENATOR FOR NEW YORK STATE. IN CASE OF A TIE IN THE LEGISLATURE THE VOTE OF FRANK L. SMITH WOULD BE NEEDED IN ORDER THAT THE NEXT UNITED STATES SENATOR SHALL BE A REPUBLICAN. IF JOHN O'BRIEN SHOULD BE ELECTED, HIS VOTE WOULD SEND TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE A DEMOCRAT. NOW REPUBLICANS OF OSWEGO COUNTY, ARE YOU GOING TO TAKE A SINGLE CHANCE? DO YOU WANT A DEMOCRAT IN THE UNITED STATES SENATE? IF NOT, THEN VOTE FOR FRANK L. SMITH, THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE FOR MEMBER OF ASSEMBLY, AND MAKE NO MISTAKE.

The Democrats and their allies, the Prohibitionists, and D. P. Morehouse, have not been able to find a single thing to bring up against the Republican candidates for District Attorney, Superintendent of the Poor and Special County Judge. And when the vicious mind of D. P. Morehouse cannot think up some charge to make then there must be absolutely nothing which can be brought against these candidates. In that case, there is absolutely no reason why they should not receive the solid vote of the Republican party of this county.

Every charge which has been made against the Republican county candidates has been met and answered. There is absolutely no truth IN A SINGLE ONE OF THE CHARGES WHICH HAVE BEEN MADE BY D. P. MOREHOUSE AGAINST DISTRICT ATTORNEY BAKER, CHARLES TAFT AND FRANK L. SMITH, AND NO ONE KNOWS THIS BETTER THAN MR. MOREHOUSE HIMSELF. Mr. Morehouse knows that Mr. Baker has done his full duty as District Attorney and Mr. Morehouse knows that Mr. Baker is fitted in every way for the office of County Judge. D. P. MOREHOUSE KNOWS THAT MR. BAKER IS BETTER QUALIFIED FOR THAT POSITION THAN IS LOUIS C. ROWE, WHOM MR. MOREHOUSE IS SUPPORTING. Mr. Morehouse knows better than anyone else that there is not a single particle of truth in the charges which he is making against Charles W. Taft, because Mr. Morehouse has examined the records. Mr. Morehouse knows that Frank L. Smith is eminently better fitted to represent this county in the Assembly at Albany than is John O'Brien, and Mr. Morehouse knows that there is a grave chance this year that there may be a tie in the Legislature and that every possible Republican vote will be necessary in order to elect a Republican to the United States Senate. But what does D. P. Morehouse care for the Republican party. His only object just at this time, and he forgets everything else, is to elect Louis C. Rowe County Judge, AND D. P. MOREHOUSE KNOWS WHY HE WANTS MR. ROWE ELECTED.

The voters are to decide who their representatives in office shall be and will decide it by their ballots on Tuesday next. We believe that when the ballots are counted on election night that the entire Republican ticket will be elected by the largest vote ever given in this county. WE DO NOT BELIEVE THAT THE VOTERS OF THIS COUNTY WILL ALLOW THEMSELVES TO BE INFLUENCED IN ANY WAY BY THE LYING, VICIOUS, SLANDEROUS STATEMENTS WHICH HAVE CHARACTERIZED THE CAMPAIGN OF VILIFICATION AS CONDUCTED BY DAVID P. MOREHOUSE AND HIS CHIEF ASSOCIATE, UDELLE BARTLETT.

Explanatory, Not Exclamatory.

[Hartford Courant.]

Judge Taft is not an exclamatory man, but an explanatory man. He is not denunciatory, but analytic. His mind does not ring, but it thinks. His nature is not pugnacious, but conciliatory. His attitude is not that of an opponent, but that of an intelligent and candid friend. His instinct is to deal fairly and justly by all men, no matter what they think or say about him—to abhor the sin, but to deal kindly with the sinner. He does not play upon public emotions—he does not know how—but he both knows how and has the courage to enlighten the public sense. He is a serene, instructed, experienced and self reliant figure in the noisy whirl of our politics.

Why Colds Are Dangerous.

Because you have contracted ordinary colds and recovered from them without treatment of any kind, do not for a moment imagine that colds are not dangerous. Everyone knows that pneumonia and chronic catarrh have their origin in a common cold. Consumption is not caused by a cold but the cold prepares the system for the reception and development of the germs that would not otherwise have found lodgment. It is the same with all infectious diseases. Diphtheria, scarlet fever, measles and whooping cough are much more likely to be contracted when the child has a cold. You will see from this that more real danger lurks in a cold that in any other of the common ailments. The easiest and quickest way to cure a cold is to take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The many remarkable cures effected by this preparation have made it a staple article of trade over a large part of the world. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

At twenty Mr. Taft was graduated from Yale, at twenty-two he was admitted to the bar, at twenty-three he was assistant prosecutor of Cincinnati, at twenty-four he was collector of internal revenue, at twenty-nine superior court judge in Ohio and at thirty-three solicitor general of the United States. When he received his degree of doctor of laws from Yale he was thirty-six and the youngest man upon whom the degree had ever been conferred.

With his children Mr. Taft is mighty chummy, especially with Charley, his youngest. He likes babies, too, and they like him.

Woman's Home Companion at a New Price.

The increase in the price of paper has been a factor in forcing another one of our magazines to increase in price. The Woman's Home Companion, preparing to give its readers a bigger and better magazine, will raise its price from 10 cents to 15 cents a copy, and from $1.00 to $1.25 a year in a few weeks.

The advance is in part due to the increased size and value of the magazine, and in part to the increased price of paper, which is affecting every publisher in the United States.

From Rome rode a benchman stout
In alarm.
Said some folks were coming out
To the farm.

Doffed his patent leather shoes

Hustle on.

FIRST ST. FULTON, N.Y.

STATEMENT OF COUNTY ATTORNEY COVILLE

States Unaudited Bills Were Paid by County Treasurer Moore Without Knowledge of the Board of Supervisors; Also, That Comptroller's Report Is Political Document Same as in Clinton County. Electors Should Read and Ponder.

At the last Special Session of the present Board of Supervisors, I was directed to examine the accounts of the Sheriffs and County Treasurer, and ascertain the exact amounts for the recovery of which an action could be successfully maintained by the County. I have been engaged in this work for some time, and will complete it in time for the session of the Board. While, as County official, I cannot make public the contents of my report until the annual session of the Board, I feel justified in saying this much:

I have no hesitation in saying that the so-called Comptroller's report (which was in fact made by Messrs. Graves and Dowling) is biased and unfair in its conclusions; is in many instances untrue; and in its main aspect is, and is intended to be, a political document. This apparently has already been shown to be the case in a similar examination made in Clinton county.

There is no doubt that many erroneous and illegal charges have been made by the Sheriffs in the past, and have been audited by the committees of the Boards of Supervisors, frequently with carelessness and in ignorance of the law. The bills as submitted by the sheriffs are more or less incomplete and incorrect in detail; and show that they have in many instances received money to which they were not entitled, and have likewise failed to charge for several thousand dollars to which they were justly entitled. I discussed this matter with Mr. Graves, the Comptroller's examiner, only a few days ago; and he admitted that this last statement was true, and he neglected to mention it in his report. (A letter to Mr. Graves at Albany will verify my statement.)

The items of overcharges which are expressly mentioned in the Comptroller's report, do, in fact, exist; and the net result is that a substantial sum is due to the County of Oswego. The accounts do not, however, show any such general condition as is indicated by this report.

The public ought to understand that the work of examining and passing upon all accounts is necessarily done by committees; and that any Supervisor not appointed upon a particular committee has about all he can attend to in other work, and has usually as little knowledge, and not much more means of acquiring knowledge of the work of such committees than has the general public. For example, I had in five years done more and harder work upon the Board of Supervisors during its sessions, than I ever did in my own private practice, yet I never saw a Sheriff's bill until November of last year.

The laws relating to County government are vague, inadequate and contradictory, and these committees have transacted their business for many years without competent legal advice, and relying upon their own judgment and that of former members, and it is not strange that the Boards of Supervisors have been slow in discovering and correcting errors and abuses which were originated by their predecessors.

In 1907, the Sheriff's accounts were made out in the usual manner, containing items which were questionable, and others which were illegal. As to several of these there was an honest difference of opinion among the members of the committee. The bills were actually cut $925.47 in amount; and in addition to this, it is also true that the Sheriff, in his bills as finally audited, failed to charge for upwards of $750.00 to which he was justly entitled. While I willingly concede that it would have been more proper to have the Sheriff make out entirely new bills; I respectfully submit that the words "looted and plundered" cannot be applied to this audit in any spirit of honest criticism.

A comparison of the figures for the total expenses of the sheriff's office for the past three years, including the support of the prisoners, ought to furnish the best evidence of what the Board of Supervisors has done in this connection:

The figures are taken from the Comptroller's report:

1904-5	$18,081.85
1906-7	$13,094.09

It is also true that the accounts paid for jail supplies and prisoner's clothing have been extravagant and excessive. But the facts are that nearly all of these bills were paid by the County Treasurer without the knowledge of the Board of Supervisors, and without ever having been audited or approved by them. This appears from the Supervisor's Journal and from the Comptroller's report, pages 13, 18, 19 and 24; and if the public read any of this report they should read it all.

It is likewise true that the Armory has proven an expensive luxury to County of Oswego. As to this, but two things need to be said. First:—By law, the furnishings required by the Armories are specified by the Army officials, and the expenses thereof are a County charge, the Board of Supervisors having little or no discretion in the matter. Second:—Nearly all of these bills which are cited as extravagant or excessive were paid by the Treasurer without audit, and without the knowledge of the Board. In support of this statement, see the Comptroller's report, pages 14, 20 and 26.

In this connection it should be said that the practice of paying unaudited bills by the Treasurer did not become known to the Board of Supervisors in general until December 1906, and that practice was effectually stopped, and an entirely new system of purchasing and paying for supplies was adopted long before any criticism was made by the Comptroller's office. Reference to the Journal of 1907 will show when and how this was done.

As to the practice of furnishing members of the Board of Supervisors with such supplies as knives and fountain pens, I can only say that the Clerk follows the custom long established in nearly all legislative bodies, County, State and National. I willingly concede that this practice should have been stopped long ago, and that the board is justly criticised for allowing it to continue.

It seems to me that the present Board of Supervisors adopted a wise and proper course in deferring action against the Sheriff and County Treasurer until all the facts and details were before them. It ought to be a self-evident fact that if the members of this Board were merely "playing politics," they should have commenced such action long ago.

My report will be promptly made. The exact figures and detail will be given, and I pledge myself to prosecute any action which can be properly maintained, just as soon as the matter can be passed upon by the present board. This board cannot do otherwise than direct immediate prosecution of any action which is recommended. This is a proper and orderly course, and should satisfy anyone not actuated by malice or political ambition.

Signed,
Henry D. Coville.

Those who keep in touch with the latest and greatest successes in the dramatic and comedy line, will greet the announcement of the appearance of Mr. Daniel Sully in "The Matchmaker," at Foster's Theatre, Saturday, October 31, with much fervor. The fact of Mr. Sully appearing in a part and play that affords more opportunities than his former success, "The Parish Priest," is, in itself, sufficient proof that all lovers of a good clean and truthful play, far distant from the much followed line of the ever-present boudoir drama, may see "The Matchmaker" and leave with a conviction that they have been taught a good moral and as a result feel a desire to begin life anew.

So Say Manufacturers.

The National Association of Manufactures, through its organ, American Industries, has just completed a canvass of its 3,000 members throughout the United States in nearly every line of trade to ascertain the country's commercial status twelve months after the panic. The canvass was not made to serve any political purpose, and the forthcoming election was not mentioned, but the members of the association have taken advantage of one of the questions to declare that prosperity depends upon the election of Taft.

The canvass was made by means of letters sent out two weeks ago. Four questions were asked of the members relating to the exact condition of trade at present, the percentage of increase in business in the last ten months, the possibilities for future improvement and any suggestion which might serve to better future conditions. Everybody answered the last question by suggesting that Taft be elected.

VERY AMUSING.

Last week's Times called the attention of the electors to the fact that the names of R. L. Moore, brother of ex-County Treasurer Thomas Moore, and that of F. A. Glynn appeared with startling frequency in the list of unaudited bills paid by Mr. Moore and without the knowledge or consent of the Board of Supervisors, approximately 25 per cent. of such bills being paid to R. L. Moore. Prior to that discovery by this paper, the Palladium had been printing two or three times a week, an itemized list of such expenditures and tacking the blame therefore onto the Republicans. Since the discovery the Palladium continues to print articles relative to unaudited bills but without giving items or names.

Trot out the rest of the names and amounts, Palladium. The more money R. L. Moore and F. A. Glynn received on unaudited bills the better does the attitude of the Republicans toward stopping the unwarranted, illegal expenditures, appear. The electors will find County Treasurer Moore, his brother, R. L. Moore, F. A. Glynn and his brother, the city editor of the Syracuse Herald, and the Oswego Palladium standing solidly together against the Republican county ticket.

But nothing can controvert the statement that but for the Republicans of Oswego county,—the ones being most violently assailed by these men and their friends,—the same conditions would have been continued today. Democrats have no part in the newer and bettered condition other than to criticise.

Quick climatic changes try strong constitutions and cause, among other evils, nasal catarrh, a troublesome and offensive disease. Sneezing and snuffling, coughing and difficult breathing, and the drip, drip of the foul discharge into the throat—all are ended by Ely's Cream Balm. This harmless remedy contains no cocaine, mercury, nor other harmful ingredient. The worst cases yield to treatment in a short time. All druggists, 50 cents, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren Street, New York.

SUPERB RECITAL TO BE GIVEN.

The Schumann club is arranging for a superb recital to be given in this city on the evening of Nov. 11. The participants in the program will be Miss Ethel Newcomb, the American pianist, who was born at Whitneys Point and who has studied piano under Leschetizky in Vienna for 13 years, having played in many European cities before her return to America where she has been heard but a few times. Of Miss Newcomb the London Standard says: A young pianist has seldom made a more favorable impression than Ethel Newcomb at her concert last night at the Queen's Hall, distinction to which was imparted by the engagement of the Queen's Hall Orchestra and Dr. Richard Strauss, as conductor. A sympathetic touch, combined with a refined, unaffected style, invested Miss Newcomb's interpretations with great charm, while clearness of phrasing and the "sweet reasonableness" of her readings imparted to them artistic value of a high order. A more thoroughly enjoyable rendering of Schumann's fascinating concerto has seldom been heard, the romantic spirit of the work being made felt with captivating prominence. Miss Newcomb should give a piano recital at an early date, and lovers of legitimate piano playing will do well to make a point of attending.

With Miss Newcomb at the recital will be Mr. Evard Calthrop, a native of Syracuse and one of the finest tenors in the country to-day. Of Mr. Calthrop the New York Press says: Evard Calthrop, tenor of the West End Collegiate Church, Seventy-seventh Street and West End Avenue, this city, is rapidly taking his place as one of America's foremost tenors. In concert and oratorio work he is an established favorite and his appearance is eagerly sought. Mr. Calthrop has a beautiful, pure high ringing voice which possesses brilliancy and power, sympathy and sweetness. It is characterized by great evenness throughout its entire compass, and he has it under such absolute control that the charm of perfect ease and freedom is another influence that takes his audience by storm. His repertoire includes many of the standard oratorios and an immense number of English, German and Italian songs.

The subscription books are at the W. J. Watson drug store where tickets at 50 cents each may be secured and every member of the club has tickets for disposal. The event will be the most noteworthy, from a musical standpoint, of any recently given in Fulton and our residents will undoubtedly show their appreciation by attending in numbers.

FULTON WILL NOT BE STUNG.

Irving Galusha's Ontario League is to be revived next year. At last Galusha says so and he ought to know. The circuit, so he says in a letter to Watertown fans urging them to organize quickly and get in on the ground floor, will be composed of Carthage, Watertown, Ogdensburg, Oswego, Fulton and Geneva.—Oswego Times.

"Irving Galusha's League," the Fulton Times believes, will receive scant courtesy and no assistance from Fulton people until the obligations incurred by previous leagues, are settled. A widow on the west side would be able to expend the league grounds rental to good advantage, providing she could secure the same; the young man who arranged the bases, etc., has a large doctor's bill this Fall owing to a severe injury he received; the Conley brothers, who furnished bats, balls and other baseball supplies, would like their money, undoubtedly; some of the players, too, might like a bit of cash. Whether the president, the secretary and the landlord ever received their pay or not remains to be disclosed but certain it is as death and taxes, that "Irving Galusha's League" will plead long and loudly for recognition in Fulton before it will receive it next year. Promises of "protection next Thursday," "Sunday ball," etc., will not avail.

Judge William H. Taft was elected president of the United States yesterday by an overwhelming majority. In the great Republican strongholds throughout the United States there was a marvelous vote polled for Judge Taft and in the sections where Bryan stood the strongest the Republican candidates got a big vote. The indications are that Taft will have 298 votes in the Electoral college.

Governor Hughes is re-elected by a plurality of about 76,000. Mr. Chanler failed to develop any great strength in Greater New York and he could not begin to overcome the immense Republican plurality of 121,000 from up-state. The entire Republican state ticket is elected.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

Washington, Oct. 31.—The President today issue the annual Thanksgiving proclamation as follows:

By the President of the United States of America.

A proclamation.

Once again the season is at hand when, according to the ancient custom of our people, it becomes the duty of the President to appoint a day of prayer and thanksgiving to God.

Year by year this nation grows in strength and worldly power. During the century and a quarter that has elapsed since our entry into the circle of independent peoples we have grown and prospered in material things to a degree never known before, and not known in any other country.

The thirteen colonies which straggled along the seacoast of the Atlantic and were hemmed in but a few miles west of tidewater by the Indian haunted wilderness, have been transformed into the mightiest republic the world has ever seen. Its domains stretch across the continent from one to the other of the two greatest oceans, and it exercises dominion alike in the arctic and tropic realms. The growth in wealth and population has surpassed even the growth in territory. Nowhere else in the world is the average of individual comfort and material well-being as high as in our fortunate land.

For the very reason that in material well-being we have thus abounded we owe it to the Almighty to show equal progress in moral and spiritual things. With a nation, as with the individuals who make up a nation, material well-being is an indispensable foundation. But the foundation avails nothing by itself. That life is wasted, and worse than wasted, which is spent in piling, heap on heap, things which minister merely to the pleasure of the body and to the power that rests only on wealth. Upon material well-being as a foundation must be raised the structure of the lofty life of the spirit, if this nation is properly to fulfill its great mission and to accomplish all that we so ardently hope and desire. The things of the body are good; the things of the intellect better; but best of all are the things of the soul; for, in the nation as in the individual, in the long run, it is character that counts. Let us therefore, as a people, set our faces resolutely against evil and with broad charity, with kindliness and good will toward all men, but with unflinching determination to smite down wrong, strive with all the strength that is given for righteousness in public and in private life.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do set apart Thursday, the 26th day of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, and on the day I recommend that the people shall cease from their daily work and in their homes or their churches meet devoutly to thank the Almighty for the many and great blessings they have received in the past, and to pray that they may be given strength so to order their lives as to deserve a continuation of these blessings in the future.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this thirty-first day of October in the year of our Lord, one thousand, nine hundred and eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-third.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

AN APPEAL FOR "THE BREAD LINE."

The Bowery Mission "Bread Line," at which 1,000 men who are out in the streets for the night are given a breakfast of hot coffee and rolls every morning at one o'clock, is one of the most pathetic sights in all the wide, wide world. Long before the hour of opening, these poor, starving men stand in a single line that sometimes extends for blocks in length, waiting for the coffee and rolls. During the winter, this breakfast is given to an aggregate of 210,000 homeless men and boys, and up to date over half a million of the homeless have had their weary tramp restfully interrupted by this unique ministration. The first of these breakfasts is given on Thanksgiving morning, and the last on the following Easter morning. Although the Mission supplied, this year, over 312,000 meals and 57,072 lodgings to homeless men and boys.

It is for this grand, philanthropic work that we ask your kind and practical co-operation. The homeless, friendless, disheartened and despairing men and boys of the Bowery are not native New Yorkers, but men and boys who, until within a year, lived happily at the old homestead with father and mother, and perhaps wife. They are stranded here, and in despair appeal to the Old Bowery Mission, which, for over thirty years, has been to the unfortunate, as the rescue cities of old, a haven of encouragement, rest and protection. Shall we turn them away? It rests with the good people of this country to decide this question, and may God graciously help you to decide it aright. John C. Earl, Financial Secretary, 92 Bible House, New York City.

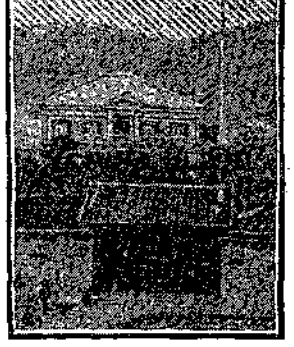
Colds and Croup in Children.

"My little girl is subject to colds," says Mrs. Wm. H. Serig, No. 41 Fifth St., Wheeling, W. Va. "Last winter she had a severe spell and a terrible cough, but I cured her with Chamberlain's Cough Remedy without the aid of a doctor, and my little boy has been prevented many times from having the croup by the timely use of this syrup. This remedy is for sale by E. A. Putnam.

THE visit of the American battleship fleet to Chinese waters may be said to be paid at precisely the right psychological moment. It is at the time that China is looking to the United States for guidance in respect to the great problems of evolution along political and social lines with which she is confronted. It is at just the moment that her attention is centered on the constitutional changes proposed by her leaders, and China, like the rest of the world, naturally looks to America when seeking an example of the highest development of constitutional government and its application to the needs of a great nation. The boycott of American goods failed to disturb materially the good relations between China and the United States, and since that episode many things have happened to strengthen the feelings of friendship between the American and Chinese nations. Among other things is the feeling that has grown up in China that America is in some way or other to become a buffer between the empire ruled by Kuang Hsu and that ruled by Emperor Mutsuhito of the realm of flowers. The Chinese, whether rightly or wrongly, believe that America is in a position to protect them against Japanese aggressions and to prevent Japan from extending her "sphere of influence" to the point of making China a mere Japanese province. The mikado's subjects have a systematic propaganda under way for the purpose of spreading Japanese ideas and influence among the Chinese. They have gone so far as to establish newspapers in the interior of China with such objects in view, and the Chinese journalist now visiting this country, Li Sum Ling, has declared that steps would be taken to check such a propaganda and that it had caused much offense among his countrymen.

All this tends to further American influence in China rather than Japanese. At the same time the Chinese progressive leaders, who now control the government at Pekin and have recently drawn up a constitution, have gone to Japan for a great many of their ideas, and the constitution promulgated is modeled more on that of Japan than on that of the United States or those of the constitutional monarchies of Europe.

The form of political principles under which it is proposed to lead China from her past status as a despotic government to that of an empire administered through the aid of a parliament was promulgated in Pekin on Aug. 27, and it is quite a different document from what would be expected under similar circumstances in a European or American country. Under it China will still have an absolute monarch, but he will be aided by duly elected representatives of the people in administering the empire. The form of government will more nearly resemble that of Japan or that of Russia since the institution of the douma than that of England, Germany, Italy or the United States. The phraseology of the document is oriental and in places even poetic, many figures and similes being used to convey to the untutored minds of the common people the meaning and intentions of the reformers. For instance, in speaking of the preparation to be made for the opening of a parliament it says: "It is like building a house. Workmen and material must be gathered. The house may then be planned and worked out. The work must be watched day and night without intermission from the beginning to the end, and so it may reach completion. Or it is like making a journey. Clothing, food, boats and carts must be got ready, and the traveler must press on day after day without stopping for rest, and so he will reach his destination."



The framers of the constitution are apprehensive and "beg, as the condition of the country is perilous and the hearts of the people are uneasy, trouble within and calamity from without, danger threatening and no parliament at hand to investigate matters, that urgent measures may be taken to overcome half heartedness and procrastination that there may be peace above and completion below."

No idea of a republic even at a remote date is hinted at, for it is provided that "the Ta Ch'ing emperor will rule supreme over the Ta Ch'ing empire for 1,000 generations in succession and be honored forever." However, by 1917, when the new constitution will be in full operation, "officers and people who keep within the law will have freedom of speech, of the press and of assembly; they shall not be liable to arrest or to suffer punishments except as prescribed by law; they shall not be disturbed without cause in their possession of property or interfered with in their dwellings."

During the nine year interval local self government will be established, provincial assemblies will be chosen and established, census reports made and tax rates fixed and various matters pertaining to local, provincial or imperial administration will be attended to, and when the parliamentary system is in full operation a premier will be appointed by the sovereign. A striking clause in the document promulgated in August is the following:

"We look to our empress dowager and emperor to see that they take the measure of heaven and earth as their measure and the heart of the people as their heart. The officials and people within the wide seas are reverently grateful."

It will be observed that the empress dowager is referred to first. She, of course, is the real ruler of the realm, and it is because she has been foresighted enough to see the wisdom of making concessions to the demands of the reformers that the changes outlined are to be introduced. The dowager empress is a strange character, and much discussion has prevailed as to how much credit should be given her for the progress China has made in the direction of better government under her sway, but there is abundant testimony that in many respects she has been a friend of reform.

The American consulate at Hongkong, the scene of ceremonies in connection with the visit of the fleet to Chinese waters, is an unimposing house in the lower part of the city. The consul general usually makes his home in a district upon the hillsides overlooking the commercial district.

With the departure of the fleet from China and its beginning of the homeward voyage new honors fall to Captain William P. Potter, who has commanded the battleship Vermont during the cruise from the start at Hampton Roads to December last. He will assume command of the second division of the fleet and will then rank as a rear admiral. His portrait appears at the top of the column, that at the left being of Admiral Sperry.

The Chinese have taken many precautions against any unpleasant incident marring the visit of the American fleet to their waters and have been studious to extend every courtesy to their visitors. The government sent Admiral Sah of the Chinese navy and Mr. Sun, the provincial treasurer, to Amoy to act as a reception committee at that port, to which they proceeded on the cruiser Fei-eng.

There are, of course, factions and revolutionaries opposed to the present governmental authorities in the empire, and the Amoy officials were instructed by the Pekin government to take the greatest care to prevent any disturbers from coming in contact with the Americans. These and other incidents indicate a great desire on the part of the imperial government that the friendly relations between the two nations shall not in any way be broken.

THE DOWAGER EMPRESS TSU AN.

Mrs. Charles E. Hughes.

Mrs. Hughes, wife of Governor Charles E. Hughes of the state of New York, is not quite big enough to be statuesque, yet she cannot be called petite. She is well proportioned, moves with gentleness and dignity, her features almost classical in repose. A kindly light beams from great brown eyes, which gleam from a face suggesting ivory, and she grows vivacious and enthusiastic when a favorite topic becomes a subject of conversation. A mass of brown hair is in perfect harmony with her face and figure.

She is a woman whose culture enables her to be of much aid to her distinguished husband.

Grand Recital.

The recital to be given in the Presbyterian church on Wednesday evening, November 18, under the auspices of the Schumann club will be a brilliant event and our music lovers are awaiting it with anticipation and interest. Miss Ethel Newcomb will be heard in piano and Mr. Everard Calthrop as tenor, producing a duet of excellence never before heard in this city. Of Miss Newcomb the Syracuse Journal of May 16, 1908, said; There was a revelation for that hall full of people who went to hear Miss Ethel Newcomb Friday night, the surprise coming to those who expected to hear the ordinary pianist of passable technique and a few soulful moments. Instead there was almost the approximation of a feminine Paderewski-young, good to look upon, talented and above all schooled, not in tricks, but genuine in interpretation of the best. There is strength, confidence and appreciation in Miss Newcomb's work. She harmonizes the power of a man with the poetic analysis of a woman, and applies it all to bringing out the best.

The Power of Habit.

After having been a faithful devotee of the automobile two years or more Mr. Bragdon suddenly was seized with a violent fancy for motor boats. "A beautiful river runs by this town," he said. "Why not have some enjoyment out of it? In a motor boat you don't have to dodge policemen and rural constables."

So he bought one, took a day's instruction in the art of managing it and keeping the machinery in running order and started out on his first trip with it one bright morning in July.

It was late in the afternoon when he returned home. He came in by the back way. His clothes were water soaked, and he had a generally limp and bedraggled appearance.

"For pity's sake, Alfred!" exclaimed his wife. "What has happened to you? Did the boat upset?"

"No, Lucy," he answered. "Don't say anything about it and I'll tell you. The boat's all right, but when I had been out on the water an hour or two something went wrong with the motor."

"Well?"

"Well, before I—er—knew what I was doing I was over the side of the boat and trying to get under it to fix the thing."

The Japanese and Their Prisoners.

The Japanese have a rather kindly way of treating prisoners who have not yet been convicted. The regulation prison dress is a kind of strawberry red colored kimono, but men on remand wear light blue as a sign that, although under strong suspicion, they have not yet been found guilty. When prisoners in this class have occasion to pass through the public streets curious extinguisher-like baskets are placed upon their heads.—Wide World Magazine.

Walking on Your Hat.

"Nothing is wasted in this house" is the proud remark which you may often hear from the lips of an expert housekeeper. It is a boast, however, that few people could really justify. Take the case of a wornout derby hat. In the majority of instances this discarded article of headgear finds its way to the rubbish heap or perhaps into the hands of a passing tramp. If only people were aware of the fact, the most excellent felt soles for the inside of their boots and slippers are thus being discarded. These soles can be cut from the sides of an old hat and are much more comfortable than the ordinary cork ones.

The great thing in big game rifles is sureness to work under all conditions. Marlin rifles are built with this idea foremost.

The mechanism is simple, strong, perfectly adjusted, quick and easy in operation.

SAD ACCIDENT.

On Friday Mrs. Edna Moore received a telegram calling her to the home of her sister, Mrs. Victor Loomis, that her nephew was dead. The Oneida papers of that date contained the first particulars known to Fultonians and they were as follows:

Oneida, Oct. 31.—One of the saddest accidents that has happened in this city in years occurred in Elizabeth street soon after the close of school yesterday afternoon, resulting in the death of Donald K. Loomis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Loomis of Sands street.

The boy, who was a student in the Elizabeth school, was on his way home from school. Like hundreds of other healthy, fresh air loving boys, he roller skated considerably, and was skating home on the east side of Elizabeth street. In the right hand pocket of his trousers he carried a glass bottle. While skating along a few hundred feet south of Grove street he fell, falling forward in such a manner as to break the bottle in his pocket.

The broken glass penetrated through his clothing and entered the body at a point just above the hip, cutting deep enough to severe the large artery that leads to the leg. He bled profusely and lay on the walk for some time before being discovered. He was carried into the home of Mrs. Sarah Ottoway and physicians summoned. Dr. George F. Mills was the first to respond closely followed by Dr. E. H. Carpenter, Dr. E. P. Bailey and Dr. J. F. Huntley. The physicians were unable to stay the flow of blood and the child died about twenty minutes after the accident happened from loss of blood. The doctors resorted to every expedient known to medical science, but were unable to save him.

Donald was a bright, lovable child, a favorite in the home circle and with his playmates. He was born in Fulton about nine years ago, and had lived in Oneida for about eight years. He was a member of the Sunday school of the First Baptist church. His playmates are thrown into the deepest gloom by the terrible and unexpected fatality and the neighborhood in which he lived also mourns.

Funeral services will be held at the home tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock, the Rev. Frank L. Latham, pastor of the First Baptist church, officiating. On Monday the remains will be taken to Fulton for burial.

The accident is one of the saddest ever occurring in this city, the nature and unusual character of the accident that took the bright young life adding to the sadness of the occurrence. The parents are heartbroken in the death of the child, and their grief is shared by all.

Knew When He Was Happy.

The soul of an editor who had died of starvation was being conducted to the Elysian fields. As they passed the portals of the infernal regions, he asked his guide if he might not go in and look around. The guide consented, but warned him to stay but a few minutes, as he could not wait long.

A long time passed, and the editor had not returned, so the guiding angel went in search of him. He found him before a cage in which a number of doomed wretches were being toasted on red-hot griddles. Over the cage was the sign, "Delinquent Subscribers."

"Come," said the guide, "we must be going."

"Don't wait for me," replied the editor "I'm not coming. This is Heaven enough for me!"

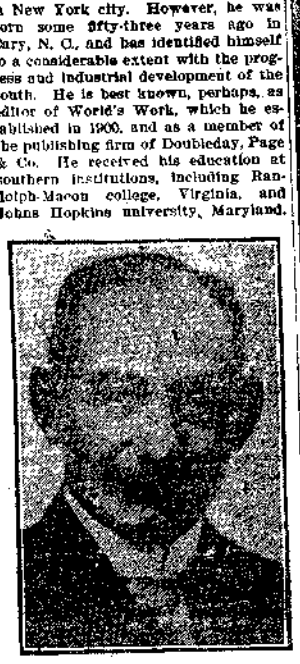
The Farm Life Commission

THE commission appointed by President Roosevelt to investigate the conditions of rural life and make suggestions in the line of its betterment is having a busy time. It has been engaged in extensive correspondence and has been giving hearings in different parts of the country for the purpose of bringing out facts and opinions bearing on the conditions into which inquiry is being made. President Roosevelt is to report to congress in a message some practical suggestions as to what may be done through legislation to improve the condition of rural life. It is not that the American farmer as such needs uplifting more than other classes of the population or is in any particular danger of mental and moral degeneration. It is conceded that his moral plane is at present a high one, but the facts with regard to the exodus of population from country to city and the all too common isolation of rural life suggest that much may be done to make the conditions such that the exodus may be stopped or at least checked.

The commission has received much encouragement in its investigations from those most concerned and but little if any criticism. This is perhaps due in part to the fact that all members are so well qualified for the task in hand, having been chosen for the part they have already taken in work along similar lines. The work initiated by the president in the appointment of this commission has been said to be a corollary to that of the movement for conservation of the natural resources of the country. The two movements are at least closely related. As the president himself put it in a speech in Michigan some time ago, the products of the farm are of two kinds and the output of good manhood and womanhood deserves fully as much consideration as the output of hay and corn and other crops.

Each member of the commission has achieved a reputation for knowledge and attainments in some branch of the work in hand. The chairman, Dr. Liberty H. Bailey, is president of the New York College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y., an institution which has been very active and aggressive in devising ways of advancing the methods of agriculture and improving the conditions among tillers of the soil. Dr. Bailey at first declined the proffered post on the ground that he had not the time necessary to discharge the duties, but on further consideration accepted. Dr Bailey, who is fifty years old and a graduate of the Michigan Agricultural college, has been at the head of the New York College of Agriculture, a department of Cornell university, since 1903. He was reared on a farm and has given particular attention to botany and horticultural subjects and to the economics of agriculture. He was formerly assistant to Professor Asa Gray at Harvard and was also professor of agriculture and landscape gardening at the Michigan Agricultural college. Numerous works on subjects related to his profession have come from his pen.

Kenyon L. Butterfield, whose portrait appears at the top of the first column, is also an educator and the head of an agricultural college.



He is the youngest member of the commission, having been born in 1868 in Lapeer, Mich. Like Dr. Bailey he is a graduate of the Michigan Agricultural college and received from it the degree of B. S., from the University of Michigan obtaining the degree of A. M. He has had a wide experience in educational work connected with agriculture and two years ago became president of the Massachusetts Agricultural college. Since 1904 he has been collaborator in charge of the agricultural division, department of economics and sociology, Carnegie institution, Washington. He is active in many educational and scientific societies.

Dr. Walter H. Page might be said to represent the south on the commission, though he is a resident of New Jersey and spends most of his working hours in New York city. However, he was born some fifty-three years ago in Cary, N. C., and has identified himself to a considerable extent with the progress and industrial development of the south. He is best known, perhaps, as editor of World's Work, which he established in 1900, and as a member of the publishing firm of Doubleday, Page & Co. He received his education at southern institutions, including Randolph-Macon college, Virginia, and Johns Hopkins university, Maryland.

WALTER H. PAGE.

He has edited the Forum and the Atlantic Monthly and is the author, among other works, of "The Rebuilding of Old Commonwealths." He is noted also as a lecturer. His knowledge of conditions such as the commission has undertaken to investigate is broad and pertains to the economic and social rather than the technical side. One of the Doubleday & Page publications is the magazine known as Country Life In America, which has done more, perhaps, than any other journal of its class to stimulate interest in life outside the cities and suggest ways of making such life attracture. World's Work, too, under the guidance of Mr. Page has devoted a great deal of attention to practical subjects pertaining in a broad sense to social development in connection with betterment of conditions among the people at large. The great social questions, in fact, appeal especially to Mr. Page's interest, and it was this in part no doubt which suggested to Mr. Roosevelt the idea that he would make a valuable member of the commission. For it is a broad movement which has been initiated, and its success will depend largely on the degree to which the fact is appreciated by the members of the commission. The remaining commissioners, Henry Wallace and Gifford Pinchot, whose portrait appears at the top of this column, have evinced their appreciation of the possibilities of such a movement, and their work stands as a guarantee of their effectiveness as members of the board.

Mr. Wallace is the editor of a publication devoted to the interests of agriculture and known as Wallace's Farmer. His residence is Des Moines, Ia. He has gained a national reputation among farmers for his good judgment in matters pertaining to their interests, and his appointment as a member of the commission does much to establish confidence in its capacity to handle the problems involved in a thoroughly practical way.

Of Gifford Pinchot it may be said that his work as chief forester of the government has accomplished more in the way of conserving the welfare of the tillers of the soil and the gatherers of our natural wealth than almost any other branch of effort. It has been due to the enthusiasm of Mr. Pinchot in his chosen field that so much has been accomplished, and Mr. Roosevelt, recognizing this, has given his operations wide sweep and extended his usefulness to fields where ordinarily they would not have been felt. Having a considerable private fortune, he works for the government for love rather than for the salary he receives, as the latter would scarcely pay for what he expends in remunerating extra clerks in his service. He was born in Connecticut in 1865, and his father, James W. Pinchot, was one of the founders of the Yale Forestry school. The present chief forester of the United States studied forestry both at Yale and in foreign countries and has also studied nature at first hand in the haunts of the wild beasts and the districts remote from the borders of civilization.

There has been little criticism upon the commission except for the fact that it has no women upon it. As a poet who contributed some verse to the Chicago News puts it:

I know them pesky men folks, an' I see 'em recommendin'
The latest things in phosphates an' rotatin' of the crops
An' patent fancy fixin's to keep Hiram's back from bendin'.
But when they're through with Hiram then their recommendin' stops.
Amandy's in the kitchen peelin' 'taters, pickin' chickens
An' bakin' pies for dinner. She ain't soundin' no alarm.
She's sort o' resignated when she ought to raise the dickens.
You want to get some wimmen to investigate the farm.

"SANDY AND I"

"Sandy and I" is the title of a new Scotch song with words and music by Mrs Mary E. Ireland, the well-known author, who has a wide-known acquaintance all over this country. The Scotch dialect is well used. It is a song that we are sure will be well received. The melody is rich. The words have the Scotch sincerity and simplicity. A very striking picture of a Scotch lad and lassie adorns the cover. The regular retail price of this great song is 50 cents per copy. By special arrangements with the publishers, OUR READERS will receive a copy postpaid by sending 15 cents in postage stamps to THE GOODE Music Co., No. 1155 Broadway, New York.

A Shrewd Doctor.

"This incident," said a doctor, "happened in France two or three centuries ago, in the days when public criers were always in evidence. There was a physician of Montpelier who used to go from place to place to practice the healing art. He employed a very ingenious trick to help him on his way. When he came to a town where he was not known he pretended to have lost his dog, which he declared was a very valuable animal, and ordered the public crier to roam about, beat loud on his drum and offer a reward of 25 louis to whoever should bring the dog to him. At the same time the crier was directed to mention all the titles and academic honors of the doctor as well as his place of residence. Of course it happened that the doctor was not long in becoming almost the sole topic of talk in the town. The people made up their minds that he must be a famous physician as well as a very rich one, as he could offer 25 louis for finding his dog. You might reasonably judge that the dog was never found, but plenty of patients were."

Gentlemen:—
In 1897 I had a disease of the stomach and bowels. Some physicians told me it was Dyspepsia, some Consumption of the Lungs, others said consumption of the Bowels. One physician said I would not live until Spring, and for four long years I existed on a little boiled milk, soda biscuits, doctors' prescriptions and Dyspepsia remedies that flooded the market. I could not digest anything I ate, and in the Spring 1903 I picked up one of your Almanacs as a poor emaciated Dyspepsia wreck will grasp at anything, and that Almanac happened to be my life saver. I bought a fifty cent bottle of KODOL DYSPEPSIA CURE and its benefit I received from that bottle ALL THE GOLD IN GEORGIA COULD NOT BUY. I kept on taking it and in two months I went back to my work, as a machinist, and in three months I was well and hearty. I still use a little occasionally as I find it a fine blood purifier and a good tonic.
May you live long and prosper.
Yours very truly,

A Muddy Day in London.

It has been calculated that the cost of a muddy day in London is something like £5,000, which is not surprising when one remembers that no less than thirty-two tons of mud are carried about from place to place on the wheels of carts and carriages and horses' hoofs. After a wet day mud brushed from people's clothing amounts to fifteen tons, and a very similar amount is shaken out of doormats. City mud, however, has its good points. The shoeblack increases his earnings in muddy weather, and new silk hats and dresses and boots and shoes are each and all the direct outcome of its destructive qualities.—London Answers.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 4, 1908

THE defeat of W B Baker for county judge by his opponent, L C. Rowe, running on two tickets, is little short of a crime in this Republican county. Mr. Baker was slaughtered in the house of his friends while pursuing his duty unflinchingly, knowing all the time that his opponents were taking advantage of his absence from the field of political activity. That every lie that could be manufactured by the fertile brain of the hirelings was being circulated among the electors. That he was so loyal to his party throughout victory or defeat that he became the bright and shining mark for the opposition. Justice blushes with shame at the damnable things done in her name, and which encompassed the defeat of Mr. Baker. A well informed vote, conscientiously cast for or against a man, should be respected. A vote cast with but half the story investigated is a shame.

THE people surely do rule and they will be permitted to rule for four years more. The election of William H Taft by such a stupendous majority was certainly a triumph in the face of all the odds against him. He stands for the furtherance of the best interests of the country as a whole, regardless of creed, color or political belief and he represents the highest standard of Republican principles. It would appear that "my policies" and "the big stick" do not terrify American citizens.

HUGHES heartily did New York good, re-mond to the call for decent goverment and by the people. Governor Hughes's re-election is a magnificent ovation to his ability A splendid tribute to his administration and to his political ideals

OSWEGO is a city ashamed. She was almost the only city in the Empire State remaining loyal to the discredited vagaries of Bryan. The only city whose vitals are in the clutches of dead issues

Williams, who presides over the Lafayette Methodist Episcopal Church, extended the glad hand to Mr. and Mrs. Richards in behalf of his church, and then George Thorpe, the president of the Methodist Social Union said a few words. GRAND JURY REPORTS.

The Grand Jury reported on Friday, handing up fifty sealed indictments in connection with their investigation in county and other matters. In connection with the reporting of the Grand Jury they also submitted the following statement signed by the Jurors:

In view of the alleged irregularities brought to light by the investigation of the Comptroller's experts into county affairs and the criticism that an investigation was not made by former Grand Jurys, we the undersigned, Grand Jurors of the October, 1908, term of the Supreme Court, in justice to ourselves and the taxpayers of the county, believe it our duty to say that Mr. Mark Graves, one of the Comptroller's experts, was examined by us for two days covering all the matters touched upon in their report, and all matters upon which he could give us any information concerning the several departments of the county government, and that afterwards, twenty-nine witnesses, including a large number of county officials, were also diligently examined by us, and all persons who might know anything or could give any light upon the matters of our county affairs were brought before us and thoroughly examined. Also a large number of bills against the county, and records of the county, were examined and every possible effort has been made to secure any and all evidence that would enable us to act justly and intelligently between the people and those charged with wrong-doings. After this most thorough and diligent inquiry on our part we wish to say that we have acted as we saw it our duty, under our oaths, impartially and without fear or favor, and we believe that our action, when it is made public, will satisfy the people of this county, meet with their hearty commendation and approval. This report is signed by the Grand Jurors below:

James Whitney, W. M. Woods, Thomas F. McPeak, Lewis C Pohl, Orte Harrington, C F Hen. Bernhard, L. Crandall, W. F. Jameson, Thomas J. Cook, R. Dennis Fox, Carl Haas, Herman J Schwartz, H. A Snow, Grant Edick, Alfred Tudo, Bion G. Patterson, David M. Phillips, G. P Jones.

D. H. Barnhard, Foreman.
F. E. Spicer, Clerk.

Three arrests have been made already in connection with the indictments handed up by the Jury, Thomas Moore, former county treasurer, was indicted on four counts, the alleged wilful misappropriation of the funds of Oswego county by paying out moneys received by him as County Treasurer. A violation of a section of the Penal Code is alleged in each transaction. The specific charges are as follows: paying C. B. Burch, April 15, 1904, $53; paying to W. H. Pulver, April 18, 1904, $114.95; to H. J. Peebles, September 14, 1906, $305; to R. L. Moore, September 14, 1906, $844.20.

Mr Moore, through his attorneys, Messrs. Morehouse and Bulger, plead not guilty and he was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000 on one indictment.

Frank H. White, deputy sheriff at Pulaski, was arraigned on two indictments, both for violations of Section 672 of the Penal Code, the charges being that he charged one cent extra for meals for prisoners and that he made a wrongful charge for carrying prisoners to and from the County Jails in Pulaski and Oswego. Mr. White, through his attorney, demurred and was admitted to $1,000 bail, $500 on each indictment

The indictment against Mr. White alleges a violation of section 672 of the Penal Code by presenting to the Board of Supervisors for audit and with "intent to defraud a certain bill, claim or account containing false and fraudulent charges, items and [illegible]." The specification in the indictment regarding the meals is that from December 8, 1904, to December 1, 1905, he charged 1 per cent extra for 21,620 meals, the amount being $216.30. The other indictment is for charging ten cents a mile for delivering Joseph Bennett and Frank Lawler from Pulaski to the Oswego jail, 54 miles, $10.80 for taking George Bingham to Pulaski and charging $5.40, or a total of $16 and also charging $2 each for making calendars for the County Clerk, District Attorney and County Judge.

Sheriff Hilton was arrested on a bench warrant on Saturday on a charge of having presented fraudulent bills to the Board of Supervisors for audit. Mr. Hilton was taken before Judge Stowell in the County Chambers and was there arraigned on two indictments charging violations of section 672 of the Penal Code in presenting for audit to the Board of Supervisors bills for 1905 and 1906 containing alleged false and fraudulent items and charges. The bills cover a charge of one per cent. additional to the regular charge for meals furnished prisoners and also an alleged unlawful charge of ten cents a mile for the transportation of prisoners to and from the County Jails at Pulaski and Oswego.

The specifications in the indictment are that Mr. Hilton presented a claim for 13,020 days at three cents per day, $390.60, presumably for an extra charge of one cent per meal but not so stated in the indictment which simply reads, "13,020 days at .03 per day, $390.60."

The other indictment charges that Mr. Hilton presented a bill for the transportation of ten prisoners to Pulaski and nine prisoners to Oswego Nov. 26, 1906, charging double fare both ways or $5.40 for each of the nineteen, the total being $102.60. The bills were presented to the Board of Supervisors, Dec. 5, 1906.

Admitted to Bail.

Mr. Hilton pleaded not guilty and was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000, that amount having been fixed by Justice Rogers in the other cases. The Sheriff furnished cash bail himself.

How to Treat a Sprain.

Sprains, swellings and lameness are promptly relieved by Chamberlain's Liniment. This liniment reduces inflammation and soreness so that a sprain may be cured in about one-third of the time required by the usual treatment. 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by E. A Putnam.

Pleasant Event.

The members of the Progressive Literary society, and their husbands, were very pleasantly entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. J. Emeny, Hallowe'en. The guests were received at the door by a strange wierd-looking creature that in our younger days we would have called a ghost. While on the stairs stood a companion to direct the ladies where to remove their wraps. The dining room was beautifully decorated with Autumn fruit. Flowers and vines At either end of the dining room stood a work of art surmounted by the pumpkin Jack o'Lantern that has been conspicuous since the custom of Hallowe'en has been observed. We will not forget one important feature of the evening, a most delicious supper; every thing to tempt an epicure. After a hearty vote of thanks to Mr and Mrs. Emeny for their genial hospitality all went to their homes feeling that they had spent a most enjoyable evening.

How to Cure a Cold.

Be as careful as you can you will occasionally take cold, and when you do, get a medicine of known reliability, one that has an established reputation and that is certain to effect a quick cure. Such a medicine is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It has gained a world wide reputation by its remarkable cures of this most common ailment, and can always be depended upon. It acts on nature's plan, relieves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. During the many years in which it has been in general use we have yet to learn of a single case of cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Fremonters Hear Taft.

Messrs Horace N. Gilbert and Isaac Seamans of this city attended the Taft Mass meeting in Syracuse on Thursday and occupied front seats in the Alhambra with many other Republicans who first voted for Fremont and who had been loyal to their party down through the years. And these loyalists are doing as hearty work for Taft and the Republican ticket this Fall as any younger men. They are proud of their party and their party is proud of them.

The Drummer Evangelist.

Large congregations greeted the drummer evangelist, T. H. Osborn, last Sunday morning and evening at the State Street Methodist Episcopal church, when he opened a series of revival services which will be continued during the next two weeks. Many who had heard Mr. Osborne in other places were glad of the opportunity to meet him again. Mr. Osborne has had large experience in the evangelistic field and has a large fund of illustrations drawn from personal experiences in the work. Wit and pathos rapidly follow each other. Many of the songs he sings are of his own composition, and his solo work is greatly enjoyed. A large chorus choir leads the singing. Services will be held every evening except Saturday at 7.30. Next Sunday afternoon a great men's meeting will be held, when Mr Osborn will give a plain talk to the men of the town. Now boys under 15 will be admitted to this service

Season's Catches.

Two of the Matrimonial Kind Talked of in England and America—Churchill and Bride—Fox and Fritzi Scheff

THE great match of the season in England is that of the brilliant young Liberal politician, Winston Spencer Churchill, and Miss Clementine Hozier, daughter of the late Sir Henry Montagu Hozier and a cousin of the Earl of Airlie. Sir Henry Hozier was for thirty-two years secretary of Lloyd's, the great British commercial and maritime insurance company, and this circumstance has occasioned some interesting situations in connection with the match. Sir Henry was very popular with the members of Lloyd's, and his daughter has inherited a generous proportion of their regard. But politically the members of this influential business institution are opposed to the man she chose as a husband. Some of them have gone so far as to attribute all the depression in the London Stock Exchange and business generally to the government of which Mr. Churchill is a conspicuous ornament. But members and employees alike forgot politics in honoring Sir Henry's daughter and subscribed to a fund for the purchase of one of the handsomest gifts ever offered by a business body to a bride.

WINSTON CHURCHILL AND BRIDE

Mr. Churchill, who has won almost as great honors in literature as in politics, has chosen as his bride a young woman who is used to a literary atmosphere, as her father at one time acted as correspondent during the Franco-Prussian war and wrote a book on that struggle which is still recognized as an authority on the subject. Her uncle, the late Earl of Airlie, served in the South African war, in which young Churchill had such remarkable adventures. There is a weird story connected with the death of this uncle while in action against the Boers. It is said that whenever a head of the house of Airlie is dying the sound of beating drums is heard outside the family place in Scotland. There are many who stoutly swear that they noted such sounds at the time when the late earl was killed near Pretoria in 1900.

Mr. Churchill, who occupies the post of president of the board of trade in Premier Asquith's cabinet, keeps on having exciting adventures even though his days as a soldier of fortune seem to be ended. Not long since he was a guest at a house party at the home of the Finch family in Rutlandshire. A fire broke out, and the Right Hon. Mr.

Trophies of the Chase.

In the days when buffalo still roamed the plains of Kansas in countless numbers a great many hunting parties came over from Europe to have a hand in their slaughter. One party was composed of a Frenchman named Auguste Rouzand, the first husband of Christine Nilsson, the prima donna, and an Englishman, a Mr. Blackmore, from London. They arrived at Dodge City one day in the fall with a carload of equipment, including every sort of delicacy that the market afforded and several large trunks full of bright new butcher knives. A detachment of the Sixth cavalry from Fort Dodge was detailed to accompany them, and probably no command ever fared better than that one did. The Englishman shot a few buffalo, and the soldiers slaughtered them by the hundreds. But the Frenchman didn't kill one. Instead, as fast as the animals were shot he would take one of his brand new butcher knives, plunge it into the slain animal until it was smeared with blood, wrap it carefully in tissue paper and put it back in the trunk as a trophy of the chase to exhibit when he got back to Paris as proof of his mighty prowess as a hunter. That was his idea of sport.—Kansas City Star.

Just Names.

She had passed a season abroad, and in London, she said modestly, her success had been unprecedented. The earl said he could readily believe that.
"The dinner," she resumed, "that Lady Featherstonhaugh"—
"Excuse me. The name is pronounced Freestonhay," said the earl.
"Well, at the dinner Lord Dalzell"—
"Though written Dalzell, it is pronounced Deal. But pray go on."
"He and Sir Dugald Colquhoun"—
"You mean Calboun. Yes?"
"And Lady Leveson-Gower and Mr Bohun"—
"Lewson-Gore and Boone are the correct pronunciations. But I'm interrupting you."
"Not at all. All these persons and Lord St. Maur drank"—
"Not St. Maur—Seymour. Well?"
"Oh, I forgot what I was going to say. You've quite put me out with your corrections."
"And your story was just getting interesting, too," said the earl regretfully.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Slightly Mixed.

They had just set up housekeeping and were working on the plan of economy. The bathtub needed a coat of varnish. He promised to attend to it if she would order the varnish.
"You'll find the varnish in the closet with the groceries, dear," she said a day or so later, "and the can opener in the knife drawer."
He opened the can and, according to his contract, applied the coat of varnish and then left it to dry.
The soup for dinner that day had to be abandoned, for somehow it possessed a peculiar paint shop odor that was nauseating. After dinner he took her to inspect his work on the bathtub. Now that it had dried it had a certain unnatural appearance. The top and sides were streaked, and here and there little lumps clung to it.
"The man said that was the best varnish," she explained, taking up the can of varnish for an examination, "but—why, dear, you have varnished the bathtub with the ox tail soup!"
"Then it was the varnish we ate, dear," he added, horror stricken.—Lippincott's.

Bruises, scratches, sores and burns that other things have failed to cure will heal quickly and completely when you use DeWitt's Carbolized Witch Hazel Salve. It is especially good for piles. Sold by all druggists.

A Polite Turn Down.

Sir Algernon West in his reminiscences tells this story of Robert Browning: "When he had become famous some one wanted very much to meet him. A kind friend arranged a meeting, and the guest besieged Browning with questions and conversation during dinner, and even after dinner he continued buttonholing his victim. 'Come,' said the poet, 'this will never do. They will say I am monopolizing you!'"

No Leak.

"Suppose," hissed the villain, "suppose our plot should leak out?"
"That's all right," said his accomplice consolingly. "It can't. Don't you remember telling me five minutes ago that it had shellacked?"

"Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

Throw 'Em Down Babies.

"I wonder," mused the young father, "what there is in a baby's makeup that prompts him to drop things. It isn't really dropping, though—it's throwing. My baby is good about sleeping and behaving when there is company, but everything he can snatch he immediately flings to the floor. I've noticed and known a lot of others, too, who do the same thing. It's not only the joy of throwing, but the delight in seeing somebody pick the stuff up. Babies certainly seem to take a fiendish delight in watching their fathers and mothers or nurses pick up the toys and other things which they throw out of their beds, carriages and chairs. My boy used to be quite pleased with a rubber toy attached by a string to his carriage so that it just escaped the ground. He would grin and dangle it for hours. Now he yells as soon as he discovers it is fastened, and the minute we give it to him loose, bang, it goes on to the ground, while he laughs aloud in his joy. There's probably a reason, and the psychologists will discover it some day."—Exchange.

A Poor Defense.

"Speaking of a poor defense," said a lawyer, "reminds me of the valet who was accused of drinking his master's wine. To this valet the master said:
"'Look here, you! I believe that you have been at this decanter of claret and then filled it up with water.'
"'Oh, no, sir,' said the valet in an aggrieved tone.
"'Well, it tastes like it,' said the master, and he set down his glass with a wry face.
"'Oh, no, sir,' said the valet excitedly. 'In the first place, sir, I never drink wine; in the second place, when I do drink it I never think of filling the bottle up with water, and, in the third place, when I do put water in I always am very careful to add a little brandy so that the wine may not lose its strength.'"

Winning a Juryman.

It is related of Lachaud, the most famous of French criminal lawyers in the last century, that in pleading a certain case he perceived that one of the jurors seemed to be hostile to him and his argument.
In the faces of all the other men in the box he saw with his practiced eyes that his oratory or his shrewdness was having its effect, but this man, in spite of all Lachaud could do, remained frowning, suspicious, obdurate.
Lachaud continued with his work, however, and presently saw that his opportunity had come. It was a hot day, and a ray of sunlight had penetrated a crevice on the curtain and was shining on top of the head of this juryman, who was quite bald. The lawyer paused in his argument and addressed himself directly to the court.
"If your honor would please," he said, "to order that the curtain in yonder window be lowered a trifle I am sure that the sixth juryman would appreciate it."
This sign of watchful attention won the obstinate juryman's heart and Lachaud's case.—New York Tribune.

Parents' Hairs and Heirs.

It is possible to predict from the hair of parents the form of their children's hair. Two blue eyed, straight haired parents will have only blue eyed, straight haired children. Two wavy haired parents may have straight, wavy or curly haired children, but the chances of curly hair are slight. Two curly haired parents may have children with either straight, wavy or curly hair, but the proportion of curly haired offspring will probably be large.—American Naturalist.

The Holy Grail.

From a book reviewed a passage is quoted in which mention is made of "the holy grail, the sang-real or true blood of God." This used to be a common mistake, and so learned a man as Thomas Warton in his "Remarks on Spenser's Imitations From Old Romances" writes, "The holy grale, that is the real blood of our Blessed Saviour." But this is wrong. It is the holy grale, or vessel, and does not mean real blood, though it contained the real blood, collected by Joseph of Arimathea. It was made from a diamond and emerald which fell from the crown of Satan when he fought with Michael. M. de Villemarque, who has written about Armoric legends, says that this jewel was a diamond. The word greal is old French, as I understand, for I have no knowledge myself that it is so. In the legend of Percival it is shown that the grail is a vessel. "'The holy grail!' Percival heard whispered by one voice after another. Then from the shining vessel streamed an endless supply of the costliest dishes and wines."—London Notes and Queries.

Clouds and the Weather.

When two weather prophets disagree does it argue error or incompetence in either? No, says the author of "Storms and Storm Signals" in Yachting. The data upon which they base their predictions do not always bear one interpretation. Thus:
Because the clouds indicate weather in a different manner according to the geographical location of the observer, and also because they are in themselves but byproducts of the weather and are not causes, weather predictions from clouds at sea should be taken with plenty of reservation of judgment. To say, for instance, that at a "red sky at night sailors delight" is very tuneful and possibly truthful where knowledge is conspicuous by its absence, but a red sky at night may mean almost anything from a surplus of moisture in the air, meaning probably rains, to a volcanic eruption 2,000 miles away which has sent great clouds of dust into the air, causing the red color by reflection and refraction of the light rays.

A Sailors' Christening.

"The late Bishop Potter once in his early days had occasion to officiate at a christening in a small fishing village on the Massachusetts coast," says a writer in Harper's Weekly. "The proud father, a young fisherman, awkwardly holding his firstborn daughter, was visibly embarrassed under the scrutiny of the many eyes in the congregation, and his nervousness was not decreased by the sudden wailing of the infant as they stood at the font.
"When the time for the baptism of the babe arrived the bishop noticed that the father was holding the child so that its fat little legs pointed toward the font.
"'Turn her this way,' he whispered, but the father was too disconcerted to hear or understand.
"'Turn her feet around,' the bishop whispered again, but still there was no response. The situation was fast becoming critical, when an ancient mariner in the back of the church came to the rescue. Putting his weather beaten hand to his mouth, he roared across the room, 'Head her up to the wind, Jack!'"

The Battle of the Politicians

Stories of Some of the Figures In the Campaign. Daniel J. Keefe's Difference With Gompers.

The Way E. W. Townsend Happened to Write "Chimmie Fadden" and How He Got Into Politics.

CONGRESSMAN W. S. BENNET, who succeeded T. Coleman du Pont as dicsoon of the Republican speakers' bureau, represents the Seventeenth New York district in the house and is a leading member of the Empire State delegation in the lower branch of the national legislature. He has had experience in the fields of law and journalism and has served in a number of public posts. Born in Port Jervis, N. Y., in 1870, he attended the Port Jervis academy as a youth and, graduating in

W. S. BENNET.

1889, went from it to the Albany Law school, from which three years later he received the degree of LL. B. For a time he was on the staff of the Port Jervis Gazette, but for sixteen years has practiced law, fifteen years of that time in New York city. He was married in 1898 to Miss Gertrude Witschief. He has been a member of the New York assembly and a justice of the municipal court of the city of New York.

Indiana is not the only state in which literary men take to politics. New Jersey is another, and the latest author to break into politics is Edward W. Townsend, who wrote "Chimmie Fadden" and who lives in Montclair. He has been nominated for congress on the Democratic ticket.

It was about fourteen years ago that Mr. Townsend, then a reporter on the New York Sun, was assigned to write a story about a mission where some women were giving a dinner to tenement house children. The Sun man during the meal noticed a young lady who seemed to be on pretty good terms with the boys and entering into their enjoyment in a spirit of comradeship. She noticed that the pie was disappearing rapidly, and, leaning over, she said to one boy:

"Would you like another piece if I can sneak it?"

His eyes brightened as she brought it and placed it before him with a confidential whisper as if he were not to tell. Then what did the urchin do but lean over and kiss her hand. "It may be he had seen a courtier do it on some Bowery stage," said Mr. Townsend afterward, "but I think it was just his own natural tribute."

That was the reporter's first insight into Bowery character, and from the incident grew the immortal "Chimmie." The latter was evolved in a series of "Sunday specials."

"Hunt up the little Bowery chap you wrote about," said the city editor after the first sketch appeared, "and give us some more about him." On Mr. Townsend's replying, "He's just an imaginary character," the city editor rejoined, "Well, imagine some more about him."

He did, and the series took so well that they were published in book form soon afterward and 100,000 copies were sold in a short time. The story was dramatized and had a very successful run on the stage. Several volumes have come from Mr. Townsend's pen since then, but he is still known as "the author of 'Chimmie Fadden.'"

Mr. Townsend is now fifty-three, and his home is on the most fashionable street of Montclair. His latest works do not deal in Bowery slang. To a visitor recently he said:

"Just quote me as saying that my best selling book is not 'Chimmie Fadden.' Just look at this title. This is my best seller."

And the slang politician held out a volume whose gilt letters said:

"Our Constitution—Why and How It Was Made, Who Made It and What It Is."

Daniel J. Keefe, who disagrees with Samuel Gompers in his policy respecting union labor and politics, is president of the International Longshoremen's association. He was appointed with Mr. Gompers and others prominent as employers or organizers of labor as a member of the industrial peace committee established when President Roosevelt constituted his Nobel peace prize money a fund to be used by such a committee. An incident of the campaign has been the controversy over the position taken by Mr. Keefe in support of Judge Taft for the presidency, the assertion having been made that he was induced to favor the Republican candidate by the offer from President Roosevelt of an important federal office. Mr. Keefe denied that any such offer had been made him. The International Longshoremen's association is a powerful organization in the cities on the great lakes, and Mr. Keefe occupies a position of influence in the American Federation of Labor.

D. J. KEEFE.

MRS. WILLIAM F. TUCKER.

Daughter of General Logan and Her Domestic Troubles.

There are some points of resemblance between the Hains case, which is now engaging the attention of the New York criminal courts, and the Tucker case, a sensational incident in which attracted notice a short time ago, the wife in the latter instance causing the arrest of the husband.

MRS. WILLIAM F. TUCKER.

The troubles in the Hains family arose through Captain P. C. Hains' absence on duty in the Philippines and the opportunity this gave for misunderstandings between him and his wife. The trouble between the Tuckers also came about from Colonel William F. Tucker's absence on duty in the faroff islands now part of the possessions of the United States. Mrs. Tucker, who is a daughter of the late General John A. Logan, became suspicious that another woman was trying to steal her husband's affections while he was engaged in his work as an army officer many thousands of miles away from his wife. She made an application to the war department for an investigation of Colonel Tucker's conduct at Manila. Ordinarily the department does not take up any question of domestic infelicity pertaining to members of the army, but in this instance, partly on account of representations made by the widow of General Logan, Judge Taft, who was then secretary, referred the matter to the inspector general of the army for inquiry. Recently, while Colonel Tucker was on his way from Michigan to the government hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., where Secretary Wright had ordered him for treatment, he was arrested on a warrant obtained by his wife charging desertion. Colonel Tucker is assistant paymaster general of the army, and his marriage to General Logan's daughter, then a popular member of Washington society, was a noted social event of the time.

The Knock-out Blow.

The blow which knocked out Corbett was a revelation to the prize fighters. From the earliest days of the ring the knock-out blow was aimed for the jaw, the temple or the jugular vein. Stomach punches were thrown in to worry and weary the fighter, but if a scientific man had told one of the old fighters that the most vulnerable spot was the region of the stomach, he'd have laughed at him for an ignoramus. Dr. Pierce is bringing home to the public a parallel fact; that the stomach is the most vulnerable organ out of the prize ring as well as in it. We protect our heads, throats, feet and lungs, but the stomachs are utterly indifferent to, until disease finds the solar plexus and knocks us out. Make your stomach sound and strong by the use of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and you protect yourself in your most vulnerable spot. "Golden Medical Discovery" cures "weak stomach," indigestion, or dyspepsia, torpid liver, bad, thin and impure blood and other diseases of the organs of digestion and nutrition.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" has a specific curative effect upon all mucous surfaces and hence cures catarrh, no matter where located or what stage it may have reached. In Nasal Catarrh it is well to cleanse the passages with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy fluid while using the "Discovery" as a constitutional remedy. Why the "Golden Medical Discovery" cures catarrhal diseases, as of the stomach, bowels, bladder and other pelvic organs will be plain to you if you will read a booklet of extracts from the writings of eminent medical authorities, endorsing its ingredients and explaining their curative properties. It is mailed free on request. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. This booklet gives all the ingredients entering into Dr. Pierce's medicines from which it will be seen that they contain not a drop of alcohol, pure, triple-refined glycerine being used instead.

Dr. Pierce's great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser will be sent free, paper-bound, for 21 one-cent stamps, or cloth-bound for 31 stamps. Address Dr. Pierce as above.

Thread Used in Surgery.

Are you aware that the modern surgeon employs in his work dozens of different kinds of thread for sewing up cuts and wounds? Among them are kangaroo tendons, horsehair, silk and very fine silver wire. Many of these threads are intended to hold for a certain number of days and then naturally break away. The short, tough tendons taken from the kangaroo, which are used for sewing severe wounds, will hold for about four weeks before they break away. Silk thread will remain much longer, sometimes six months, while the fine silver wire is practically indestructible.

With the entire outfit a surgeon is able to select a thread that will last as long as the wound takes to heal and will then disappear completely. To accommodate this assortment of threads special varieties of needles are required. Besides the needle craned in different segments of a circle, surgeons use needles shaped like spears, javelins and bayonet points. — St. James' Gazette.

Kodol does not have to be taken all the time. Ordinarily you only take Kodol now and then, because it completely digests all the food you eat, and after a few days or a week or so, the stomach can digest the food without the aid of Kodol. Then you don't need Kodol any longer. Try it today on our guarantee. We know what it will do for you. Sold by all druggists.

Professor Blackie's Opinion.

A correspondent sends an anecdote concerning the attempt of a serious minded lady to lure Professor Blackie into giving his opinion of Sankey's hymns at a time when they had an enormous vogue. The lady was giving the professor lunch, and he tried to fob her off by praising a Stilton cheese on the table. Some time after the lady sent him a copy of Sankey and a piece of the cheese, hoping thus to draw him. She succeeded to the extent of these four lines of verse:

Turice blessed is she that hath done what she could
To make a lean man fat and a bad man good—
For the body, cheese; for the soul, Sankey;
For both, thankee.
—Glasgow Herald.

Kodol contains the same digestive juices that are found in an ordinary healthy stomach, and there is, therefore, no question but what any form of stomach trouble, indigestion or nervous dyspepsia, will yield readily yet naturally to a short treatment of Kodol. Try it today on our guarantee. Take it for a little while, as that is all you will need to take. Kodol digests what you eat and makes the stomach sweet. It is sold by all druggists.

The Wrong Heart.

"Mr. Bubkins," said the proud father, shaking the young man warmly by the hand, "let me tell you that you are a man after my own heart."

"Oh, no, sir," protested the blushing suitor; "I'm after your daughter's!"—London Answers.

Soda and Water.

For sheer simplicity of phrase and conception few have surpassed that delightful old lady who, with a shrewd twinkle in her eye, inquired whether "soda water" should be written as two separate words or if there should be a siphon between them.

Honoring Heroes.

Mr. Roosevelt and His Welcome to the Returned Olympian Winners — The League Pennant Race.

DOUBTLESS the visit of the Olympian heroes to Oyster Bay will go down to posterity as one of the unique scenes in American history. There was no politics in the event. The chief magistrate of the nation had invited the victorious athletes to come to the summer capital, and, like good and patriotic citizens, they accepted the invitation. It would be hard to decide which had the best time, the president or his guests.

An Olympian hero is a man after Roosevelt's own heart. There is probably nothing he would like better himself than winning Olympic laurels and were he younger nobody would be greatly surprised to see him give up even a hunt in Africa to train for the next games that are held. Indeed, perhaps when he gets back from his sport in the dark continent he will feel so youthful that it will be hard to hold him from trying his skill and strength with the youngsters in the Marathon race or the shot putting contest or in some strenuous sport of which he is fond. Many of the athletes who met the head of the nation at Oyster Bay were old friends of the president, and there was no lack of sincerity in the greetings exchanged. As one comment upon the occasion put it:

"Mr. Roosevelt is the only president we have ever had who could talk to athletes as he talked to Mr. Sullivan's company, like one of themselves. Most of our presidents have been men of the courtroom, the law office, the study. Andrew Jackson could shoot as well and ride as well as Mr. Roosevelt, but we doubt if he could have safely faced him with a tennis net between them."

Now that they have received the freedom of New York city from Acting Mayor McGowan and their medals and loving cups, not to mention President Roosevelt's handshakes, if some of the athletes give an exhibition of swelled head it would not be occasion for wonder. But they are a modest lot as a whole. John J. Hayes, the winner of the Marathon race, shed real briny tears of joy, according to affidavits made by onlookers, when the New York aldermen toted him on their shoulders on the day of the big parade down Broadway, and the little hero almost fainted, 'tis said, when he had to go up against the ordeal of being kissed, like Hobson, by a bunch of feminine admirers.

The close race for the league pennant makes one of the most exciting episodes in the history of baseball in America. In these days when a batsman knocks a fly that lets in a home run he may be said by stretching metaphor a trifle to fire a shot that is heard around the world. Anyway, when the Giants got two straight games from the Pirates one day not long since and tightened their grip on the championship the news was immediately heralded to the American fleet in Australian waters, and Rear Admiral Sperry used the wireless telegraph with alacrity and dispatch to apprise the jackies on all the ships of what had been transpiring at home on the diamond. And when the American sailors heard the news of the fine ball that was being played back in "the States" they made up their minds that only "a fight or a frolic," as Admiral Evans put it, could make them content with staying so long away from home and the bleachers.

One of the recent remarkable performances in the league race was that of Devlin in a game at Boston between the home team and the Giants. He made a complete circuit of the bases on one hit, negotiated a single in the seventh inning and sacrificed in the ninth, scoring three runs in all.

A Picture Romance.

It is said that one of the most beautiful ladies in French society today was first revealed to her husband on the walls of the salon. It was while visiting the salon in 1878 that the youthful Marquis de C. was struck by the childish beauty of a young girl one of the prominent figures in a picture of a village fete. Her tumbled golden locks, her dancing blue eyes and the freshness and graceful abandon of her figure so fascinated him that he sought out the artist and learned from him that the "little witch" was the daughter of a poor peasant near Arranches, where the picture was painted. To seek out the peasant and to make the acquaintance of his fascinating daughter, child of nine summers, was soon accomplished, and the marquis lost his heart even more completely to the real than to the pictured maid. With the father's approval he had the girl educated at one of the best schools in Paris, and nine years later, on her eighteenth birthday, the maid of the village fete blossomed into the still more lovely Marquise de C.

Gave Him All the Lot.

"So that is your final word?" said the rejected one. "Very well, then, Arabella. In your presence I will end the life you have blighted."

He drew forth a small bottle labeled "Poison," drank off the contents and fell senseless at her feet. Did she sink beside him sobbing with remorse? No. She hastily left the room and in two minutes had returned and was kneeling beside him. Then she forced between his lips the following: Half a cup of turpentine, one pint of milk, a cup of warm soapsuds, a tablespoonful of aromatic ammonia, a cup of black coffee, a glass of mustard and water, a gill of vinegar, the juice of a lemon, the beaten whites of six eggs and one cup of flour and water.

"Algernon," she observed coldly as he slowly opened his eyes, "it is evident you had forgotten that I am a graduate of a correspondence course in first aid. My one regret is that, as I could not on the instant ascertain whether you had taken an acid or an alkali, I was compelled to administer all the antidotes I had learned."—London Scraps.

Ivory Jelly.

The jelly was singularly pale. It almost resembled junket.

"It is ivory jelly," said the invalid. "My English cousins sent me a case of it from Sheffield."

"But why is it called ivory jelly?" they inquired.

"Precisely because it is made of ivory. A third of England's ivory goes to Sheffield, and in the process of grinding and cutting it for knife handles, and so forth, a lot of ivory dust remains, a fine dust, similar to the best flour. Of this the Sheffield folk have made jelly for many years.

"The jelly for some reason is nourishing, extremely so. The doctors prescribe it for the anaemic. And of late a Sheffield firm has taken to manufacturing it on a large scale. Sheffield ivory jelly is now on the market.

"Out of courtesy to my cousins I tried it. To my surprise I found it good. My doctor, sampling it, found it good too. He told me to take the whole case."—Buffalo Express.

Always Counting.

"Your husband says that when he is angry he always counts ten before he speaks," said one woman.

"Yes," answered the other, "I wish he'd stop it. Since he got dyspepsia home seems nothing but a class in arithmetic."

The Bolster.

The crusaders are said to have brought home with them the bolster, and, according to Dr. Cantlie, their wives, in ignorance of the only rational way of using the article (i. e., lengthwise as a support for the back of a person, when lying on his side) and not knowing what else to do with it, put the bolster where it is still found on the beds of those who have not learned the wisdom of discarding it altogether—under the pillow.—London Chronicle.

LANDSLIDE FOR TAFT AND SHERMAN.

Republicans Carry New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and New Jersey.

Successful Candidates Will Have Large Majority In Electoral College.

New York, Nov. 4.—The next president of the United States will be William Howard Taft, Republican, of Ohio. The next vice president will be James Schoolcraft Sherman, Republican, of New York.

This is the verdict returned by the majority of the 15,000,000 voters of the United States. The Republican candidate has repeated Mr. Roosevelt's feat of carrying every northern state, giivng him a clear majority in the electoral college of 129 over William Jennings Bryan, the Democratic candidate. Mr. Taft will receive 306 electoral votes to Mr. Bryan's 177. Mr. Taft has carried West Virginia, which went to Mr. Roosevelt four years ago. Mr. Bryan wins back the one electoral vote which Maryland gave to the Republican candidate in 1900. Oklahoma, the state created since the last presidential election, has enrolled itself, as was expected, in the Democratic column.

The states considered doubtful before the election have gone as follows: Maryland, Democratic; Indiana, Republican; Nebraska, Democratic; New York, Republican; Ohio, Republican, and West Virginia, Republican. In most of these states the vote is close, especially in New York, where Charles Evans Hughes, Republican, has been re-elected governor by 54,000 votes. Taft has carried the state by 150,000, the Republican vote in the upper counties being sufficient to counterbalance the Democratic majority in the metropolis.

Results in the East.

Pennsylvania has gone Republican by 200,000 majority and New Jersey by 70,000, the figures in 1904 being 505,519 and 80,598 respectively. Connecticut is Republican save in a few cities and towns, but Congressman George L. Lilley, the Republican candidate for governor, ran behind Mr. Taft. His majority is 5,000, whereas the Republican presidential candidate has carried the state by 8,500. This is below Mr. Roosevelt's figure in 1904, and the same thing is true of practically every state in the Union that has been carried by both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft.

The lower house of the Sixty-first congress will be Republican, but by a reduced majority. With returns from some districts still in doubt and others contested it appears now that the house will remain safely Republican. The senate will remain Republican. Speaker Cannon has won his fight for re-election but by a reduced majority.

Central States For Taft.

Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, the great central states, with an aggregate of sixty-five electoral votes, have gone Republican despite the fight made to bring them into the Democratic column. The success of Mr Taft in these states, considered virally necessary to his election, has carried with it the success of the Republican state tickets. Governor Deneen in Illinois and Governor Harris in Ohio, Republican candidates for re-election, retain their seats and Congressman Watson will succeed J. Frank Hanly in Indiana. Republican hopes of carrying Kentucky proved vain in spite of the victory of Willson, Republican, in the gubernatorial contest last year. The greater part of the state's congressional delegation will be Democrats.

The Pacific coast states, California, Washington and Oregon, have given their votes to the Republican candidate, but Nevada, which voted against Parker in 1904, gave its vote this year to Bryan. Montana, the Dakotas and Minnesota are again Republican, but Governor Johnson's personal popularity has sufficed to seat him again in the gubernatorial chair of the North Star state. Wisconsin, Michigan, Iowa and in fact the entire West and Northwest are Republican, but, as noted above, by lowered majorities.

The South Still Solid.

The "solid South" is still solidly Democratic, Mr. Bryan polling the usual large majorities. Only in Maryland has the Republican party made serious inroads on the Democratic vote, and in that state not sufficiently to change the result. Delaware, about which some doubt was expressed before the election, has gone Republican. The New England states have gone for Taft and have elected Republican governors, but the vote in Rhode Island, where the Democrats made a strong fight, is very close. In Massachusetts the Independence party candidate for governor made a good showing, though running far behind the vote of Thomas L. Hisgen last year.

New York city has been carried by Bryan and Chanler, the Democratic candidates for president and governor winning in all five boroughs. Of the city's 630,000 votes Mr. Bryan has received 350,000 and Mr. Chanler 400,000. The figures for the entire state are as follows: Taft, 830,000; Bryan 790,000; Hughes, 815,250; Chanler, 804,750.

Bryan Carries Boston by 387 Votes.

Boston, Nov. 4.—Bryan carried Boston in Tuesday's election by 387 votes. The total Bryan vote was 40,237, while Taft polled 39,850. In 1904 Parker, carried the city with 49,032 votes against 38,323 for Roosevelt.

The Electoral Vote.

The electoral vote for 1904 and 1908 appears to be as follows:

CONNECTICUT FOR TAFT.

Carries State, but by Greatly Reduced Majority.

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 4. — Despite the efforts made to place Connecticut in the Democratic column, the state has given its vote to the Republican candidate. Mr. Taft's majority, however, fell far below that of Mr. Roosevelt four years ago. In that year the Republican candidate carried the state by 38,180. This year Mr. Taft's majority is 20,000.

Congressman Lilley has been elected governor by 10,000 despite the opposition to him on account of the submarine boat matter and the opposition to him in his own party. Five Republican congressmen have been elected, and the state legislature will be Republican.

The leaders of both parties in the state expressed great interest in the growth of the Socialist vote, which increased from 2,932 in 1906 to 5,250 this year.

BRYAN GETS HOME STATE.

Democrats Win In Nebraska by a Small Majority.

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 4.—Nebraska has come up to the hopes of William Jennings Bryan by going Democratic. The figures, with some of the more distant points yet to be heard from, are as follows: Taft, 91,000; Bryan, 99,000. The Democratic majority is 8,000, which is a falling off of 78,682 from the majority received by Mr. Roosevelt in 1904.

Governor George L. Sheldon, Republican, has been re-elected by a majority of 20,000. The personal popularity of Mr. Bryan in his home state and of Mr. Sheldon accounts for the difference between the governor's vote and that of Mr. Taft. The state's present congressional delegation, five Republicans and one Democrat, stands.

Bryan Silent on Election.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 4.—"I do not desire to discuss the result of the election at the present time," said Mr. Bryan after the returns were received here. "At a later date I shall probably have something to say, but now I must beg to be excused." The Democratic candidate's own city gave Mr. Taft a majority. The result in Nebraska was a great satisfaction to Mr. Bryan.

Kansas Still Republican.

Topeka, Kan., Nov. 4. — Kansas is again in the Republican column this year. Mr. Taft's majority in the state is 40,000, 36,093 less than Mr. Roosevelt's majority in 1904. Walter R. Stubbs, Republican, has been elected governor.

Taft Wins In South Dakota.

Pierre, S. D., Nov. 4.—This state has been carried by Taft by a plurality estimated at 30,000. In 1904 Mr. Roosevelt received a plurality of 50,114. Robert S. Vessey, Republican candidate for governor, has been elected.

PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICAN.

Party's Vote Cut Down In Cities Where Labor Element Is Strong.

Philadelphia, Nov. 4.—Pennsylvania has gone Republican by a majority of 160,000, the figures being as follows: Taft, 575,000; Bryan, 425,000. In 1904 Roosevelt carried the state by 505,519, and two years ago Stuart, Republican, was elected governor by 48,435. This city, Pittsburg, Harrisburg, Altoona and other cities have given Mr. Taft pluralities, but Scranton, Wilkes-Barre and towns in which the so called "labor" vote is strong have gone Democratic.

The election in Pennsylvania turned almost entirely on national issues, the highest state officer voted for being a judge of the superior court. For that office William D. Porter, Republican, has been elected by a majority of 50,000 over Webster Grim, Democrat.

The vote in the country districts was, as usual, heavily Republican. The state's representation will again be Republican in the Sixty-first congress, the Democrats having gained only one seat. The figures will be as follows: Republicans, 24; Democrats, 8.

THE SOUTH STILL SOLID.

Usual Democratic Majorities Returned in Dixie.

St. Louis, Nov. 4.—Missouri has reversed the Republican victory of 1904 and is again in the Democratic ranks by a majority of 30,000. St. Louis went Republican by a small majority. William S. Cowherd has been elected governor.

Maryland.

Baltimore, Nov. 4.—Maryland's split electoral vote of four years ago, seven Democratic and one Republican, is this year solidly Democratic. The election is close, Mr. Bryan's plurality being about 5,000. The Democrats have gained one congressman. The state delegation in the Sixty-first congress will contain four Democratic representatives and two Republicans. This city has gone Democratic by a close vote.

Texas.

Austin, Tex., Nov. 4. — William H. Taft did not make as good a showing in this state as President Roosevelt, who polled 51,242 votes in 1904. The vote this year is approximately as follows: Bryan, 220,000; Taft, 20,000. Thomas M. Campbell, Democrat, has been re-elected governor.

Georgia.

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 4.—Georgia's thirteen electoral votes will be cast for William J. Bryan, and the state's representation will continue solidly Democratic. The state election was held in September. The Taft vote in this state fell 10,000 below that of Mr. Roosevelt, which was 24,003.

Kentucky.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 4.—Kentucky has gone Democratic by a vote of 230,000 in a total vote of 430,000. The Republicans have lost two of their congressmen, giving the state now nine Democrats to two Republicans. There was no state election.

Florida.

Jacksonville, Fla., Nov. 4. — Albert W. Gilchrist, Democrat, has been elected governor of Florida, and the Democratic national ticket has carried the state by a majority of 25,000, the Republican vote showing a loss of 3,000 since 1904.

South Carolina.

Charleston, S. C., Nov. 4.—The Republican party polled only 2,000 of the 58,000 votes in this state, running slightly behind the figures of four years ago. M. F. Ansel has been re-elected governor without opposition.

Virginia.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 4.—The Old Dominion is still safely within the Democratic ranks by a very large majority. Taft polled only 30,000 votes in a total of 130,000, a Republican loss of 17,880 since 1904.

North Carolina.

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 4.—The Democratic national ticket has carried North Carolina by a majority of 25,000, the total vote being 210,000. W. W. Kitchin has been elected governor.

Oklahoma.

Guthrie, Okla., Nov. 4.—The seven electoral votes of the new state, the first to be cast, will go to William Jennings Bryan, who received 70,000 of the state's 125,000 votes.

Alabama.

Montgomery, Ala., Nov. 4.—Bryan, 80,000; Taft, 13,000, are the election figures in this state. Mr. Taft polled 9,472 fewer votes than Mr. Roosevelt did in 1904.

Arkansas.

Little Rock, Ark., Nov. 4.—Arkansas has given Mr. Bryan a majority of 30,000, an increase of 12,436 over the vote polled by Mr. Parker in 1904.

Tennessee.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 4.—Tennessee is still strongly Democratic by a majority of 30,000. The Republican vote of 1904 was greatly reduced.

Mississippi.

Jackson, Miss., Nov. 4.—Mississippi's ten electoral votes will go, as usual, to the Democratic candidate. There was no state election.

EMPIRE STATE FOR TAFT AND HUGHES

Republican National and State Tickets Win.

BRYAN CARRIES THE BIG CITY

Metropolis Gives Its Vote to Democratic Presidential Candidate by Large Majority, Also Indorsing Chanler's Candidacy—Buffalo Also Democratic, but Other Cities Are Republican—Next Legislature Will Be Republican — Governor Hughes Expresses Gratification at Result of Election.

New York, Nov. 4.—As the result of yesterday's election New York state's thirty-nine electoral votes will be cast for William H. Taft and James S. Sherman. Both the Republican national and state tickets are victorious, Charles E. Hughes being re-elected governor.

Greater New York has gone Democratic, indorsing both Bryan and Chanler. The counties above the city, however, have given to the Republican national and state tickets majorities large enough to insure their success. The figures are as follows:

In the entire state, Taft, 830,000; Bryan, 790,000; Hughes, 815,250; Chanler, 804,750. In New York city, Taft, 250,000; Bryan, 380,000; Hughes 230,000; Chanler, 400,000.

Reports from all parts of the state indicate that the vote was heavy, the efforts of both gubernatorial candidates to bring out the ballots being rewarded with success. Both the old parties polled full votes, their strength not being seriously affected by the Independence, Socialist and other minor parties. Shearn, Independence party candidate for governor, ran ahead of Wanhope, the Socialist nominee.

Next Legislature Republican.

The state's congressional representation will be divided, as at present, among the two parties, with one change. Hilliquit, Socialist, being elected in the Ninth district in place of Riordan, Democrat. The next legislature will be Republican in both branches, insuring a Republican successor for Senator Thomas C. Platt, who will leave the senate in March.

New York and Buffalo are the only two large cities of the state that have gone for Chanler.

"I need not say that I am greatly pleased with the result of the election," declared Governor Hughes. "I felt certain that the people would indorse the administration of President Roosevelt by electing Secretary Taft, and I consider my own re-election as an approval of the policies pursued by the state administration during the past two years."

Taft and Johnson In Minnesota.

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 4.—Governor John A Johnson's efforts in behalf of the Democratic national ticket have not succeeded in giving the electoral vote of the state to Mr. Bryan, but have availed in re-electing him by a small majority. Of the state's 275,000 votes Mr Taft polled 172,500, his majority being 90,000 below Mr. Roosevelt's majority of 161,464 in 1904. Governor Johnson's majority of 76,683 two years ago was reduced to 30,000 this year.

G. O. P. Carries Wisconsin.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 4.—Mr. Taft's majority in this state is 40,000, being 96,057 less than the majority rolled up by Mr. Roosevelt four years ago. Governor James O. Davidson has been re-elected, and the state's congressional delegation, nine Republicans and two Democrats, will remain the same in the next congress. The legislature will be Republican, and Senator Stephenson will be re-elected.

Iowa Indorses Taft.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—Although the Democratic vote which stayed away from the polls in 1904 turned out in full force yesterday for Mr. Bryan, it was not sufficiently strong to carry the state. Taft's maority in Iowa is 43,000 in a full vote of 504,000. B. F. Carroll, the Republican nominee for governor, was successful.

West Virginia Carried by Taft.

Wheeling, W. Va., Nov. 4. — West Virginia, classed as a doubtful state before the election, has voted for William H. Taft. His plurality in the state is 9,000, 22,765 less than Mr. Roosevelt's plurality in 1904. The Republican division helped to elect Louis Bennett, Democrat, governor.

Michigan For Taft.

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 4. — Both sections of this divided state have gone Republican, the total plurality for Mr. Taft being 100,000, a Republican loss of 127,715 since 1904. Governor Fred M. Warner, Republican, will retain his seat.

North Dakota Republican.

Bismarck, Nov. 4.—North Dakota has [illegible] giving Mr. Taft 40,00[illegible] votes. This is a Republican [illegible] off of 28,322 since the last presidential election.

CENTRAL WEST IS REPUBLICAN.

Illinois, Indiana and Ohio Are Carried by Taft.

PARTY ELECTS GOVERNORS.

Deneen in Illinois, Watson in Indiana and Harris in Ohio Are Elected. Taft's City Votes For Him, and Indianapolis, Home of John W. Kern, Is Republican—Chicago Goes Republican — Crowds Cheer Republican Standard Bearer When Result Is Announced.

Chicago, Nov. 4.—Illinois has been carried by the Republican party by a plurality of 50,000, giving the state's twenty-seven electoral votes to Taft and Sherman. The state Republican ticket has also been successful, Governor Charles S. Deneen winning from former Vice President Adlai E. Stevenson by the same plurality. Chicago has gone Republican by 25,000.

The next state legislature will be Republican by a majority on joint ballot of 38, a loss of 24. This means the re-election to the United States senate of Albert J. Hopkins.

There will be a decided change in the congressional representation of Illinois. The present delegation from the state includes twenty-four Republicans and one Democrat. The figures in the Sixty-first congress will be seventeen Republicans and eight Democrats, six of the latter being from Chicago. Speaker Cannon has been re-elected in the Eighteenth district.

The voters of the state have indorsed the proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the state to issue bonds of $20,000,000 for the construction of a deep waterway beginning at or near Lockport, Ill., to a point at or near Utica, Ill., in the Illinois river.

Indiana Goes Republican.

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 4.—The endeavors of the Democrats to place Indiana in the ranks of their party, causing the state to be considered doubtful some time before the election, have not been successful. The Hoosier vote has been given to Taft and Sherman by a majority of 18,000, reducing the Republican majority of four years ago by two-thirds. The figures are: Taft, 341,000; Bryan, 299,000.

Congressman James E. Watson has been elected to succeed J. Frank Hanly as governor, leading Thomas F. Marshall, his Democratic opponent, by 15,000 votes. The state congressional representation, eleven Republicans and two Democrats, will remain unchanged, but the legislature is Republican by a slightly reduced majority. The term of Senator Hemenway, Republican, will expire in March.

This city disappointed the hopes of John W. Kern, Democratic candidate for the vice presidency, who resides here, by going Republican. Mr. Kern would not discuss the result of the election, saying that he would issue a formal statement later.

Taft Wins In His Home State.

Columbus, O., Nov. 4 — Secretary Taft's home state has given him a majority of 50,000, 205,000 below the majority of Mr. Roosevelt four years ago. The strong Democratic fight did not avail to carry the state for either Mr. Bryan or Judson Harmon, candidate for governor, but pulled down the Republican vote in all parts of the state. Large Democratic gains are reported from most of the large cities and towns. The rural districts generally, however, have remained Republican.

The fight made by Governor Andrew L. Harris, candidate for re-election, for local option was an important factor in the result, as was foreshadowed in the county elections. The governor's activity lost him votes among the so called "liberal" element, the loss showing in the returns from Cincinnati, Cleveland, Toledo and other cities.

Wyoming Republican.

Cheyenne, Nov. 4. — This state's three electoral votes will be cast for William H. Taft, but his popular majority is considerably below that of Mr. Roosevelt.

Bryan Carries Nevada.

Carson City, Nev., Nov. 4.—Nevada has been carried by the Democratic party, reversing the result in 1904. Of the state's 10,000 votes Mr. Bryan has received 7,000.

Close Call In Colorado.

Denver, Nov. 4.—Colorado, which gave Mr. Roosevelt a majority of 34,582 in 1904, has again gone Republican, but by less than 8,000. Jesse F. McDonald has been elected governor and three Republican representatives have been chosen.

Delaware Goes Republican.

Wilmington, Del., Nov. 4.—Delaware, considered doubtful before the election, has gone Republican, giving three electoral votes to Taft. Simeon S. Pennewill, Republican, will be the new governor.

Montana Goes For Taft.

Helena, Mont., Nov. 4.—The three electoral votes of this state will be cast for Taft. Edward Donlan, Republican, has been elected governor.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

The first session for this season for the Current Events Club was held on Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Hunter. There was a large attendance of members, who were favored with a most enjoyable and instructive program.

After the reading of the minutes of the previous session and the discussion of routine business, the program for the evening was presented by Prof. Wilcox of the High School. As a prelude, Mrs. Thomas Hunter's services as vocalist were secured by the committee and she rendered "A Summer Night" in excellent voice.

Mr. W. G. Pelley was next introduced. He confined his attention to the recent National and State political campaign, furnishing interesting and instructive data in connection therewith.

A trio, composed of Mrs. Hunter, Mrs. Carlisle and Mr. Hal MacFarland, added an enjoyable feature to the program by rendering in a most artistic manner, "Father, lead me by Thy Hand."

Prof. Wilcox gathered up matters of interest in foreign countries. He referred to the successful struggle of the Young Turkish party in the land of the Sublime Porte for a constitution and freedom from the exactions of a military despotism. Bulgarian independence and the incidents which paved the way to the revolution in the buffer Balkan State, were next taken in succession. The growth of the influence of the Russian Douma and the progress attained in the legislative administration of affairs in that country, and the progress made in Panama canal work. Then reverting to our own country, he dwelt in detail on the fund of 1,000 pounds sterling which Benjamin Franklin left to the City of Boston in his palmiest days for the purpose of founding an industrial educational institute, to be known as the Franklin Union, and which sum has now grown to immense proportions. Prof. Wilcox al[illegible] in connection with [illegible] the evacuation of that country by the United States completed the summary.

The club was fortunate in having as its guest the Hon. W. B. Sleeper of the Oaks Ranch and Live Stock Company of Meeteese, Big Horn County, Wyoming, who gave a most instructive account of the sheep-raising industry in that section.

This concluded the program for the evening.

The next meeting of the club will be held at the home of Mrs. Mary Emerick on Monday, Nov. 23. The Rev. J. G. York and Mr. E. R. Redhead will be the leaders, and the following subject will be presented for debate: "Resolved, That the United States, if invited, should accept representation in a Congress to settle questions affecting the peace and welfare of the various European countries."

FOSTER THEATRE.

Mirth, music and all that goes toward making a jolly minstrel performance are the characteristic features of the bill Gorton's Minstrels will offer to the patrons of The Foster Theatre, Tuesday, Nov. 17th.

In selecting Welby and Lee to lead this merry company of fun makers a wise move was made in that this duo is recognized from coast to coast as top liners in the art of creating merriment. To create fun of the most hilarious kind seems to be their natural inheritance which they deal out in generous quantities.

Octave Callouette, in sensational feats of balancing and unicycle riding on the slack wire, and Lewis and Willis, Comedy Acrobats with original and amusing knock-a-bout stunts, are also strong features of an entertaining program.

Gorton's Challenge Band, said to be the finest musical organization ever carried with a Minstrel Company, will give free open air concerts at noon and 7 P. M. Lovers of fine music are especially invited to hear this band.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS MEET.

The Board of Supervisors met at [illegible] a canvassing board on Tuesday and the different committees were appointed. S. C. Huntington was present in Mr. C. W. Taft's behalf and Udelle Bartlett represented L. C. Rowe.

Supervisor Willis P. Gregg of Schroeppel was elected chairman of the canvassing board and an adjournment was taken until 2:30 p. m., when Mr. Gregg announced his committees and the work of canvassing the vote was begun.

The Board of Supervisors met at 5 o'clock and elected Mr. Peter Hydorn of Sandy Creek chairman and Mr. W. W. Spencer clerk. Adjournment was then taken until next Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

New York's Postmaster Shot.

Postmaster Morgan of New York city was shot by an insane man on Monday, the bullet from the revolver passing through his abdomen and out without perforating the intestines so that Mr. Morgan's chances for recovery are excellent. The assassin blew his own brains out. No cause for the act is known.

"A KNIGHT FOR A DAY."

The big musical gaiety, "A Knight for a Day," with its record of over six hundred nights at the Whitney in Chicago, six months at Wallack's in New York, and all the past summer at the Tremont in Boston will be seen in its entirety next Friday evening at the Foster Theatre. Comedian Frank Deshon, whose clever impersonation of the nervy little waiter masquerading as a knight, elicted the unanimous praise of the Boston critics and theatregoers, will be seen in the same delightful comedy role and the production is one typical of the B. C. Whitney trade-mark which means in addition to some of the most unique electrical surprises a chorus of rare beauty and talent, including a number of miniature maidens in dainty dances devised by that wizard of chorus numbers, Gus Sohlke. Those who are fortunate enough to have seen "A Knight for a Day," know it to be a gay and girly gleegaw of particular charm in its score and of uproarious mirth in its comic story and incidents. Mainly it concerns the misadventures of Jonathan Joy and Tilly Day, the first a nervy little waiter who decides to pass himself off as a knight whose credentials [illegible] and Tilly, a return [illegible] of the owner's [illegible] to [illegible]. The other a chorus girl at a young ladies' boarding school. Comic incident runs riot through the piece. Everyone who follows the theatre has doubtless heard of the elopement scene with Tilly Day, the "servant lady," and Jonathan Joy, the "near-knight" escaping from a dormitory window by the light of the moon only to be caught after a second trip up the ladder to get the powder puff of the "servant lady" which had been overlooked in the hurry. Most people are likewise familiar with the laughter waves generated by the scene at the wall where Tilly becomes intoxicated by imbibing of the waters of a champagne charged cistern. In the girly ensembles Gus Sohlke has exceeded all previous efforts and this part of the presentation is perhaps as renowned as anything in the production.

Take your choice between a Rocky Ford and an Euthuso 5c cigar. They are both winners. V. C. Lewis, 109 Cayuga street.

About eighteen of Mr. John Salisbury's friends enjoyed an old fashioned husking bee at his home in Palermo on Wednesday evening. A regular harvest supper was served and the hours were filled with fun and frolic. The only draw back to the perfect pleasure of the occasion so far as the young men were concerned, was that the red ears were few and so far between. One young man prepared for peace in time of war by carrying a red ear of corn in his pocket which he produced at irregular intervals.

Mr. F. A. Rudd wishes to convey to the matron and the nurses in the Fulton hospital, his earnest gratitude for the tender care and attention which was given his wife during the two weeks which she spent as a patient in the hospital. Why County Indictments Were Made.

District Attorney W. B. Baker on Nov. 2, gave to the Oswego papers the following summary as to how and why Grand Jury indictments are made, with especial reference as to why the indictment of ex-county and county officials were secured. The summary was as follows:

Ex-County Treasurer Thomas Moore paid out over $29,000 for bills which were not audited. Each bill so paid being a separate offense.

Thomas Moore's brother, Robert Moore, received over $5,500 of the above amount on unaudited and unverified bills.

One indictment against Thomas Moore was for paying a bill which the Board of Supervisors had refused to audit two years before.

The foreman of the Grand Jury was selected by District Attorney Baker and is a Grand Army man and a friend of Thomas Moore.

The Grand Jury of twenty men voted these indictments on evidence of Democratic State Comptroller Glynn's expert, Mark Graves.

The District Attorney was not a witness and was not present when the indictments were voted on. The law permits no one to be present except Grand Jurors when indictments are found.

There are others indicted in connections with county matters. Sheriff Henry Hilton and Deputy Sheriff Frank White are also indicted and have given bail. There are more to follow.

No screening of any official who violates the law or who squanders the taxpayers' money.

The law does not permit giving out names of parties indicted until they are taken into custody.

The Grand Jury indicts.

The District Attorney does not and can not indict. Very truly,

W. B. Baker.

Sick Headache.

This distressing disease results from a disordered condition of the stomach, and can be cured by taking Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. Get a free sample at E. A. Putnam's drug store and try it.

Ex-Sheriff Cook Arrested.

Former Sheriff Eldon H. Cook was arrested on Wednesday on a charge of having presented for audit alleged false and fraudulent bills. Mr. Cook was admitted to bail before Judge Stowell in the sum of $1,000, Messrs. H. D. Scoville and E. E. Frost becoming his sureties. Mr. Cook was a former resident of Constantia, but removed to Chittenango three years ago to engage in business.

Final Term.

Judge M. S. Stowell will retire from the County Judgeship on Jan. 1, 1909, owing to the age limit, and he will preside at the last term of County Court during his term, on Nov. 23.

Remedy for Scandal.

A correspondent sends the following, which is good in its way, but the trouble is that the afflicted ones for whom it is intended will diagnosis the disease to perfection, but do not see that they are impregnated with the symptoms. It wants a vivid penman to point out the disease so unmistakable that they who are affected will know that they are so. When that is done, something may be accomplished towards relief.

"Take one ounce of good nature; one ounce of an herb called by the Indians mind-your-own-business; mix with a little charity for others and two or three sprigs of keep-your-tongue-between-you-teeth; simmer them in the vessel of circumspection for a short time and it will be fit for use."

"The symptoms are a violent itching in the roof of the mouth, which invariably takes place when you are in company with a species of animals called gossips. When you feel a fit of it coming on, take a teaspoonful of the mixture; hold it in your mouth, which you will keep shut until you get home, and you will be completely cured. Should you apprehend a relapse, keep a small bottle full about you, and on the slightest symptoms repeat the dose."

Shake off the grip of your old enemy, Nasal Catarrh, by using Ely's Cream Balm. Then will all the swelling and soreness be driven out of the tender, inflamed membranes. The fits of sneezing will cease and the discharge, as offensive to others as to yourself, will be stopped when the causes that produce it are removed. Cleanliness, comfort and renewed health by the use of Cream Balm. Sold by all druggists for 50 cents, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren Street, New York.

Among the jurors drawn for the Trial Term of County Court, to convene in Oswego on Nov. 23, were:

Xmas Presents For Mere Man.

Homemade Offerings That Will Appeal to the Masculine Heart — A Bachelor's Roll — Latest Collar Box.

The average male is usually a very difficult individual to cater to in the way of Christmas presents. The designs illustrated are likely to prove acceptable, especially the bachelor's roll, to the unwedded male condemned to sew on his buttons. For its manufacture a strip of black cloth is serviceable material to use. As the picture shows, it consists of a straight strip about eight inches long and wide enough to take two spools of cotton placed lengthwise. The edges are turned in and stitched, the inside being lined with white flannel. When this is done cut two circular pieces of the cloth a trifle larger than a spool of cotton, turn in the edges evenly, line with the same material as that used for the roll, turn over the one end of the strip and sew to the circle, leaving the opening wide enough to slip in two spools of cotton. Sew the other circle on the other end to match, then make the needlecase, also of flannel. Secure a strip across the roll from one side to the other, as seen in the illustration, sew some buttons to these, then sew on a strip of narrow tape across the roll through which a pair of scissors can be slipped. Finish off the ends neatly, and the little roll is complete.

MATERIALS REQUIRED.
One-eighth yard of black cloth.
One-eighth yard of white flannel.
Card of white buttons.
Pair of scissors.
Piece of linen tape.
Needles.

A BACHELOR'S ROLL.

Almost any man is pleased with a collar box as a Christmas present, and one of the latest designs is illustrated. In its best form leather is the material used, but any strong fabric will answer the purpose. The box consists of a bag stiffened at the lower part and sewed to a circle of cardboard large enough to accommodate the collars. The edges of the stiffened portion are ornamented with fancy cord, while a cord run through a casing draws the bag up. The word "Collars" may be embroidered on one side or merely the initials. If made of leather the cords should be passed through slits cut at regular intervals.

A cuff case is arranged to match the collar bag, the two making a most attractive set. The stamped material comes in two pieces, front and back, which have ends arranged to fold over and fasten with snaps on the front. This allows the case to be opened at both ends, which is often a great convenience. The case is lined with a handsome green moire which comes with the outfit. One skein each of flo silk of the different shades is required for working.

MATERIALS REQUIRED.
One small skin of green leather.
Two yards of silk cord or
One yard of cretonne.
Four yards silk cord.
Embroidery silks for lettering.

THE LATEST COLLAR BOX.

A Stocking Novelty.

In wondering what to give a girl friend for Christmas do not forget that a pair of silk stockings always proves acceptable. Black and white are the most popular choices for a gift, as in buying colored stockings it is necessary to know the shade of the gowns and shoes that are to be worn with them. If, however, you want something a little more elaborate, there are black silk stockings with colored tops and insets on the instep to match that are new and popular with young women who are not conservative as to the dressing of their feet.

What to Give.

GOVERNOR HUGHES IN FULTON.

The mass meeting in Stephens Opera House on Thursday morning was pronounced a success despite the early hour at which the meeting was necessarily held, on account of the Governor's being scheduled to address audiences at Binghamton and Dunkirk on Thursday afternoon.

The entire detail work of arranging for Governor Hughes's coming had fallen to Mr. H. Putnam Allen and he left nothing undone to make the event an auspicious one. In his effort he was unqualifiedly successful. Owing to the New York train being very late, the governor and his party did not reach Fulton until so late that but twenty minutes could be devoted to the issues of the day, but every word that fell from Gov. Hughes's lips was listened to with deepest interest by an audience which taxed the capacity of the Opera House.

Manager John W. Stevenson of the woolen mill took Gov. Hughes from the opera house to the plant of his company in his automobile. As the crowd reached the bridge the mill whistles blew and the employes thronged out to greet the distinguished guest. The Governor had been forbidden to speak in the open air by his physician on account of throat trouble, but he could not resist the inclination and Mr. Stevenson's urgent plea that he address the throng so he stepped before the men and made a five minute address. Mr. Stevenson then called for three cheers for Governor Hughes, which were given with a vim.

Congressman Knapp followed Gov. Hughes and he was most enthusiastically received, making an address replete with information and interest. Mr. Knapp's reception was second in cordiality not even to that vouchsafed the governor as the feeling for Mr. Knapp in this city is one of personal friendship. While in Fulton Congressman Knapp assured Postmaster Hughes that if elected, he would give his immediate and undivided attention to the federal building appropriation for Fulton as it was one of his pet projects.

Her Luck.

By a strange coincidence a much married woman lost three husbands in succession through fatal accidents in the mine. Naturally her case excited much interest, and she had many sympathetic callers, to all of whom she made the same reply.

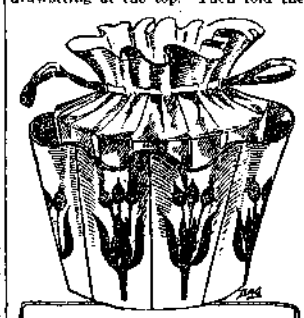
The new issue of postage stamps will be placed on sale in postoffice on Nov. 16. The denominations are 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 13, 15 and 50 cents, and $1. The Postoffice Department says that the $2 and $5 stamps will be discontinued after the present supply is exhausted. On the one cent stamp is the head of Benjamin Franklin in profile from Houdon's bust. All the other denominations bear the head of George Washington in profile from Houdon's bust. The order designs of all the denominations are identical, the head being an ellipse on end with laurel leaves on either side. Above the head are the words "U. S. Postage," below it the denomination. The size of the stamps is the same as that of the stamps now on sale.



The first entertainment of the Public Library benefit course was held in the assembly rooms of the library on Friday evening and proved an event of more than ordinary success Prof. Fairgrieve, president of the Current Events club, under whose auspices the entertainment course is given, has selected a course of entertainments unequalled for excellence, but the sale of tickets has not proven as great a success as was anticipated, owing to the exceptional quality of the entertainments offered. In fact the income thus far derived from the sale of season tickets will not pay the actual expense of the course. Mrs. Booth will be the next number in the course and she will be in Fulton sometime in December, the date not yet being decided, and there will be two more numbers during the early part of the new year. The season tickets for the balance of the course have been placed at $1.50 each and are on sale at the Lasher book store, where it is hoped that our citizens will liberally purchase. No more enjoyable entertainments will be given in Fulton this season, and the cause is certainly a worthy one.

STOCKING BAG GIFT.

A Christmas Remembrance Our Grandmothers Found Very Useful.

The stocking bag, as it was called, used to be a great favorite with our grandmothers for keeping their knitting wools in; but, while they used brown holland for its manufacture, the modern bag is made in old rose linen with the embroidery done in black cotton, a color scheme which is extremely effective. For a good sized bag a yard of linen is required, the actual bag taking three-fourths of a yard and the strip for the pockets one-fourth yard.

First take the linen for the bag and make a broad hem with a place for a drawstring at the top. Then fold the narrow piece for the pockets into six, creasing them with a warm iron, and embroider some simple design on each of the six divisions. When the embroidery is finished arrange the pockets on the bag, afterward firmly stitching them along the creases. Stitch up the side of the bag and then sew the bottom to a round of the linen, concealing the turnings by means of another round of linen neatly hemmed on. Drawstrings of old rose ribbon finish off a very smart and useful bag.

GIFTS FOR A MAN.

Prints of Famous Pictures Mounted on Shaving Pads.

The inexpensive prints of famous pictures may be utilized in many charming ways in homemade Christmas gifts. A token for a man which is just finished combines a shaving pad and calendar. One of the stiff gray photograph mounts is employed as a foundation. The tissue shaving leaves are clamped at the top of one side with brass paper fasteners, which not only hold them in place, but catch ribbon bows on the other side. The bows end the loop by which the card is hung. On the calendar side a copy of one of Ruisdael's Hollandish windmill scenes covers the upper half of the card. The calendar pad is pasted below.

A neat matchbox for a bachelor's room is made by covering a square with cream colored art linen which has been appropriately embroidered in some neat design. A miniature stein can be fastened to the card by means of narrow ribbon placed at the top and bottom of the stein and tied on the back of the card. This can be purchased for 10 cents. They are decorated with sentimental quotations

Articles which are handmade, if they are well made and practical, are appreciated more than any other small gift. Among the newest ideas in fancy work are shown innumerable lingerie ribbon holders.

One of the most attractive is in the form of three little maids from school,

Von Bulow and Sarasate.

In one of his letters Von Bulow refers to Sarasate as follows: "He has enchanted me beyond measure, particularly in his concert of yesterday, when he played a splendid work, 'Symphonie Espagnole,' by Lalo—played in so genuinely artistic a manner that today I am still intoxicated with it. His playing also of the Saint-Saëns concert piece for violin is as entrancing as interesting. It is a shame that he cannot come to see me. N. B.—I have purposely avoided his personal acquaintance. Perhaps he has tried to see me, for over my door stands the notice:

"Mornings—not to be seen.
Afternoons—not at home

"But perhaps he did not ring the bell. (He never plays under 1,000 francs—he received this sum here at a private musicale.) For secretary he has Otto Goldschmidt, who sent me a pass, which I returned with the remark that for such an important concert I could certainly afford to buy my ticket. Six marks was in no way too much to pay."

Bulow did make his acquaintance, however, as he refers in a later letter to Sarasate coming, quite unexpectedly, to a "conference with Johannes" (Brahms), at which he himself was present.

Casualties Expected.

During one of Speaker Cannon's bitter political fights in his district in Illinois the opposition resorted to desperate tactics. Among other things friends of Uncle Joe were summarily dismissed from positions they held in the public service. Some of his friends became alarmed at this, and one of them called on the speaker at his residence and said, somewhat excitedly:

"Joe, Smith and Jones have just lost their positions in the postoffice. What are we going to do about it?"

Uncle Joe took another puff at his cigar and then answered, with a benevolent smile: "Nothing. If you go into battle, you have got to expect to have some dead and wounded."

Almost Qualified.

"Help you!" scoffed the irate housewife. "Well, I guess not. I only assist invalids."

"Well, mum," responded Beefsteak Ben as he tried to remove the bulldog from his shins, "I'll be an invalid if I stay here much longer."

New things are [illegible] in themselves. It is not so much means as perseverance that is [illegible] being them to a successful issue.—Beforehand.

He Preferred Mules.

One of the pet hobbies of Senator Christopher Magee was his newspaper, the Pittsburg Times. He kept the paper well to the front, and it was a credit to modern journalism. One morning the Times had been scooped on a railway wreck.

"Senator," asked an intimate acquaintance, "how do you console yourself on the loss of that wreck story this morning?"

"By congratulating ourselves," he answered quickly, "that we are among the number who missed that ill fated train."

On another occasion as the senator was approaching the Times building on Fourth avenue he noticed a crowd gathered about a wagon which was filled with huge rolls of newspaper. A wheel was caught in a deep rut in the pavement and could not be budged.

"Senator," laughed a friend, "they managed at last to get your paper into a rut."

"Yes," answered Mr. Magee, his eyes twinkling with good humor, "and I'm not trusting to men to get it out again, but to mules."—Philadelphia Press.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 11, 1908

DEFEAT OF W. B. BAKER.

When the Grand Jury made its report in October it presented a statement to the court in which it highly commended the manner in which District Attorney Baker had presented the county cases to that body. When Mark Graves, the expert from the Comptroller's office who prepared the Comptroller's report, was here as a witness before the Grand Jury he made the following statement:

"I know something of the pressure and difficulty under which Mr. Baker has had to work and while I am not interested in the political aspect of the affair, yet in justice to Mr. Baker I will say he has requested me at all times to give to the Grand Jury all the facts which I deemed material for them to know. I believe he has endeavored to present all the facts."

The Grand Jury knew that Mr. Baker had done his full duty and Mr. Graves knew that he had done his full duty, yet during the campaign just closed he was accused by the men who were opposed to his election with not doing his full duty in this matter when they knew just as well as did the Grand Jury and Mr. Graves that he had done so. But this charge on the part of these men was as untrue and unfair as were the charges that they made that Mr. Baker was responsible for the condition of affairs found in the County Treasurer's office; that he was responsible for the acts of the members of the Board of Supervisors and that he was responsible for the purchase of supplies for the county jail, or any of the other charges which they brought and all of which were without any facts to sustain them. Mr. Baker was defeated for County Judge through a campaign of misrepresentation and prevarication, not to use the shorter and uglier word, but when the true facts in connection with the county affairs are brought out, when the people of this county know how they have been deceived and tricked, then Mr. Baker will be fully vindicated and those who voted against him will remember their act with the deepest regret.

Mr. Baker has been in public life for twelve years. He was six years Special Surrogate and has been District Attorney for six years. As District Attorney he has made one of the best records ever made in that office. He has tried 187 indictments, securing 173 convictions, ten acquittals and four disagreements. Six of these were murder cases and in every one of them he secured a conviction. He had pitted against him the best lawyers in this county yet he did all the work alone and never asked the taxpayers for a dollar with which to hire extra help. No District Attorney can show a better record than this.

Mr. Baker was a victim of circumstances which he or no one else could control. Mr. Baker is an honorable, upright and moral man and his defeat is a great misfortune. Mr. Baker will leave the office of District Attorney with the consciousness that he has done his work well, that he has been faithful to his duties and that he has nothing in his record but what is honorable and to which he and his friends can point with pride.

NO ONE seems to be at all concerned over what we will do with our one living ex-president after March 4. A few years ago the subject was agitated to a considerable extent. With President Roosevelt so many avenues are open that he will not be permitted to subside into innoxious desuetude. New York State needs him or his equal in the Senate; he seeks the experiences of a year's sojourn among the natives and the beasts of Africa; as associate editor of The Outlook he has a wide field of usefulness, and as a contributor to Scribners his writings will be read by nature lovers and nature fakirs alike; a call to the presidency of Harvard college to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of President Elliott to take effect May, 1909, has been or will be tendered our president. In fact he is a man of so many parts, so much intellectual attainment, such broadness and such impartial discernment that he may take his choice from the highest walk in life in any profession.

IT NOW transpires that in the event of Governor Hughes non-election that he was slated for the United States Senate to succeed Hon. T. C. Platt, and it is again reported that for the desiring he may have a position on the United States Supreme bench. In the former position his unsurpassed talents would find ample vent as a representative of the Empire State, but while men of his calibre and ability are the ones most desirable on the Supreme bench, it would appear that such a statesman should be spared to active political life, which, in the event of his elevation to the bench, he must necessarily forego. Governor Hughes is far and beyond the reformer class. He is in the forefront of practical, sane, adherence to the provisions of the Constitution, and an undisputable advocate of the making of wise laws and then enforcing them. His re-election to the governorship was a simple tribute to his honesty, his fearlessness and his ability, as recognized by a majority of over 71,000 of his constituents.

Rumor Denied.

A rumor has been circulated to the effect that on January 1, 1909, a co-partnership will be formed between County Judge M. S. Stowell and District Attorney W. B. Baker. Both principals have absolutely denied that any such matter has been considered by them.

It is expected that both attorneys will take up the practice of their profession after their terms of office expire.

Assembly-Elect Frank L. Smith.

Mr. Frank L. Absurd Stage Business.

Theatrical production is full of absurdities in business. A situation is required, a situation is thrown in. It makes not the slightest difference if it be a trolley car crew of song and dance brothers manning a yacht in the desert of Sahara. You have the trolley crew and the yacht, and if the scene happens to be a section of the arid west where typhoons take the place of waterspouts—well, so much the worse for the scene. And if the conductors collect fares from the sailors to carry out the business of the song, "We Are Jolly, Jolly Street Car Men," the audience must be prepared to submit calmly to a sandstorm immediately following, which is necessary to bring on the wind machine and stereopticon. When a comic opera (heaven save the mark!) opened at Madison Square roof with Japanese costumes, Broadway dialogue, a Martian setting and Irish comedy there were absurdities enough to delight a dozen stage directors.—Henry E. Warner in Bohemian Magazine.

He Couldn't See the Joke.

"The mother-in-law joke isn't half as funny to me as it was when I was a bachelor," said a young New Yorker to his old chum. "I've got a pretty good mother-in-law myself, and she's visiting us now. That's all right too. But here's my grouch:

"Whenever we go out in a bunch, as we generally do, ma grabs the baby every time we sit down—subway, elevated, bridge, surface or ferryboat. Just grabs the kid, you know, as if it was her private property; exhibits it in a way to everybody near by, tells the woman next to her all about how to raise children and what she's doing for this particular one; attracts general attention, you see, with my baby as a star performer and my wife and I sitting there without a chance to say a word and looking as if we wanted to apologize for being on earth."

"Don't think that's funny, eh?" said his friend. "How your sense of humor has shrunk!"—New York Globe.

Running For the Car.

If you feel like emulating Sherlock Holmes try your luck occasionally when you see some one run for a street car. It's a good, easy way to determine the previous training and the present occupation of the subject.

You will see one fellow dash easily toward the car with a long, swinging stride that usually means athletics, but no special training in the sprint. The old time college runner can be picked out by the way he throws his knees in front, like a high bred trotter.

Some waddle, and you must relegate them to the general category of "busy business men" whose duty to the desk has robbed them of wind and waist. Others are getting more than their share of avoirdupois, but in spite of that manage to show you that they are not out of it by any means. To that type it is a veritable triumph to overhaul a moving car and to swing on without the assistance of the conductor.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Joys of Life in Africa.

You must never walk barefoot on the floor, no matter how clean it is, or an odious worm called a jigger will enter your foot to raise a numerous family and a painful swelling. On the other hand, be sure when you put on boots or shoes that, however hurried, you turn them upside down and look inside lest a scorpion, a small snake or a perfectly frightful kind of centiped may be lying in ambush. Never throw your clothes carelessly upon the ground, but put them away at once in a tin box and shut it tight or a perfect colony of fierce biting creatures will beset them. And, above all, quinine!—Winston Churchill, M. P., in London Strand.

Self Disgraced.

In Boston, as every one knows, the symphony concerts are viewed in the light of sacred ceremonials. In this connection the story is told of two little girls of a certain family who returned from the music hall "in a state of mind." One of them carried an expression of deep scorn, the other an air of great dejection.

"What is the matter, girls?" asked some member of the household. "Was the concert fine?"

"The concert was all right," responded Eleanor. "The trouble was with Mary. She disgraced herself."

"Disgraced herself?"

"Yes; she sneezed in the middle of the symphony."—Philadelphia Ledger.

How Needles Are Made.

Needles are all made by machinery. The piece of mechanism by which the needle is manufactured takes the rough steel wire, cuts it into proper lengths, files the point, flattens the head, pierces the eye, then sharpens the tiny instrument and gives it that polish familiar to the purchaser. There is also a machine by which needles are counted and placed in the papers in which they are sold, these being afterward folded by the same contrivance.

It Was All Within.

A practical joker carried an onion in his pocket to the depot when bidding farewell to a young lady and took a bite now and then to induce tears. Before the train departed he had eaten the entire onion. The young lady, perceiving the situation, remarked. "Ah, you have swallowed your grief!"—Harper's Weekly.

Men of Yesterday and Today.

In our great-grandfather's young days a man was usually not only considered, but really was, elderly at forty, old at fifty and a gouty, flannel swathed wreck at sixty. — London Throne and Country.

Avarice is the vice of declining years. —Bancroft.

Election Aftermath.

The Prohibition vote in Oswego county fell below that of a year ago by about three hundred.

It is reported that Judge-elect Louis C. Rowe will not appoint a Court Crier upon his accession to office.

The friends of H. S. Lavere are urging his appointment to the position of Court Stenographer, a position now held by Attorney H. M. Stacey.

It is stated upon excellent authority that the Pope cabled his congratulations to W. H. Taft upon his election to the presidency.

"Fingy" Connors, Democratic State Chairman, is alleged to have lost $40,000 by placing bets upon Chanler for governor, so certain was he of his candidate's success at the polls.

Louis Stuyvesant Chanler takes his defeat in philosophical manner, and during the remainder of the month he will be sitting upon the Board of Supervisors of Dutchess county.

The first statement of election expenses was filed by Secretary of State John S. Whalen. He expended $2,705, of which $1,550 was contributed to the State Committee.

Charles W. Taft and his cousin William H., seemed to be rather popular boys in Oswego county on Nov. 3.

How would it do to run William J. Bryan just once more—on a Memorial ticket?

That "Democratic landslide" certainly went Taftward.

That Oswego city plurality of 13 for Bryan must have been a hoodoo.

Raymond Cooper, candidate for the office of School Commissioner in the Third district on the Prohibition ticket, filed the first statement of expenses in the County Clerk's office. He gave $10 to George D. Harger, one dollar to the State Committee and spent two cents for a postage stamp.

Vice President-elect Sherman has forwarded to Albany, for filing with the Secretary of State, a statement of his expenses in the campaign just closed as follows:—Contribution to Oneida County Republican Committee, $750; contribution to Republican State Committee, $500; contribution to Republican National Committee, $50; to Harry E. Devendorf, private secretary from time to time, for postage, telegrams, printing, stationary, pictures, frames, traveling expenses, expressage and other incidentals, $600; traveling expenses, including railroad fare, Pullman accommodations, porters' fees, carriage hire, hotel bills, etc. $90. Total $2,800.

Owing to the closeness of the election so far as the county judgeship and sheriff were concerned, County Clerk Simpson was confronted on Wednesday morning with a battery of attorneys representing candidates, demanding to see the tally sheets of the several towns in the county. Mr. Simpson very properly, in the face of a probable contest, refused to permit either or any side to inspect the sheets much to the disgust of the candidates and their attorneys. Charles W. Taft was represented by Attorney S. C. Huntington; L. C. Rowe and D. P. Morehouse appeared personally and Harry M. Stacey represented Mr. Baker.

Congressman-elect Charles L. Knapp has the proud satisfaction of having run ahead of his ticket in his home county, Lewis. Mr. Knapp's total vote in this Congressional district was 25,783 and his plurality was 10,046.

Special County Judge-elect Fanning made a stupendous run last Tuesday and his majority was certainly a most flatteringly unmistakable one. Mr. Fanning's metropolitan experience peculiarly fits him for the office.

Mr. Freelon J. Davis found that being Judge Stowell's cousin was no handicap in his race for the District Attorneyship, and that his ability as an attorney was fittingly recognized. Mr. Davis will keep his law offices in Pulaski, it is reported, but he will in no instance neglect his duty to the county. His majority was certainly a magnificent one.

William B. Baker is stronger in Oswego county to-day than he was a week ago, and as time goes on, and more and more the electors become wise to the truth as regards him and the lies that were circulated regarding him, and which defeated him, the more justice will be done him. Mr. Baker is too much of a man, too keen a lawyer and too good a Republican, not to come into his merited share of confidence and esteem on the part of the electors. He cannot be retarded in his growth for long.

District Attorney-elect Freelon J. Davis announces that he will not appoint an assistant District Attorney until Jan. 1. The many friends of Attorney D. A. Colony, who has proven an able assistant to District Attorney Baker, are urging his re-appointment to the position.

Assemblyman-elect F. L. Smith spent $198.12 in the campaign. He contributed $100 to the Republican County Committee and the remainder was for incidentals.

The report of Chief of Police Ross for October shows twenty-nine arrests during that period for public intoxication, and the remainder were for other offenses and misdemeanors. Coroner Marsh was busy on Monday examining witnesses in the Bolt murder case, but nothing important was discovered and the case is being closed up. "Cash" Papworth Honored.

Mr. C. H. Papworth, known throughout the Empire State as "Cash" Papworth, is a prime favorite with his store managers, and the following item attests to the esteem in which he is held:

A surprise party with a supper fit for the "gods" was given C. H. Papworth by his store managers and other employees at the Jefferson, Thursday. The chief speaker, Lamont Stillwell, in his address spoke of the marvellous growth of the business in Mr. Papworth's 32 stores. Mr. Papworth was presented with a handsome inkstand, the employees hoping that he would find good use for it in his "million dollar office."

Mr. Aaron Miers, the diplomat, manager of the Cash Papworth Premium Co., was next to speak. He said he felt guilty for having allured Mr. Papworth from the bosom of his family by telling him a fake yarn about meeting an important man in town on business. Mr. Papworth, thinking there was 'cash' in it came, but he was 'stung.' However, he took it in good part and 'faced the music' like a man. After a few other remarks Mr. Miers begged Mr Papworth to pardon him for the joke played, this being granted.

Mr. A. V. Pullum, the Englishman, Mr. Papworth's private secretary, then spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Papworth as a genial employer. He said the secret of Mr. Papworth's success laid in his indefatigable energy, his continuity of effort, and his sterling principles as an honorable business man and a man whose word could be relied upon. He said he was always "Johnny on the spot" from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., unless it was when he took his vacation, which he did recently "deer shooting."

Mr. Pullum spoke to the managers in particular, and laid special emphasis on that glorious word in the English dictionary—"appreciation"—so often used but so seldom thoroughly understood. Just put yourselves in a driver's place or that of a canvasser. Can you realize how they appreciate appreciation? Appreciation is one of the finest traits a man can possess. Appreciation inspires one and "nothing succeeds like success." "Cash" Papworth appreciates meeting us all here this evening. I can assure you, from my close daily acquaintance with Mr. Papworth, that he appreciates the earnest efforts of his employees and is not backward in rewarding them accordingly. He, being a self-made man, knows what a little appreciation and a word of encouragement for one's efforts mean. One ounce of it is worth a ton of hot air! What Mr. Papworth wants is producers I personally am not a producer, but surely a useful man to have near at hand in case of an emergency.

In conclusion I might say apparently Mr. Papworth is as successful at deer shooting as he is at the grocery business as he and his party managed to bring home five deer only last Monday. Mr. Pullum said he believes in the old addage "The more you say the less people remember," so he sat down, trusting what he had said would soak in.

Mr. W. T. Rooney, otherwise known as "Bill", spoke next and said he was allowed only five minutes but he couldn't say much about five minutes, neither could he say much in five minutes. However, he made a very humorous brief speech and then he sat down. (Someone said, "Wipe off your chin.")

Mr. Lewis Lighton said he was delighted at the increase of Mr. Papworth's business as he knew it meant more fire insurance for him,

HARRY PAYNE WHITNEY.

HARRY P. WHITNEY, who was a conspicuous figure at the recent Vanderbilt cup race on Long Island, is one of the young multi-millionaires who get much sport out of automobiling. He had entered a car in the cup race, but its steering gear broke on the way to the track, and thus the machine was prevented from starting.

Mr. Whitney is a son of the late William C. Whitney, who was secretary of the navy under President Cleveland and one of the best known men in the latter's cabinet. Young Whitney was graduated from Yale university with high honors for scholarship in the class of 1894. He was considered one of the most brilliant men in his class and received the popular vote for the "brightest man in '94." Upon graduation from Yale he entered the Columbia Law school, but did not finish the course. After a tour of India, whither he went to shoot tigers and where he was the guest of the viceroy, Mr. Whitney returned to New York and became associated with his father in the development of his large financial operations. He is a keen sportsman, one of the cleverest polo players in the country and takes an active interest in racing stables and stock farms as well as automobiling. He is also a well known yachtsman and has owned racing craft of several classes since his graduation from college. Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney was Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt.

Miss Mary L. Burton, the sponsor at the launching of the North Dakota on Nov. 16, is a leader in the younger set of society in Fargo, N. D., and a type of the enterprising, aspiring women who have been so largely responsible for the progress made by the states of the northwest in industry, education and advanced ideas generally. The battleship North Dakota is of the Delaware class, being of 20,000 tons and 510 feet in length. She has ten twelve-inch guns and an armament which makes her one of the most formidable vessels yet constructed. Miss Burton was designated as sponsor for the namesake of the state by Governor Burke.

Isaac Guggenheim, whose name has figured in the proceedings connected with the trial of Charles W. Morse, the ice trust magnate, is a member of a family which has acquired fame in a number of widely separated fields. The founder of the house, Meyer Guggenheim, came to this country from Switzerland over sixty years ago and settled in Philadelphia, where seven sons were born to him—Isaac, Daniel, Murray, Solomon, Benjamin, Simon and William. The brothers do business now under the firm name of M. Guggenheim's Sons. Simon is United States senator from Colorado. The brothers control very extensive industrial interests, among them the American Smelting and Refining company, commonly known as the smelter trust. Isaac Guggenheim is treasurer of this corporation. He is also president of the Mexican Union railroad, managing director of the Guggenheim Exploration company, director of the American Smelters' Steamship company and in the directorate of a number of banking corporations.

ISAAC GUGGENHEIM.

At the Morse trial Mr. Guggenheim's name came up in connection with the pools formed by Mr. Morse for making profits out of transactions in ice trust stock. Mr. Guggenheim was in some of these pools. He referred facetiously in his testimony to some of the deals, saying that Morse had told him in answer to a demand for information as to why the second pool had not been successful that James H. Keene, the sportsman, had handled it which accounted for its failure.

One of the romances of the stay of the American fleet in Japanese waters was the marriage of L. Calvin Bertolette, lieutenant commander of the battleship Vermont, to Miss Lucille Meigs of San Francisco. The groom, who is scheduled for early promotion to the rank of commander, cabled his father at Wilmington, Del., informing him that he had taken a wife. The wedding ceremony, which was performed in the United States consulate in Yokohama by Consulate Chaplain Evans, was the result of a romance that began in San Francisco when the fleet stopped there a few months ago. Lieutenant Commander Bertolette then formed the acquaintance of Miss Meigs, and the engagement was announced, the wedding being arranged to take place upon the return of the fleet from the trip around the world. It afterward was arranged that Miss Meigs should go to Yokohama in time to meet the fleet there, so that the ceremony could be performed at that time. She sailed from San Francisco in September in the steamship Korea.

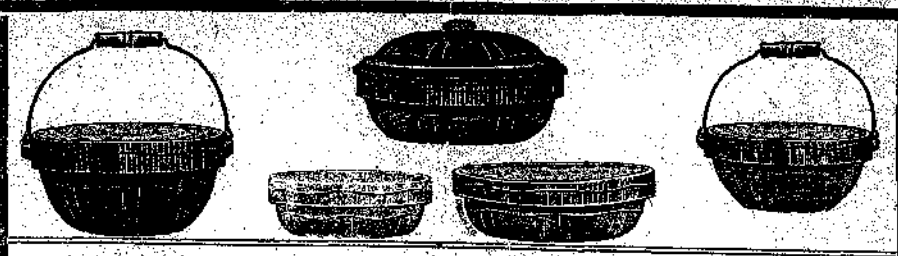
The action of the Aero Club of Paris in getting up a dinner in honor of Wilbur Wright and in deciding on the presentation to him of the club's 1908 medal mark the acknowledgment by foreign navigators of the air that Mr. Wright stands foremost among them. His achievements have won honors which he is bashful at receiving, for the social attentions which go with prominence in the field of aeronautics abroad are not exactly to his liking. He has been accustomed to live in very simple fashion and put up without many things which people often consider the necessities of existence. While making their experiments the Wright brothers have had to manage as they could in order to live and go on with their study of air navigation. Their success and the orders they have received for aeroplanes place them beyond the necessity of undergoing the hardships they have cheerfully met in the past. But success has not turned their heads or animated them with a desire to shine in the social world. While Wilbur Wright upholds the interests of the family abroad, Orville Wright takes care of the home affairs. He is now slowly recovering from the injuries he received in the accident to his aeroplane during the army tests at Fort Myer, Va., but it is found that in consequence of that accident and the breaking of a thigh one of his legs will always be shorter than the other.



Orville Wright is looking forward to the return of his brother from abroad this winter. It had been thought that Wilbur Wright would go to Italy when his contract in France was completed, but in view of the accident to his brother he probably will return to this country.

It may be that Wilbur will complete the aeroplane contract for this government in place of Orville. If this is done it will be in the interest of time. It will depend, however, on whether the brothers carry out a plan they have had in mind of getting a place in the south where experiments can be carried on the year round. It is possible they may select Terns or Florida.

"Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

An Interesting Book.

A French marquise whose country house is crowded with guests during the hunting season hit upon the original idea of placing a register at the disposal of her visitors in which to record their desires and criticisms. The pages of the richly bound book soon began to be covered with notes such as:

"Count de R. still owes 25 louis. He knows to whom."

"The green peas yesterday were burned."

"Baroness M. flirts—unfortunately not with me."

The marquise has withdrawn the register.

Two Great Orators.

As an orator Demosthenes was head and shoulders above Cicero the Roman. The great Athenian stands in a class all by himself, if we are to believe the consensus of learned opinion. Cicero, it is said, prided himself on his faculty of extemporizing at need, but probably trusted little to it on great occasions, while with Demosthenes it was the rule never to speak without the most careful preparation. The speeches of both were spoken without manuscript. They would never have made the reputation they did if they had been tied down to their notes.—New York American.

Able to Hear It.

Joseph Medill of the Chicago Tribune was somewhat deaf, although his ability at times to hear what was said in an ordinary tone of voice was frequently remarked. It is related of him that he dropped into the business department of the office one day to make an inquiry about something that had occurred to him, and a young man who had been in his employ only a few months undertook in a loud tone of voice to enlighten him.

"What did you say?" asked Mr. Medill, putting his hand to his ear.

The young man repeated the question in a still louder voice.

"I can't hear you," said the editor.

"Oh, chase yourself around the block, you old granny!" muttered the impatient employee just above his breath.

"I am not an old granny," said Mr. Medill, turning away, "and I shall not chase myself around the block."

The fresh young man made immediate arrangements to say goodby to his job, but the great editor probably thought that the lesson he had received was sufficient and did not disturb him.

A Famous London Tavern.

The Mermaid was the name of a famous London tavern frequented by noted literary men and actors during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. All the wit and talent of the time assembled there for convivial enjoyment. Authors have made it the scene of great mind combats between such men as Shakespeare, Ben Johnson, Beaumont, Fletcher, Selden, Carew, Donne and others of reverential memory. It was the gathering place of the celebrated Mermaid club, the origin of which is ascribed to Sir Walter Raleigh. The Mermaid tavern was located in Bread street and was handily reached from three thoroughfares, so that it has been often referred to in various ways. The Mermaid in Bread street, the Mermaid in Friday street and the Mermaid in Cheap street were, however, all one and the same. It was the nearest to Bread street. The Mermaid was destroyed in the great London fire. There were other Mermaid taverns, one in Cheapside and another in Cornhill, but they had no such associations as clung to that of Bread street.

When the Sun Grows Cold.

Dr. Fridjof Nansen predicts the fate of the earth in the far distant future, when the sun grows cold. The simple, low organisms, he says, will probably live longest, until even they disappear. Finally, he says, all water on the earth's surface will freeze and the oceans will be transformed into ice to the bottom. Some time later the carbonic acid of the atmosphere will begin to fall on the surface of the earth in the form of snow. Some time after that the temperature on the surface will have reached about 330 degrees below zero F. New oceans will then be formed by the atmosphere being turned into liquid, and the atmosphere of that future earth will be only hydrogen and helium. The sun will go through the same process. It will continue in its way as a dark star through space, accompanied by the planets.

The Field of Politics

Chanler as a Campaigner—Eugene V. Debs and the Socialist System of Winning Votes.

Samuel Gompers and His Long Labor Record—Other Figures in the Political Battle.

LEWIS S. CHANLER.

It was indeed a whirlwind tour that Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler made as Democratic candidate for governor of New York in the closing days of the campaign. And no less arduous and energetic was the tour of his Republican opponent, Charles E. Hughes. The two men passed and repassed each other on the railroads, put up sometimes at the same hotel and on several occasions their itineraries coincided so closely that, without any intention of so doing, they found themselves holding rival meetings in smaller towns of the state at the same time. Automobiles were pressed into service by both candidates in covering country as well as city districts, and in this way both were able to fill a great many speaking engagements in the course of a day's campaign labors. While the two candidates conducted so vigorous a canvass, both were careful to avoid personalities and to treat each other with unfailing courtesy.

The campaign of two years ago, which resulted in the election of Mr. Hughes, the head of the Republican ticket, for governor and of the Democratic candidates for the other state offices, placed Mr. Chanler and Mr. Hughes in peculiar relations. As lieutenant governor Mr. Chanler has often been called on to appear with Mr. Hughes at public functions or to consider public matters with him as a member of the state government. One of these occasions was when, just at the outset of the campaign, Governor Hughes and Lieutenant Governor Chanler met at a state fair and spoke from the same platform on nonpolitical subjects. Under such circumstances it would be difficult for some men not to permit political differences to affect their personal relations and their conduct toward each other in public.

Mr. Chanler is an effective speaker and a good campaigner, and he has a splendid physique, which enables him to undergo prolonged strain without incurring great fatigue.

Thomas D. Long, Democratic nominee for governor in Montana, is a lawyer and was born in Columbus, Ind., Oct. 10, 1867. He was chosen assistant attorney general of the state of Montana seven years ago. The Democrats carried the last state election in Montana, when J. K. Toole was re-elected governor. He was the first governor and has been honored with several re-elections.

THOMAS D. LONG.

Eugene V. Debs, who has made a remarkable campaign as the Socialist candidate for president, attracting more attention for the principles he represents than they ever before received in this country, claims that Abraham Lincoln would have stood for the same things that socialism does if he had lived at this time. In the course of his canvass he paid a visit to Lincoln's tomb at Springfield, Ill. Standing by the sarcophagus of the martyr president he delivered a eulogy upon him, saying among other things:

"Slave power, which loathed and despised Lincoln, was no more heartless than the power of capitalism, which today holds the workingmen of the nation in bondage."

Debs and his associates lay great stress on "the slavery of today," as they term it, and they find arguments on this subject particularly effective among the colored voters. The Socialists count on gaining recruits from the Democratic party among the laboring men and from the Republican party among the colored voters.

The Socialists, headed by Debs, have a vast army of speakers, paid and unpaid, and these men appear on street corners in the large cities during the state and national campaigns, outlining the party principles and selling the publications in which the party's recommendations are described. Of course a radical party like the Socialists has active opponents, and at meetings when these opponents are present the speakers set aside a period in which questions may be asked. Sometimes a quick witted Socialist is able to make the questioners appear ridiculous, and it is seldom that a meeting of this description terminates without a disturbance of more or less importance.

The size of the socialistic vote in this country is rapidly increasing, and this fact is the more noteworthy because the party's organization is by no means complete. Debs proudly states that his party is a volunteer party, making material progress without office or patronage. The paid workers of other parties have no counterpart in the district organizations of the Socialists, and this fact is one that causes most worry to the Democratic and Republican leaders. They realize that a party popular enough to attract hundreds of volunteer workers is certain to become a national factor, worthy of serious consideration, if, indeed, the Socialist party has not already become such.

EUGENE V. DEBS.

Samuel Gompers has had plenty of publicity in the campaign of 1908 on account of the controversy over the position taken by him in the support of the Democratic national ticket. As president of the American Federation of Labor Mr. Gompers is always a busy man, but because of the active part he has taken in politics this year his duties have been exceptionally many and laborious. For several years he won re-election as head of the American Federation of Labor after contests which threatened the continuance of his power. The next meeting of the federation occasions especial interest on account of the controversies expected to arise over the question of indorsement of President Gompers' course in the campaign.

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

It is twenty-six years since Mr. Gompers was first chosen president of the Federation of Labor, and every year since, with one exception, 1894, he has been re-elected. Under his direction the order has increased in numbers until it is now 2,000,000 strong and is accounted the most influential body of organized wage earners in the world. Mr Gompers was born in London in 1850 and for forty years and more has been identified with union labor. Many a time he could have had positions which would have paid him a larger salary than that which he receives as president of the American Federation of Labor, but his sympathy with the cause of labor prevented him from accepting them. He is a poor man, is proud of it and expects to die poor. He has no ambition to make money and chooses rather to devote his energies to uplifting his fellow workers and leaving them as a class when he dies better off than they would have been but for his having lived.

The political contest in Rhode Island has excited interest this year on account of the value to both national tickets of the electoral votes of the commonwealth and the complications caused by local issues. The Republicans nominated for governor Aram J. Pothier of Woonsocket and the Democrats Olney Arnold of Providence. The Democrats made much in their campaign of the charge that the influence in Republican councils of the blind leader, C. R. Brayton, was still potent. Constitutional amendment has been one of the issues in Rhode Island.

The Modesty of Women

naturally makes them shrink from the indelicate questions, the obnoxious examinations, and unpleasant local treatments, which some physicians consider essential in the treatment of diseases of women. Yet, if help can be had, it is better to submit to this ordeal than let the disease grow and spread. The trouble is that so often the woman undergoes all the annoyance and shame for nothing. Thousands of women who have been cured by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription write in appreciation of the cure which dispenses with the examinations and local treatments. There is no other medicine so sure and safe for delicate women as "Favorite Prescription." It cures debilitating drains, irregularity and female weakness. It always helps. It almost always cures. It is strictly non-alcoholic, non-secret, all its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper; contains no deleterious or habit-forming drugs, and every native medicinal root entering into its composition has the full endorsement of those most eminent in the several schools of medical practice. Some of those numerous and strongest of professional endorsements of its ingredients, will be found in a pamphlet wrapped around the bottle, also in a booklet mailed free on request, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y. These professional endorsements should have far more weight than any amount of the ordinary lay, or non-professional testimonials.

The most intelligent women now-a-days insist on knowing what they take as medicine instead of opening their mouths like a lot of young birds and gulping down whatever is offered them. "Favorite Prescription" is of KNOWN COMPOSITION. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 21 one-cent stamps for paper-covered, or 31 stamps for cloth-bound.

Educated.

Mrs. S. was in a Richmond hospital, and she was lonely, so welcomed the advent of a very black and very languid maid who came in one morning to wipe up the floor. Some one new to talk to, so no time was lost.

"I have not seen you working around here before. Aren't you a new girl?"

Edmonia willingly let the cloth slip back into the bucket and sat flat upon the floor before answering.

"Yas'm, I's new. I's jest washin' up de floor. But I don't work. I's edjikated."

"And where were you educated?" was the next question.

"In a seminary." Then, with a burst of confidence: "There was me an' another girl workin' in a house. She was cook, an' I was chambermaid, an' we had great times about who would git de prize, but I beat." Then, after a pause, "She was easy to beat, 'cause she got smothered to death with gas de night before de 'zaminations come off."—Cleveland Leader.

A Pair of Poets.

Hearing a noise in the street before his house one morning, Robert Browning, the poet, went to his window and saw a great crowd gazing at some Chinamen in gorgeous costumes who were just leaving their carriages to mount his steps. Presently they were announced as the Chinese minister at the court of St. James and his suit. A solemn presentation having taken place, Browning said to the interpreter, "May I ask to what I am indebted for the honor of his excellency's visit?" The interpreter replied, "His excellency is a poet in his own country." Thereupon the two poets shook hands heartily. Browning then said, "May I ask to what branch of poetry his excellency devotes himself?" To which the interpreter answered, "His excellency devotes himself to poetical enigmas." At this Browning, recognizing fully the comic element in the situation, extended his hand most cordially, saying: "His excellency is twice welcome. He is a brother indeed!"

Kodol contains the same digestive juices that are found in an ordinary healthy stomach, and there is, therefore, no question but what any form of stomach trouble, indigestion or nervous dyspepsia, will yield readily yet naturally to a short treatment of Kodol. Try it today on our guarantee. Take it for a little while, as that is all you will need to take. Kodol digests what you eat and makes the stomach sweet. It is sold by all druggists.

Exclusive to the Last.

An instance of exclusiveness maintained under difficulties is reported from the ladies' cabin of an Atlantic liner. All were sick except one lady and a cat, which wandered uneasily about. The lady ventured to stroke the cat, remarking, "Poor pussy." The cat was inclined to respond and elevated its tail in token of good will, when from a neighboring berth came in choking tones the words, "Excuse me, that is a private cat!"—Argonaut.

Presents For Girls—Dainty Aprons of Dotted Swiss For Coquettish Maids—How Handkerchiefs Are Utilized.

If you know a pretty girl who wishes to win the heart of an ardent admirer, make a dainty apron for her and send it for a Christmas gift. The aprons illustrated are both dainty and useful at the same time. The surplice apron is made of dotted swiss and is finished with bands and ruffles of lace. The pockets and shoulders have decorations of soft wash ribbon. White silk is used for the other model, which is trimmed with hemstitched ruffles and black velvet ribbon.

Hand embroidery adds very much to the appearance of the silk apron, and simple, effective designs that any needlewoman can carry out may be copied from newspaper patterns or done for one in the shops.

A pretty girl wearing a coquettish apron adorned with fluffy rosettes always appeals to a man's eye, and if she has a rose nestling behind her left ear so much the better, for the man immediately pictures scenes of domestic bliss, where some one he cares a great deal for will always sit beside a shaded lamp and wear dainty clothes.

Handkerchiefs, too, are made up into attractive aprons put together with embroidered beading of lace.

Really there seems to be no end to the number of ways of using handkerchiefs besides the orthodox fashion, and a new idea is to take a sheer one showing an elaborate but very fine embroidered border and work it in the center with a scattered blossom design, wild roses, perhaps, losing their petals over the surface, or tiny bunches of buttercups here and there carelessly arranged. When complete it is applied diamondwise to a square of fine cambric, the material being cut away underneath. Backed by a second piece of cambric it becomes a very dainty pillowslip either for a baby carriage or as a head rest for an invalid. A narrow beading is sewed all around the Linen Hair Receiver.

A pretty hair receiver to give a girl for Christmas is of heavy white or ecru linen. The edge is padded and scalloped and is fastened over with two buttons and buttonholes. The design is worked in the solid satin stitch. A rosette of ribbon with loop and ends finishes the receiver.

Origin of the Word "Bogus."

The word "bogus" is said by Dr. Ogilvie to be derived from Boghase, the name of a notorious American swindler who about the year 1835 flooded the western and southwestern states with counterfeit bills, sham mortgages, etc. Others connect the word with "bogy," a scarecrow or goblin, and so applied to anything fictitious or chimerical.

Lowell in the "Biglow Papers" says: "I more than suspect the word to be a corruption of the French bogasse." This bogasse was the sugar cane as delivered in its dry, crushed state from the mill, also called cane trash and fit only for burning, being synonymous with useless rubbish.

Again, according to Brewer, there is in French argot or thieves' slang a word "bogue," which signifies the rind of a green chestnut or the case of a watch, and this also brings us to the idea of an outward seeming without any solid or reputable foundation.—Kansas City Journal.

The Queerest Salad.

A gourmet as he mixed a salad of chicory said: "The world's queerest salad, and possibly its most delicious one, is eaten by the Inoits of northwest Greenland. It is a salad of undigested moss from the stomach of a fresh killed reindeer, a bitter, sharp, stimulating salad, as good for the digestion as an electrical massage. The Inoits live almost exclusively on fish; hence salads are a favorite dish with them. But no salad in their minds compares with that which they wrest from the slaughtered reindeer. They say this salad is crisper, tenderer and more appetizing than any other, and they say it wards off indigestion. They fight for it, they spend their last penny on it, quite as the Indians do with firewater."—Exchange.

Too Much For Him.

Smithson used to labor under the impression that he was a born humorist, but he has given up trying to be funny now.

He called one day on an old school friend and was shown into a room where his chum's sister was busy arranging a quantity of dried grass which she had collected.

"What a quantity of dried grass you have collected, Miss Ritchie!" he said. Then his humor burst forth. "Nice room for a donkey to get into"—

"Make yourself at home, Mr. Smithson," said the girl pleasantly.

When he arrived home all the humor was crushed out of him forever.—London Scraps.

Priority.

The wagons of "the greatest show on earth" passed up the avenue at daybreak. Their incessant rumble soon awakened ten-year-old Billie and his five-year-old brother Robert. Their mother feigned sleep as the two white-robed figures crept past her bed into the hall on the way to investigate. Robert struggled manfully with the unaccustomed task of putting on his clothes. "Wait for me, Billie," his mother heard him beg. "You'll get ahead of me."

"Get mother to help you," counseled Billie, who was having troubles of his own.

Mother started to the rescue and then paused as she heard the voice of her younger, guarded, but anxious and insistent:

"You ask her, Billie. You've known her longer than I have."—Everybody's.

Erudite.

"Oh, baby," exclaimed the Boston mother, "what does make you cry so?"

"I really cannot say," was the unexpected answer. "I have never indulged in introspection."

She said it was as warm as our warmest weather in July and that she never saw such roses in her life.

Thomas King Perine died at his home in Lysander, November 3, in his 91st year. He was a half brother of D. M. Perine of this city, and the eldest of nine boys, sons of the late Henry Perine of Ira, Cayuga Co., only three of whom are now living. He leaves three daughters and a wife, who is the sister of Frank M. Preston, clerk, now in charge of the postoffice on the west side, and a half-sister to Mrs. Martha A. Marsh, mother of Dr. Homer P. Marsh. Funeral services were held at the Lysander M. E. church last Friday.

The funeral was held from the late home on Saturday and at her express wish the body was cremated and the ashes will be brought to a former home in Minnesota for interment. The deceased was a cousin of Messrs. Gilbert of this city.

Harry Taylor, aged 24, an employe of the New York Central, and who resided in East Syracuse with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Taylor, died on Friday night in a Syracuse hospital, where he had been taken for an operation. His brother Mr. Elmer Taylor, was notified that transfusion of blood might save the young man's life, and he hastened to the hospital to offer his own blood, arriving at his brother's bedside just a few minutes prior to his death. The body was brought to the home of another brother, Marvin, on the west side, from where the funeral services were held on Monday. Besides the parents, four brothers, Elmer, Marvin, William and Murney, survive.

Misplaced Sympathy.

A sympathetic Frenchman unluckily bought an almanac that gave the dates of the world's chief events. From that day on he lived a life of mourning. Thus on April 30 he had crape on his hat.

"Have you lost a relative?" a friend asked. "Not exactly," said he. "But today is a sad anniversary for the French people. On April 30, 1524, the Chevalier Bayard died." On May 2 he had crape on again. "Still mourning Bayard?" said the friend. "No," said he, "but don't you remember that on May 2 a great and charming poet, Alfred de Musset, breathed his last?" On the 6th of the same month, "Whom are you mourning for now?" "For an honest man, General Cavlagnac." On the 30th, crying terribly, he said: "Ah, Joan of Arc! On this date, in 1431, a handful of Englishmen and a miserable bishop put the gallant maid to death." On July 13 he took a bath in memory of the assassination of Marat. On the 16th Beranger's death gave him a fatal shock. On the 18th, having read of Napoleon's departure to St. Helena, he felt better, but on the 23d the bombardment of Dieppe by the English, in 1694, confined him again to his bed. He was taken with a fever and died on the 22d, muttering, "In a month the massacre of St. Bartholomew!"—New York Sun.

Eloquence of the Welsh.

Here is a little story of an Englishman in Wales: "On the comparative qualities of the English and Welsh tongues let me tell of the Welshman who saluted me in the Welsh. I was compelled to confess ignorance. 'Ah,' he said, turning fluently enough to English, 'you should learn the Welsh! My wife was English, and she can speak conversations now quite well.'

"I acknowledged my shortcomings and admitted that I had always understood the Welsh to be a remarkably eloquent tongue. 'Yes, yes, it iss so,' said the native. 'In Welsh a man can express exactly what he means. As for the English, I call it not a language at all—only a dialect.

"'You haf noted that an Englishman or a foreigner in speaking his language waves his hands and arms about to help out the meaning of the words, but a Welshman who can speak Welsh well he haas no need to move his hands. In the Welsh he can say all that he means.'"—Chicago News.

Fife Wheat.

Years ago, about a century, David Fife, a Scotchman of Otonabee, Ont., sent to a friend in Glasgow for a small bag of seed wheat to try in a cleared patch of the backwoods. The friend obtained some seed from a vessel just in from Danzig. Unfortunately it was a fall wheat and reached David Fife in the spring. Nevertheless David Fife sowed it in spring. One can guess how feverishly the backwoods farmer watched for the growth of his experiment. Only three wheat heads survived till the fall, but those three wheat heads were entirely free of the rust that had ruined his neighbor's crops, and those three heads really represented a new variety of wheat, a fall wheat turned into a spring wheat. David Fife treasured the three heads and planted them in spring. Such was the beginning of Fife wheat in America.—Agnes C. Laut in Outing Magazine.

Vanity of the Peacock.

Our favorite and much petted peacock, says a correspondent of the London Spectator, can be kept happy any length of time looking at his reflection in the window pane or in a looking glass. He comes in daily to tea, making no mistake about the hour, and spends much time en route in gazing at himself as he appears in the glass of the French windows by which he enters the room. If I am sewing and do not speak to him when he comes into the room, he will gently put his head quite close, almost touching my ring or needle, for he likes bright things, till I have to give up working and talk to him as with a small child whom one is afraid of pricking.

Lost Charm of the Wayside Inn.

The inns of England, celebrated by Harrison and famous far and wide at the beginning of the last century, have degenerated into sad places which we visit only of necessity. Little did Stephenson think when he proposed the line from Manchester to Liverpool that he would ruin the wayside inns of England and kill the art of cookery. —Blackwood's Magazine.

A Reassuring Truth.

A lady on one of the ocean liners who seemed very much afraid of icebergs asked the captain what would happen in case of a collision.

The captain replied, "The iceberg would move right along, madam, just as if nothing had happened." And the old lady seemed greatly relieved.—Success.

"But suppose you're always worried for fear you ain't goin' to get anything to eat?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Couldn't Scream.

SUPERB RECITAL.

Wednesday evening of last week will be long remembered by the music lovers of Fulton, nearly three hundred of whom heard Miss Ethel Newcomb, pianist, and Mr. Everard Calthrop, tenor, in a recital given under the auspices of the Schumann Club at the Presbyterian Church.

No entertainment of higher musical merit has ever been given in this city, and the enthusiastic reception accorded to these artists indicated not only the recognition of the musical genius of Miss Newcomb and Mr. Calthrop, but revealed the appreciation of music's high art by a large number of our citizens.

The program was enriched by the introduction of the works of classical writers, such as Rameau, Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, Liszt and others of note. It is difficult to attempt an adequate appreciation of the art of Miss Newcomb of whom Richard Strauss has said, "At last a woman who can play." Years of training in Vienna under the tutelage of her famous teacher, Leschetizky, have served to bring her technique to a marvel of perfection. The clearness and delicacy which she used in interpreting the Chopin and Liszt numbers, and the singing qualities of tone revealed in the rendition of the Schubert 'Impromptu' were abundant proofs of her art, while the power displayed in the 'Sonata Appassionata' of Beethoven made it a conspicuous number of the programme. In all of her work Miss Newcomb displayed a fine appreciation and the resulting interpretation made the classical programme of unusual interest to all who heard her.

Mr. Calthrop was well received by the audience, and his numbers were heartily applauded. His voice was of pleasing quality and the manner of his singing was truly artistic.

The zeal on the part of the Schumann Club to bring a musical entertainment of such merit to our city is warmly appreciated by our citizens, and the members of that organization are to be congratulated on the success of the recital and to be gratefully commended by all who love good music.

PREACHER A MEMBER OF LABOR UNION.

"The Church and Our Industrial Problem" is the topic to be discussed by Rev. Charles Stelzle before a men's mass meeting in the Presbyterian church next Wednesday evening, Nov. 25, at eight o'clock.

Mr. Stelzle has the view point of both the laboring man and the minister and can speak with authority on matters that are of vital interest to men in their relation to the church. Mr. Stelzle's wide experience among men has fitted him to discuss this interesting theme in a manner that must appeal to earnest thinking men. He thinks that the church is for all and that all men should be in the church and what he has to say deserves a hearing.

Mr. Stelzle is in great demand all over the country as a speaker on this special topic.

The official members of the various churches are to meet Mr. Stelzle at an informal lunch to be served in the dining rooms of the church at 6:30 o'clock. After briefly addressing these men, Mr. Stelzle will then address the mass meeting in the auditorium at 8 o'clock. An offering will be taken to cover the expenses of the meeting.

Men's Mass Meeting.

There will be a Mass Meeting for men at the Presbyterian church Wednesday evening, Nov. 25, at eight o'clock. This meeting will be addressed by Charles Stelzle on the theme, "The Church and the Industrial Problem." Men are cordially invited.

FINE RECITAL.

Miss Louise Hinds, an intimate friend of Miss Daisy Lounsberry, instructor in elocution, Fulton High School, will give an entertainment in the Assembly Room of the Public Library on Tuesday evening, Nov. 24, assisted by local talent. The press speaks very highly of Miss Hinds as a recitationist and story teller and an evening of enjoyment may confidently be expected by all who attend. Dr. Edmund Grindall Rawson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Richfield Springs, says of Miss Hinds' ability:

"Miss Hinds is far and away the best recitationist and story teller that I have ever listened to. She has an excellent voice and manner coupled with the best of training that Boston could give and withal is perfectly natural. Her work is not the least bit overdone or stagy—a fault which destroys the pleasure in many another otherwise good elocutionist."

Maud Ballington Booth—The "Little Mother" of the Prisons.

Mrs. Booth is to give her lecture "Lights and Shadows of Prison Life" at one of the churches in this city next month, as the second number of the Public Library Entertainment Course.

Mrs. Booth's life work is among prisoners, and she has been rightfully called "the most beloved woman in the land." She is a mite of a woman. "Little Mother" is her name among convicts and ex-convicts from Maine to California, and she calls them all "My Boys."

In addition to her message of love and good-will to all men, the following concerning her work as an orator and lecturer is interesting: "She has received the highest praise in the finest Lyceum courses in the land, and with a very few exceptions, on account of illness, has never lost a date booked by her manager. Every season the Bureau refuses enough dates to fill up the next season, and the list is always larger than she can possibly fill. Mrs. Booth commands the highest price ever paid a woman lecturer in this country, and the money thus earned goes to support her two Hope Halls, homes for paroled and discharged prisoners. This is her only reason for coming before the public, and the public has been most willing to hear her and to help her cause. She has drawn the largest audiences of any lecturer in America, and therefore deserves the largest price, judged from a purely business standpoint. Mrs. Booth's offices are in New York city; her home up in the Orange Mountains at Montclair, N. J.; where she lives with her husband, Commander Ballington Booth of the Volunteers of America. They have two children, Charles and Theodora."

STRICKEN WHILE AT WORK.

On Friday George Peterson, aged 56, superintendent of the pumping station for the American Woolen company, located on Lake Neahtawanta, was stricken with death while sitting at his desk, his pipe between his teeth and a pencil in his hand. His lifeless body was found about 11 o'clock. Coroner Marsh was called and decided death to have been the result of heart disease. He had made no complaint of feeling ill at any time. In March, his roommate, Oscar Possen, engineer at the woolen mill, was stricken the same way while engaged in his duties. The remains were taken to Oswego for burial.

THREE ITALIANS KILLED.

By the breaking of some section of the machinery connected with an immense derrick used by the Fulton Contracting company in its barge canal construction work, three Italians on Friday night near six o'clock were horribly and instantly killed. A falling boom struck them all squarely on their heads mangling and crushing them to earth. Drs. Marsh, Russell and Schiappi were called to the scene of the accident, near the Oswego Falls Pulp and Paper mill, but Coroner Marsh alone was able to render assistance to the men and that in his official capacity. The bodies were taken to Cole's undertaking rooms and the funerals of the three victims were held from the Catholic church on Monday morning.

MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

Friday night Pasquale Virtu, whose brother has charge of one of the gangs of men engaged on some of the local construction jobs, came to Fulton from Marcellus in company with four strange Sicilians. It transpires that these four men had been discharged a few days previously by Pasquale's brother and upon learning his identity they concocted a plan whereby they might increase their worldly goods and have revenge upon the innocent victim of their spite. They, under promise of taking Pasquale to his brother, led him up the river to a point about a mile south of Fulton where they set upon him, shot him in the arm, stabbed him in the neck and kicked him until he was unconscious, then rifling his pockets of money and watch, they left him to die. Pasquale revived and managed to drag himself to the home of Herbert Jacobs, a mile away, where Dr. Cusack was summoned to attend to his injuries. Chief Ross was also notified and in company with Patrolman Pare the wounded man went to the different Italian boarding places until at a place in Division street, the assailants were recognized by Pasquale and arrested, $19 and his watch being found upon them. They were brought to police headquarters and on Monday each waived bail and was held to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Right after their examination, they were re-arrested on a charge of petit larceny sworn out by A. W. Stoneburg whose clothes line had recently been rifled and the articles found in the room occupied by these fellows. Many families who had lost clothing this Fall from their clothes lines, have appeared at the City Hall and claimed their own.

The death of Lizzie C. Sanford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Sanford, occurred at the family home in Seneca street on Saturday, consumption being the cause for death. The funeral services were held from the late home on Tuesday and interment was made at Mt. Pleasant.

The sudden death of Mrs. Allan Austin in a hospital in Jersey City, following the operation from which she was apparently convalescing rapidly, was a great shock to her many friends and relatives in this vicinity. The deceased was formerly Miss Anna Gates of Volney and Mr. Nicholas Lester is an uncle. The body was brought to the home of her sister, Mrs. Abner Lamb, near Mt. Pleasant from where the funeral services will be held.

The shocking news of the death of Mabel, wife of Attorney Frederick White, which occurred as the result of apoplexy at their home in Boonville on Friday evening, brought sadness to a large circle of friends in this city where the girlhood of the deceased had been spent and where her beautiful christian character had endeared her to all who knew her. The facts of the sudden death are, that after tea on Friday evening the young wife spoke to her husband of having a severe pain in her head. He left the room to procure some simple home remedy and upon his return within a moment the deceased was unconscious and expired without rallying. The remains were brought to the home of the parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Whitaker, near this city from where the funeral services were held on Tuesday morning, the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle, a former pastor of the wife, officiating. Interment was made in Mt. Adnah. The deepest sympathy of a large circle of friends goes out to the bereaved husband and family.

The death of Dennis Snow, aged 65, occurred at the home of his nephew, Fireman George Colton, No. 803 Utica street, on Monday evening. The funeral services will be held from the late home on Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Interment will be in Mt. Adnah.

Mary Horr, aged 18, who made her home with Mr and Mrs. N. K. Smith, Broadway, was found dead in her bed on Saturday morning. She had complained of being ill for two days but her death was not expected. The body was taken to Maulins for interment. She had no surviving relatives.

Mrs. Experience Slocum McKinstry, aged 84, passed to rest on Saturday at the home of her son, Mr. E. S. McKinstry, in Academy street. The deceased was a native of Tompkins county and was united in marriage in 1846, with Mr. Erastus F. McKinstry. For 30 years she has been a devout member of Trinity church, Oswego, and she enjoyed a large acquaintance. Prayer was said on Monday morning by the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle, at the home of the son in this city and the body was taken to Oswego where the funeral services were held from the home of another son. Interment was made in Oswego. Beside the husband the immediate survivors are three sons, Butler S., of this city; Frank of Oswego and Eugene E., of Binghamton; six grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

George Dale, aged 45, died suddenly at his home about 6 miles south of Fulton on Wednesday, death being caused by acute Bright's disease. Mr. Dale was as well as usual when he went to his barn at 4 o'clock to husk some corn. An hour later Mrs. Dale went to the barn and found her husband unconscious upon the floor. Physicians were summoned but death ensued without his regaining consciousness.

At her home in West Genesee street, Wednesday, November 11, Flora A., wife of Mr Josiah Failing, aged 53 years, 2 months and 20 days. Funeral will be held at the house Saturday at 1:00 p. m., Rev. George Lyman Ford officiating. Burial will be made in Riverside cemetery. Mrs. Failing is survived by her husband and one daughter, Miss Clara Failing, one sister, Mrs. Willard Wilrith, of Johnstown, and three brothers, M. P. Brown of Syracuse, B. C. Brown of Fulton, and E B. Brown of this village. Baldwinsville Gazette.

Decides in Favor of Electric Light Company.

The State Court of Claims handed down a decision today regarding the claim of the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company for $3,000,000 against the State, growing out of the appropriating of their property for barge canal purposes.

According to the decision the company is declared to be the owner in fee of the lands appropriated by the State in connection with the barge canal construction and of such riparian rights as are still attached to the company's premises.

All other issues growing out of the claims the court leaves for future consideration, the decision dealing only with the question of title.

The Association to Prevent Corrupt Practices at Elections will at once set to work a full force, in the Secretary of State's office, to discover any inaccuracies, discrepancies, omission or failures by political committees or candidates, in reporting campaign expenditures, under the State Corrupt Practices Law. The recital given in the Presbyterian church on Wednesday evening was a pronounced artistic success and the artists, Everard Calthrop and Miss Ethel Newcomb, were greeted by a large and appreciative audience. The Schumann club under whose auspices the recital was given, is entitled to a great deal of credit and gratitude for bringing such talented musicians to Fulton.

A newspaper publisher has recently brought suit against 45 men who would not pay their subscriptions, obtaining judgment in each claim. Of these, 28 made affidavit that they never owned more than the law allowed, thus preventing attachment. Then under the decision of the Supreme Court they were arrested for petit larceny and bound over in the sum of $300 each. All but six gave bond while the sixth went to jail. The new postal law makes it larceny to take a paper and refuse to pay for it.—Kellogg's Auxilliary.

Phoenix Register: On Friday morning A. P. Merriam met with a narrow escape from death at Caughdenoy. While engaged in throwing hay to his horses he fell through the opening in the shoot which had been covered up by the hay, and in falling struck on his head and shoulders which rendered him unconscious for some time. His family and Dr. Drury were hastily summoned. After it was discovered that his injuries were not of a serious nature he was brought to his home in this village, and is able to be around again although suffering from the shock and severe bruises.

Board of Supervisors.

The Board of Supervisors organized for the regular session of the Board on Wednesday by electing Peter G. Hydorn, of Sandy Creek, as chairman, and W. W. Spencer, Jr., of Oswego, as clerk.

One of the most important moves made at the first session was the introduction of a resolution by Supervisor Beardsley, of Granby, one of the leading Republican members of the Board, providing for the appointment of a committee of five to take the necessary legislative action to make the office of Sheriff of Oswego County a salaried one. The resolution was unanimously adopted. It is proposed to introduce a bill at the coming session of the Legislature providing for a change from the present fee system, and the bill when passed and signed will take effect at the expiration of the term of Charles W. Taft. Six months notice must be given of a change from the fee to the salary system to the incoming Sheriff. It is expected that the measure will be put through at the approaching session of the Legislature, as the people of the county want a change to the salary system. It is understood that the salary will be either $2,500 or $3,000.

Supervisor Hamer, of Boylston, moved that Mr. Hydorn become chairman, and he became the unanimous choice. Mr Hydorn in accepting the honor said, in part, that he thanked the supervisors sincerely for the honor and that he would give both Republicans and Democrats a fair and square deal, and he asked for the hearty co-operation of all members of the Board.

Supervisor Cullivan moved that W. W. Spencer become clerk to the Board and his election was unanimous. Mr. Spencer said that he appreciated the action of the Board, and he would continue to discharge the duties of the office in a manner which he hoped would meet with the approval of all the members of the Board.

A CYCLONE OF FLAME

Fires In Bamboo Forests Are the Fiercest Known.

SWEEP ON A MILE A MINUTE.

Like the Roar, the Roll and the Rattle of a Great Battle Is the Noise of the Exploding Stalks That Sometimes Shoot High Into the Air.

When the forests are afire, when the smoke makes dusk at noon and reddens the harvest moon a thousand miles away, there is the measure of a conflagration. When the prairies burn, as they used to before farms had crept in upon the endless miles of grass, there was a fire which ran like mad and left behind it a blackened trail of death. If one could combine the speed of the prairie fire with the tumult of the blazing forest, that would be a fire indeed.

Such a combination is effected when the bamboo groves catch fire. The bamboo is but a grass, a grass with the height of a tree, swaying stems reaching 100, even 150, feet in air.

In Cambodia, where the bamboo groves along the rivers cover the space of forests, it is no unusual thing for fires to break out and sweep all before them for many miles. If the summer has been dry the bamboo turns sear and inflammable as any grass.

All that is needed is a spark; then ruin runs red. It is not necessary to rely upon the carelessness of the woodsman to start the blaze. The bamboo can kindle itself.

Let two swaying stalks of dry bamboo be set in motion by the breeze, let one rub across the other long enough, and the friction will set the spark, and the long dry leaves will feed the flame. It is known that many fires of the bamboo forests thus originate. Perhaps it was from observing such a sight that primitive man learned the Promethean secret. That theory has been advanced.

As soon as a flame in the bamboos has crept to the level of the tossing tips it spreads like wildfire. The wind carries a sheet of flame along the grove at tremendous speed. Some observers say that such fires have been seen to move forward at the rate of more than a mile a minute. Seen from below, it looks as if the sky had burst into an instant flash of flame.

From such a burst of fire there could be no escape. Fortunately it passes high overhead at the tops of the bamboos. It serves as a warning to the traveler who may be making his way along some one of the water courses by which the forest is intersected. The bamboo itself is almost an obstacle to travel of any sort. It is well nigh impossible to force a way through it except by the slow and toilsome labor of hewing out a path.

The fire in the great trunks moves more slowly, and if warning be taken it may be possible to sink one's boat and throw up wet herbage and clay against the bank of the stream to provide shelter until the furnace blast has blown by. Such a fire in the bamboo has not only the speed of the prairie fire on its sweep overhead, but it has the same volume of fuel as is found in any forest fire. It combines the two types.

Bamboo forest fires have another quality which is all their own. They bang and rattle with thunderous crashes, as of artillery fire, without cessation.

The stalks of these tree bamboos are frequently more than a foot in diameter. Near the ground the joints are close together; in the younger growth the nodes may be several feet apart. But, long or short as they may be, each joint of the sun dried bamboo is a tightly sealed chamber filled with air. The partitions between the cavities are singularly tough; the outside rind of the stalks is almost pure flint.

When the blast of the flame sweeps onward the air in the stalks upon which it is driven is suddenly heated to a very high temperature. The residuum of moisture which may be in the stems is immediately transformed into steam and at once subjected to superheating, thus becoming a violent explosive. As the hot breath of the flame becomes hotter these joints burst with loud cannon discharges.

Sometimes the force of the explosion near the roots is so great as to shoot the stalk like a javelin high into the air, where it flashes into torchlike flame and is carried by the wind to spread wider disaster. The bursting of the smaller joints is like the roll and rattle of rifles and machine guns. The effect is that of a battle hotly contested.—Washington Post.

An Aquatic Outfielder.

One day a ship was lying at anchor at Boca Grande when the crew observed a dolphin chasing a flying fish, both coming directly toward the ship. On nearing the vessel the flier arose in the air and passed over the bow just abaft the foremast. As it did so the dolphin went under the ship and, coming up on the other side, sprang from the water and caught the flying fish on "the fly" just as it was curving gracefully down in its descent to the water.—Punta Gorda Herald.

Missing Opportunities.

"I have no patience with a man who makes the same mistake twice," said Armes, rather severely, in speaking of an unfortunate friend.

"Neither have I," agreed his wife, "when there are so many other mistakes to make."—Youth's Companion.

Colds and Croup in Children.

"My little girl is subject to colds," says Mrs. Wm. H. Serig, No. 41 Fifth St., Wheeling, W. Va. "Last winter she had a severe spell and a terrible cough, but I cured her with Chamberlain's Cough Remedy without the aid of a doctor, and my little boy has been prevented many times from having the croup by the timely use of this syrup. This remedy is for sale by E. A. Putnam.

MIXED THE SIGNS.

Sarasate and the Sandwich Man in Edinburgh.

To advertise Sarasate's performances in Edinburgh eight sandwich men were sent out, each of whom bore in front and behind him one letter of the great musician's name. They started all right, but after a time removed the boards from their shoulders to have a rest.

On resuming their labors each man shouldered the board nearest him and fell in behind the man who had formerly marched before him.

When the leader, who bore the initial "S," turned around to see if his men were ready, what he saw was "Satarasa." He knew enough to realize that something was wrong, but how to right it was more than he could tell.

After changing a man here and there he got it "Starasea." But still it didn't seem correct.

By this time the poor fellow was in a terrible state. If any of their employers' people were on the outlook and could see them, their day's wage would be stopped! He tried again and yet again, but it was no use.

And a moment later a man bearing the letter "S" before and behind was seen running toward the music hall to copy down the name from one of the posters there. And along the right side of Princeton street there walked toward the appointed rendezvous at the Mound three men who bore the strange device "A A E," while opposite them there paced along the left side gutter four others, who, if to advertise means to attract attention, succeeded well, for every one who passed looked around in wondering amazement as to what "Rats" meant.—Edinburgh Dispatch.

James Gray, Democratic candidate for Sheriff spent $338.76 in his unsuccessful contest. He gave $100 to the Democratic County Committee, $10 to the Independent Republican Committee, the balance was for traveling expenses, hotel bills, etc.

A. S. Barker, Democratic candidate for District Attorney, spent $125 of which $50 went to the Democratic and $50 to the Independent Republican Committees.

C. E. Pitts, Prohibition candidate for District Attorney, states that he gave $250 to the Oswego County Prohibition Committee and paid $5 for postage. He also states that he paid $500 to the New York State Prohibition Committee and "pledges of $12 a year for 1908 all paid but $29—$144." His grand total of contributions, he says, was $899.

The expenses of District Attorney Baker during the campaign were $34.44, which went for livery and hotel bills

It cost Louis C. Rowe $248.65 to be elected County Judge. The money went for printing, postage and stenographers.

John O'Brien, Democratic candidate for Member of Assembly spent $248. $100 going to the Democratic County Committee and $75 to the Independent Judiciary Republican Committee Cade S Lockwood, candidate for Superintendent of Poor, spent $47.59 of which $25 went to the Democratic Committee. F. A. Cyrenius, candidate for Sheriff on the Prohibition ticket, gave $10 to the County Committee, and W. S. Gardner, School Commissioner-elect, gave $10 to the Republican County Committee.

Charles W. Taft spent $204.98 to be elected Sheriff He gave $150 to the Republican County Committee and the remainder was for hotel expenses, railroad fare, etc.

Freelon J Davis, District Attorney-elect, spent $117.35, of which $100 went to the Republican County Committee.

Lieutenant-Governor Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler's gubernatorial campaign cost him $7,305.27, according to his certificate of election expenses filed with the Secretary of State Of this amount $5,000 was paid to Chairman William J. Connors as a contribution to the Democratic State Committee; $703.08 to W. Barry Murphy, Mr. Chanler's Secretary, for services during the campaign, and the remainder for expenses at the Rochester State convention and for traveling expenses and incidentals.

A Valuable Milestone.

A well known novelist was touring through Lancashire in order to learn something of the lives of the inhabitants when he came upon an old man breaking stones on the roadside and, thinking he might gain some knowledge from him, addressed him thus:

"How far is it to Fleetwood, my man?"

"You'll see a milestone a bit farther on," was the gruff reply.

"What's the use, if I can't read?" said the novelist, eager to draw the old man into a conversation.

"Then it'll just suit you, for there's nowt on it," said the old fellow.—London Graphic.

Brilliant Fish Hues.

Like birds, many fishes assume their brightest hue when they wish to attract the opposite sex of their species. The colors of the male common pike become exceedingly intense, brilliant and iridescent in the breeding season. The eel also puts on an intense silvery hue at the breeding time which is very noticeable and at one time caused naturalists to distinguish it as a distinct species. The males of the tench, roach and perch also show a marked increase in brilliancy in the breeding season.

Mental Arithmetic.

"Two years ago I asked Aunt Jane to visit us for a fortnight, and she has not gone home yet."

"It's a blessing."

"What's a blessing?"

"That you didn't invite her for a month."—Harper's Weekly.

The Hat and the Title.

There is an amusing English definition of "gentleman." It is "a man who wears a silk hat and if he has no other title insists upon having 'Esq.' added to his name when letters are addressed to him."

The west end Londoner of social pretensions accepts this definition in practice. Summer and winter, in rain or shine, he wears a high silk hat in the streets of London and carries it into the drawing room when he pays an afternoon call. It is only when he takes a train for the provinces or for the continent that he ventures to use more comfortable headgear. He also expects to have the distinction of "esquire" when a letter is addressed to him and is highly offended if he finds on the envelope the prefix "Mr." As a matter of fact, the number of English gentlemen who are legally entitled to the mediaeval honor of "esquire" is insignificant. It is a self assumed title which signifies nothing that is substantial in rank or privilege. In common use in London "esquire" simply means that the person so addressed does not choose to be associated with tradesmen and ordinary working people and that he is a "gentleman" who invariably wears a silk hat.

Mixed Metaphor.

The late Mr. Ritchie when chancellor of the exchequer once asserted that "the question of moisture in tobacco is a thorny subject and has long been a bone of contention." His immediate successor in office, Austen Chamberlain, remarked at the Liberal Union club's dinner that the harvest which the present government had sown was already coming home to roost.

Sir William Hart-Dyke has two conspicuous "howlers" to his credit—the description of James Lowther as having gone to the very top of the tree and lauded a big fish and the comforting assurance that his government had got rid of the barbed wire entanglements and was now in smooth water. Among other political examples of mixed metaphor are the prediction ascribed to a labor member that if we give the house of lords rope enough they will soon fill up the cup of their iniquity and an Irish member's complaint that a certain government department is iron bound in red tape.—London Standard.

A Fable.

Once Upon a Time there was a Young Man who met Two Nice Girls, who were Constantly Together. Now, he was an Astute Young Man, and he desired to say Something Pretty and Agreeable to the Ladies, but he knew that if he paid a Compliment to One of them, No Matter which, the Other would be Hurt.

So he Thought Rapidly for a moment, and then he said:

"Ah, I know Why you Two Girls are Always Together!"

"Why?" asked the Two Girls.

"Because Everybody says that A Handsome Girl Always Chooses a Homely One as a Companion, So That Her Beauty may be Enhanced by the Contrast."

After Such a Remark, either Both Girls would be Angry with him or Delighted.

And what Do you think Happened?

The Two Girls Blushed and said he was A Flatterer and went their way Together, each Happy for Herself and Sorry for the Other.—London Answers.

The Flag.

On June 14, 1777, the Continental congress resolved that the flag of the United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white, and that the Union be thirteen white stars on a blue field. On Jan. 13, 1794, by an act of congress, the flag was altered to fifteen red and white stripes and fifteen stars. On April 4, 1818, congress again altered the flag by returning to the original thirteen stripes and fifteen stars, as the adding of a new stripe for each additional state would soon make the flag too large. A new star is added to the flag on July 4 following the admission of each new state.—New York American.

Force of Habit.

"The question of enlarging the church comes up tonight, John, doesn't it?"

"Yes, dear, and we expect to have a lively time. They tell me the opposition to the pastor will be strong. Where's my overcoat? Oh, yes! And now I want the tin horn and the cowbell and the big rattle."

"Mercy, John, what are you going to do?"

"Do! Why, I'm going to root for the pastor."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

An Estimate.

"Old man Titewad must be worth a billion dollars," observes the man with the ingrowing mustache.

"Nonsense!" says the man with the dejected ears. "He hasn't over a hundred thousand to his name."

"But I was estimating it at what he would be worth if a dollar was as big as he thinks it is."—Chicago Post.

A Human Bungalow.

Pilkson didn't impress you favorably, then?"

"No; he's just a bungalow."

"A what?"

"A bungalow. He hasn't any foundation."—Newark News.

A Freak.

Jubb—Why, Jimmy, you look as if you'd grown four feet since I last saw you. Jimmy—Huh! I wisht I had. I'd exhibit in a dime museum as the "human quadruped" and get a pile of money, I would.

The intellect of the wise is like glass; it admits the light of heaven and reflects it.—Hare.

EXECUTING MAZEPPA.

Peter the Great's Odd Way of Punishing a Deserter.

Peter the Great, czar of Russia, punished a traitor on a notable occasion in a way that the numerous victims of the present czar's wrath might well wish were still in vogue.

Mazeppa, chieftain of the Cossacks, had deserted to the king of Sweden, with whom Peter was at war. Mazeppa was at once tried by court martial and found guilty of high treason. Sentence of death was passed upon him.

Mazeppa, however, was safely in the camp of the Swedish king, but this fact was not permitted to stand in the way of the carrying out of every part of the sentence. A wooden effigy of Mazeppa was made, and the punishments were inflicted upon the Cossack chieftain's substitute.

The effigy was first dressed in Mazeppa's uniform, and upon its breast were pinned all of the medals, ribbons and other decorations that the real culprit had worn.

While the commanding general and a squadron of cavalry stood near an officer advanced to the wooden man and read the sentence. Then another officer wrenched off the effigy's patent of knighthood and his other decorations, tore them up and trampled upon them. This done, he struck the wooden gentleman a powerful blow in the pit of the stomach, knocking him over. Next a hangman appeared. While the soldiers shouted he threw a noose over the imitation Mazeppa's head and dragged the effigy to a nearby gallows, where it was "hanged by the neck until it was dead."—Scrap Book.

Could Handle a Shovel.

The foreman of a Chicago iron mill once employed a tramp who had been a college baseball champion. Their acquaintance began in a way that showed the tramp still to be game and cheery. It was a cold autumn dawn, and the tramp had slept in front of a furnace on a warm stone. The foreman, being short of laborers, on his morning tour of inspection spied the fellow and thought he would give him a job.

"My man," he said, "can you do anything with a shovel?"

"Well, I could fry a piece of ham on it."—Minneapolis Journal.

After Him.

"It's hard to lose your friends," remarked the man who was down and out.

"Hard?" snorted the man who was on the high tide of prosperity. "It's impossible."—Philadelphia Record.

The Prompter.

"I suppose that inspiration prompts many of your jokes."

"A few," admitted the press humorist. "Desperation, however, prompts the most."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE FULTON TIMES

[Entered as second class matter, April 12, 1882 at the postoffice at Fulton, New York, under the act of Congress of March, 3, 1879.]

E. K. HUGHES, Editor
W. E. HUGHES, Proprietor

Issued Every Wednesday at No. 66 South First street, Fulton, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 18, 1908

Not two days had elapsed after the result of the election was ascertained and after Judge Taft had announced that no establishment in this country had anything to fear from his administration if it did not violate the law, before the manufacturers of the United States became active. They did the same in 1897 when the gold standard was declared for.

The President seems determined to let it be known that he is still up and able to be about. During the last week he has led the officers of the war college in a pedestrian race that sent half of them to temporary retirement, preached a sermon in a letter on the religion of Taft, and issued an invitation to all the heads of respectable labor organizations to dinner at the White House.

Active work of the Committee on Ways and Means has begun in Washington, or rather it has been shifted to Washington, for the work has been progressing during the recess of Congress in Albany, New York, at the home of Representative Sereno Payne, who is the head of the Committee. It is said that the hearings will be completed before the Sixtieth Congress convenes in its final session.

A far reaching, illuminating light dawns upon many of the electors of Oswego county as they peruse how much and to whom various nominees upon the Democratic ticket, contributed monies during the campaign just closed. They were generous beyond the usual in that they contributed large sums to the Independent Republican Judiciary league. It proves that the fight on William B. Baker was waged by Democrats and their hirelings, the hirelings doing the dirty work. Shame upon men that such a condition should exist and that such a man as W. B. Baker could be defeated by the unprincipled tactics of such men.

The motion of Supervisor Rounds of Oswego Town, providing for the selection of a committee toward the appointing by the Board of Supervisors of a Purchasing Agent for Oswego county who shall purchase all supplies for county use and who shall be held directly responsible for all purchases, is a good one and one which was advocated by the Fulton Times nearly a year ago. It is an excellent proposition from an economic standpoint for the taxpayers and will insure better value for the smaller amount that will be expended than is possible now when Tom, Dick and Harry attend to the business. The Times hopes that the present Board of Supervisors will report in favor of such an official, and that no error will be made in picking the man. The position would be a responsible one and a salary should be paid.

That there is a wave of prohibition sweeping the country is shown in the falling off of the internal revenue receipts of the Treasury Department and the Government, to say the least, is surprised. Liquor dealers expected hard times in their trade but the Internal Revenue Bureau, as far as its personnel is concerned, is quite independent of internal revenues. The clerks of that gigantic office will be paid whether they collect anything, or not. They were not, therefore, on the lookout and had no suspicion of the great monetary loss that the government would sustain. A big deficit is being created in the government resources and Congress will have to take up the matter at the coming session, and cover the loss by imposing other revenue taxes. There was a deficit of two millions for October, and large deficits will follow in succeeding months as the prohibition movement spreads. It is said that distillers and wholesale liquor dealers have lost so much already that they cannot stand any further taxation and remain in business. The total loss in revenue since July has been seven millions of dollars. The loss on beers and other fermented liquors in September amounted to $1,800,000. There are some other curious and significant losses given in the internal revenue figures. These losses would indicate that hundreds of men have quit playing cards, because the government revenue loss on cards was over nine thousand dollars. That there is a loss from this source is all the more remarkable when it is considered how many hundreds of thousands of women have taken to "bridge."

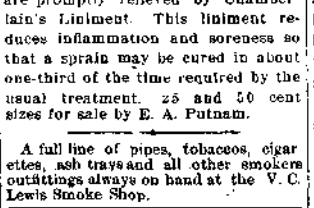
RUBBERHIDE BOOTS

Outwear Two Pairs

You take chances when you buy ordinary rubber boots with rubber soles.

They give only slight protection to your feet—a sharp stick of a nail may go through the sole at any moment. Then they are done for.



NOT SO with Rubberhide Boots. The Rock Oak sole outwears several rubber soles as well. That's why they are most economical for you to buy.

Better for ditching, grading and all kinds of wet work. Absolutely water-tight, and, unlike other boots, always stay so. Your feet are dry all the time.

Resolable by any cobbler

Rubberhide Boots, with ordinary care, will outwear two pairs of ordinary rubber boots. If they should not, we agree to make good any difference in wear in money.

Stranahan & Van Buren
Exclusive Agents

This is why Rubberhides wear longer

Next to the foot is a smooth leather insole, then a rubber insole, then a filling of rubber, then a heavy reinforced rubber welt sole cutclenched to the upper. And a sewed Rock Oak leather outsole to take the hard wear.

Several young lady members of the Freshman Class of Fulton High School gave a leap year party to their gentlemen class friends at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cox, 312 Hannibal street, on Friday evening last. Games and other amusements were heartily indulged in until about 11 o'clock, when supper was announced as in readiness. Instantly there was a "rush" for the dining room, which was daintily trimmed with the class colors, red and white. Upon entering the dining room they were informed that each was to discover his or her position at the table, which was designated with a placecard with a short sentence written thereon, appertaining to the person who was to occupy that position. After all had been seated the process of discovering the tempting menu was assumed. After supper they were kept busy for some time trying to discover why there was an extra letter on the back of each place-card. It was soon discovered that when placed together correctly they formed the words, "Freshies of Fulton." Games were then resumed until about one o'clock, when all departed praising in glowing terms the first party of the "Freshies of Fulton."

How to Cure a Cold.

Be as careful as you can you will occasionally take cold, and when you do, get a medicine of known reliability, one that has an established reputation and that is certain to effect a quick cure. Such a medicine is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It has gained a world wide reputation by its remarkable cures of this most common ailment, and can always be depended upon. It acts on nature's plan, relieves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. During the many years in which it has been in general use we have yet to learn of a single case of cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

NEW YORK'S HORSE SHOW

ANY one who has ever visited the New York horse show will never admit that King Horse is dead and that King Automobile has risen in his stead. Interest in horses has far less chance of dying out than has that of giddy femininity in Paris gowns, picture hats and complexion powders. Nor can a money stringency like that occurring in this country during the past year affect the actions of those horsy folk who consider the equine quadruped a proper object of reckless extravagance in the spending of money.

Reading over the list of box holders of this year's exhibition of the national horse show at Madison Square Garden, New York, reveals many new aspirants for classification in the much envied Four Hundred. Of course the Vanderbilts, the Goulds, the Harrimans, the Lorillards, the Wideners, the Hitchcocks, the Colliers, the Mortimers, the Burdens, the Twombleys, the Whitneys and other famed families of fashion are never absent from the footsteps of King Horse's throne during the week that he allows his menials to approach the presence.

The New York horse show opens the American indoor horse show season. Later comes the Chicago horse show and other exhibits that place before the public the best specimens of almost every breed of horses known in this country. Horses are sent from all parts of the United States and from many parts of the world to appear in competition at the New York show. More than fifty blooded horses were entered in this year's exhibit from MRS. W. K. VANDERBILT, JR., AND MRS. ARCHIBALD SCOTT BURDEN.

Canada alone, and several famous equine aristocrats were entered from England and the continent.

This year's show illustrates that horseback riding is rapidly increasing in popularity. More saddle horses were entered than ever known before, and the increase proved chiefly noticeable as regards women's saddle horses. Also the patrons of the strictly thoroughbred show horse of practically every description are multiplying, an encouraging sign from the breeders' viewpoint. Whether or not the abolition of thoroughbred racing in the east has caused sporty people to center their attention on show horses is a moot question.

Over a million dollars' worth of horseflesh is annually put on show at the New York exhibit. The carriages and other paraphernalia total over a quarter of a million. The gowns worn by the society women represent almost a quarter of a million dollars, and the value of the jewels adorning the pretty persons of the society women seen in the boxes is estimated by a prominent jewel specialist to be more than a million dollars. So it is seen that King Horse is paid homage that would do honor to a Napoleon or an Alexander.

The New York horse show is a terrific, a fatal lure to the socially ambitious. The number of men and women who have spent fortunes to shine at Madison Square Garden during "horse show week" and who have had their hearts broken through their failure to be recognized by the fashionable "powers that be" would amaze the public were it to become known. There was a New York broker a few years ago who made a moderate fortune, and he and his wife decided to break into society by way of the horse show. He spent $100,000, part of it borrowed money, on horses, rigs and other accouterments. Then his brokerage firm went to pieces when its capital was thus squandered, and while he was going through a receivership his wife went to work on the stage at $35 a week. This man had formerly paid his press agent, who gave photos of his horses, stories, etc., to the newspapers, more than the amount his wife was forced to earn to keep the family in food and clothing. All in all, was that not a big price for a man to pay to learn that the Astors, the Vanderbilts and the Goulds and their friends did not want to increase their number of friends, that society was so well pleased with itself that it just giggled fit to kill itself when it read in the yellow journals that Broker X. had lost all his own money and his wife's, too, in trying to gain admission to the "inner circle?"

ABOUT FAMOUS PEOPLE.

The Troubles of Prince von Bulow. A "Wireless Honeymoon."

That interview which the German emperor gave to an Englishman recently seems to have caused all kinds of trouble. It is declared that Prince von Bulow, the German imperial chancellor, offered his resignation in consequence of its publication. The emperor refused to accept the resignation. The chancellor assumed the responsibility for the interview, though he disclaimed knowledge of what it contained. Emperor William has no more loyal servant than Von Bulow, as is fitting. To which it may be added that no statesman has a more thankless task than that of this same statesman.

The prince has received the highest distinction in reaching as he has the rank of chancellor and winning honors and rights of precedence enjoyed by no other nobleman of his country. He is a prince in rank and dignity, his title second only in importance to that of the heirs to the throne who are of blood royal.

PRINCE VON BULOW.

Born in Holstein in 1849, Prince von Bulow comes of a long line of men who have helped to make German history. His father was the Prussian minister of state and secretary of state for foreign affairs in the German empire in the days when Bismarck was supreme. His sire was the confidant of the iron chancellor, for many years his right hand man, and Prince von Bulow of today is regarded in diplomatic circles as possessing the Bismarckian theory.

He is a stanch imperialist and an advocate of the necessity for Germany's becoming the foremost military and naval power of Europe.

Mrs. Lee De Forest, who returned recently from a "wireless" honeymoon, did not spend all her time while on her wedding trip spooning with her husband. Not she. The groom in the case, Dr. Lee De Forest, whose wireless telegraph system is now widely used in America and Europe, could not separate his thoughts from his favorite branch of science even on his wedding tour. Nor did his bride want him to do so. She is too much of a scientist herself to be contented long on a mental diet of love and kisses. So Mr. and Mrs. De Forest put in a great deal of their time while in France and Italy in testing new and improved apparatus which it is the inventor's purpose to introduce in his system of wireless communication. As a result of their experiments it is probable that the Eiffel tower in Paris and the Metropolitan Life building tower in New York will soon be connected by a wireless system, and commercial messages may then be sent direct from New York to Paris, and vice versa.

MRS. LEE DE FOREST.

Mrs. De Forest is thoroughly versed in wireless science. Engineering and woman suffrage are the two subjects that interest her most. She was Nora Stanton Blatch, only daughter of Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch and granddaughter of Elizabeth Cady Stanton, who called the first woman's rights convention in 1848, the first ever held in the world. She was graduated from Cornell university in 1902. She took the course in civil engineering and turned to hydraulics as her specialty. For several years she was a hydrostatic engineer with the board of public water supply in New York city, but she got a leave of absence in February last when she married Dr. De Forest.

She is so much interested in the science of wireless communication that she has given up the branch of engineering which was formerly her profession and will devote herself to the pursuits which her famous husband has made his life work.

"Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

SANITO COOKING UTENSILS

It will prove particularly valuable in preparing food for the sick or for infants.

In the Customary Place.

A well known English bishop some time since lost his third wife. A clergyman who had known the first wife returned from Africa and wanted to see the grave. He called at the cathedral and saw the verger.

"Can you tell me where the bishop's wife is buried?"

"Well, sir," replied the verger, "I don't know for certain, but he mostly buries 'em at Brompton."—Detroit Tribune.

Folklore Stories.

The Journal of American Folklore has some interesting folk tales of the Nez Perces Indians:

"Once the sun fell down from the sky just about sunrise. Mole caught it and held it up until people got there and helped him to shove it back. The sun had meant to roll along on the ground instead of in the sky. It was from holding up the sun that Mole's hands are bent so far back.

"Coyote and Cloud ran a race. Cloud bet storm and Coyote clear weather. They started far away to the south, and for awhile Coyote was in the lead. Then Cloud made fruits of all kinds to grow in front of Coyote, and he, looking back and seeing Cloud far behind, stopped to eat. In this way Cloud caught up and won. This is why we have storms in winter time."

THE "SHEATH GOWN BABY."

Little Miss Who Made a Hit in Asbury Park Baby Parade.

It was in keeping with the spirit of fun and frolic prevailing at Asbury Park, N. J., during carnival week to garb in the new and sensational sheath skirt the baby which won honors in the great annual baby parade that is one of the noted features of this seaside resort.

THE SHEATH GOWN BABY.

The "sheath skirt baby" made a hit, and no one accused the little lass of immodesty either. She bore her popularity with equilibrium, not allowing the attention she received to turn her head a bit. But her mamma does not promise to let her wear the sheath gown when she grows up.

Your Pillow.

You have probably been accustomed to sleep since your childhood on a pair of pillows lying broadwise to your head. Sometimes you cannot sleep, however. Just try lying on them placed longwise, so that the lower ends will touch your armpits. You will find the amount of repose you get is double what you derive from them when placed in the ordinary fashion, which really leaves nothing for the base of the neck to rest upon. A properly constructed pillow should rest the head, neck and shoulders. The one most in vogue rests only the head.

Long Suffering Bill.

A correspondent sends the following to a remote rural organ of the people:

"Our esteemed fellow citizen, Mr. William M. Puckleton, has had several new 'No Trespassing' signs erected on his place. We have had the pleasure of perusing the one facing the Hedgeville pike. It reads:

"Notis.—Trespasers will be persekuted to the full extent of 2 mean mungrel dogs wich ain't never ben overly soshibil with strangers an 1 dubbel barl shotgun wich ain't loaded with no sofy pillers dam if I ain't gettin tired of this helraisin on my property Yurs respectful.

HAS FOOTBALL REFORM FAILED?

FOOTBALL has been having a hot fight with politics for the prize of public popularity and attention, but now that the gridiron game has swung to its greatest height admirers of it feel that they have finally succeeded in gaining the supremacy.

Particular interest attaches to the present football season owing to the new rules governing the game, which are now for the first time thoroughly understood throughout the entire country and have for the first time been put in universal use in an intelligent manner. The previous play under the new regulations designed to do away with the deadly nature of the game in the past proved more experimental than otherwise, and resultantly this year the public and the critics can authoritatively consider whether or not the new rules have effected their intended purpose. In other words, is reformed football a failure or a success?

The reform movement was based entirely on the demand from thousands of people, prominent and otherwise, that the number of dangerous accidents must be decreased, and the football dictators produced what they proudly term an "open game," a style of game intended to do away with the crushing "mass plays" of a few years ago. But the so called open game is open in name only in a great many vital respects. The rules do not do away with mass plays at all. In actual practice they merely limit the manner of their formation and cause more time to be consumed in their formation—that is, the rules put certain technical difficulties in the way of forming mass plays, and coaches and captains have found ways of circumventing these obstructions in material details.

A large number of injuries have occurred this year not solely among careless and untrained young players, as the football rulers would have the public believe, but among the strongest and best trained men on the gridiron. Furthermore, many of the accidents have resulted in mere practice games where the playing is not so continuously violent as in actual contests and where the players make a special point of avoiding injury.

EDDIE COY.

In three days of practice play by the Yale varsity team at New Haven no less than four men were so badly hurt as to necessitate treatment at the hospital. Captain Burch had to retire from the game for most of the season, Field and Reinecke received dangerous wounds on their heads, and Mersereau sprained his ankle and tore ligaments loose from the bone. The second day after Annapolis played Harvard only two members of the regular Annapolis team were able to report on the field for practice. Just what benefit these injuries to eight or nine men will give to Uncle Sam's naval cadets in their preparatory work to become officers in the navy it is difficult to imagine. Slingluff, center, and Eighton, right tackle, were the only two of the future admirals able to respond. Many other instances of a similar nature could be cited.

Probably the most striking illustration of the workings of the so called open game is afforded by the much talked of contest recently played at Schenectady, N. Y., between the well trained teams of Union college and Wesleyan university. A dispatch sent out by the Associated Press said: "Seventeen players were rendered unconscious during the game, and five of them were so seriously hurt that they were removed to the hospital. Most of the seventeen had to stop playing.

"The officials united in saying the game was the toughest and most hard fought they had ever witnessed. Porter sustained a broken collar bone and Hammond a slight concussion of the brain.

"The game had to be stopped time and again when the players were injured or knocked senseless. After nearly every scrimmage some one was found to have been hurt so seriously that he could not arise from the ground."

The whole trouble in the failure to get real reform in football lies in the desire of many colleges to secure advertisement and students through the popularity of football, and the game will be highly popular among the youth of the nation, say many, only so long as the dangerous elements are retained. Therefore the rule makers try to please the spirited, daring, combat loving American youth and at the same time convince the public that football has become a "milk and water" pastime, safe enough for anybody to play. However, this much must be said for the reformers. By introducing the "forward pass" the "onside kick" and requiring teams to gain more distance than formerly in scrimmages in order to retain possession of the ball they have contributed to the spectacular value of the game.

But not even the football rule makers can wipe out the bone breaking features of the game by substituting one kind of danger for another.

A MOTHER NOW.

Countess Szechenyi, Who Has Presented Count With a Daughter.

The Countess Szechenyi, who has presented her husband, Count Laszlo Szechenyi, with a daughter, was married to him last January at the Vanderbilt mansion in New York, and the wedding was the great event of the social season. As Miss Gladys Vanderbilt the countess was quite popular with the members of the smart set, and it is reported that she has endeared herself much to the people upon the big estate of her husband in Hungary, to many of whom an American woman is something of a curiosity. The mother of the countess is with her. The fortune of the count is not as great as that of his wife and consists largely of lands, but, unlike many noble lords who have come from Europe to America for brides, he is by no means penniless. His possessions have been estimated as worth at least $5,000,000. The countess inherited about $13,000,000 from her father, the late Cornelius Vanderbilt.

The Badge of Honesty

Is on every wrapper of Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery because a full list of the ingredients composing it is printed there in plain English. Forty years of experience has proven its superior worth as a blood purifier and invigorating tonic for the cure of stomach disorders and all liver ills. It builds up the run-down system as no other tonic can in which alcohol is used. The active medicinal principles of native roots such as Golden Seal and Queen's root, Stone and Mandrake root, Bloodroot and Black Cherrybark are extracted and preserved by the use of chemically pure, triple-refined glycerine. Send to Dr. R. V. Pierce at Buffalo, N. Y., for free booklet which quotes extracts from well-recognized medical authorities such as Drs. Bartholow, King, Scudder, Coe, Ellingwood and a host of others, showing that these roots can be depended upon for their curative action in all weak states of the stomach, accompanied by indigestion or dyspepsia, as well as in all bilious or liver complaints and in all "wasting diseases" where there is loss of flesh and gradual running down of the strength and system.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, pure blood, and so invigorates and regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, and, through them, the whole system. Thus all skin affections, blotches, pimples and eruptions as well as scrofulous swellings and old open running sores or ulcers are cured and healed. In treating old running sores, or ulcers, it is well to insure their healing to apply to them Dr. Pierce's All-Healing Salve. If your druggist don't happen to have this Salve in stock, send fifty-four cents in postage stamps to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., and a large box of Dr. Pierce's Healing Salve will reach you by return mail.

You can't talk of a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic, medicine of known construction, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

Salt Lakes.

The Great Salt lake is gradually drying up, and the inhabitants of Salt Lake City seem quite surprised. They ought not to be. All salt lakes owe their salinity to the fact of their having no outlet, and a lake without an outlet is a dying lake.

Nor is death usually long delayed, speaking geologically. Lakes Koko Nor and Lob Nor were undoubtedly extensive inland seas not so very many decades ago, yet Sven Hedin found them reduced to mere acrid puddles set in the midst of well nigh limitless salt deserts that once were their beds.

The terrible Takkimakan desert, too, in which Hedin nearly died of thirst, was once the bed of just such a lake. So also were the salt deserts of Persia, Northern Tibet is studded with salt lakes in process of desiccation. The Aral and the Caspian seas were at one time far more extensive than is now the case, proving that they, too, are undergoing the inevitable process of desiccation to which all such bodies of water are sooner or later invariably subjected.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

You can cure dyspepsia, indigestion, sour or weak stomach, or in fact any form of stomach trouble, if you'll take Kodol occasionally—just a few times when you need it. Kodol does not have to be taken all the time. Ordinarily you only take Kodol now and then, because it completely digests all the food you eat. After a few days or a week or so, it soon begins to digest the food without the aid of Kodol. Then you don't need Kodol any longer. That is why our guarantee, "We refund the money if it will do for you," should be worth something to you.

Negro Eloquence.

Some years ago one of Texas' widely known statesmen who is now dead was passing under a street in Dallas when an old colored man, who had once been a slave, recognized, took off his hat and presented a most profound bow.

"Marster, you do not know me, I reckon."

"Yes, you are a rascal."

"How?" asked the astonished darky, opening his eyes, stroked with a tousled head and walked.

"Didn't you see me put my hand in my pocket?"

"Yes, sah."

"Well, you old rascal, you rob me of the pleasure of giving you money without being asked."

The old man received a dollar. Bowing almost to the ground, while tears came out and coursed through the aged prints around his eyes, he replied:

"Marster, wid—wid such a heart as you hab and wid Abraham and Isaac and de Lord on your side I don't see what can keep you out of heaven."

The Ruling Passion.

"John! John!" called the excited little wife.

"W-what is it, Lucy?" muttered the big baseball player as he drowsily turned over in bed.

"Why, there is a man downstairs."

"W-what's he doing?"

"He's in the dining room after the plate."

"Trying to reach the plate? Put him out, Kelly; put him out at third!"—Kansas City Independent.

Kodol contains the same digestive juices that are found in an ordinary healthy stomach, and there is, therefore, no question but what any form of stomach trouble, indigestion or nervous dyspepsia, will yield readily yet naturally to a short treatment of Kodol. Try it today on our guarantee. Take it for a little while, as that is all you will need to take. Kodol digests what you eat and makes the stomach sweet. It is sold by all druggists.

A FAMOUS CEMETERY

Pere Lachaise Is One of the Landmarks of Paris.

IT HAS A STORMY HISTORY.

This Picturesque Burial Place Has Served as a Battleground as well as a Graveyard—Its Monuments, Lovers and Disconsolate Widows.

Pere Lachaise is the largest and quite the most interesting of the Paris cemeteries and named after the Jesuit confessor of Louis XIV., whose country seat occupied the site of the present chapel until the ground was made a cemetery in 1804. It covers 110 acres of ground, is picturesque, but quite unlovely. Hare wrote about the tombs that "weight was their chief peculiarity and that all the monuments looked as if each family had tried to pile as much granite as possible on to their deceased relatives."

Pere Lachaise has a stormy history. In 1814 the Russians fought the French there and even threw a bridge. During the occupation the Versailles and Communists fought several pitched battles among the tombstones and did considerable damage. But it is not so much with the history of the cemetery as with the people buried in it that we have to deal. A volume might be filled with the mere list of all the celebrated men and women buried in it, for, as Victor Hugo wrote, "being buried in Pere Lachaise is like having mahogany furniture—a sign of elegance."

In Pere Lachaise the monument which attracts most visitors is that of Abelard and Heloise, the two most famous lovers in the world. The monument was first erected 637 years after their death and brought to Pere Lachaise in 1817 from the museum where it had been during the revolution. Another famous lover, Alfred de Musset, lies buried not far from the two willows over the graves of Heloise and Abelard. David, the painter, Rachel, the actress; Balzac, Scribe, Michelet and many other well known folk lie near at hand. Admiral Sir Sydney Smith, Lord Seymour and other well known Englishmen are to be found in other portions of the cemetery, while literature is represented not only by great authors, but by Lesurques, the victim of Dubosc in the famous legal Lyons Mail imbroglio.

But Pere Lachaise has more romance than in its tombstones. Chatting one day with one of the old soldiers who are the keepers of this grim park, I learned some curious facts about it.

"We never have a dull moment," the man said. "You may think that our time here is monotonous, but you are quite wrong if you do so. To begin with, there are the burglars. The cemetery is overrun with them. There are three kinds of burglars. There are the connoisseurs who often get away with valuable prizes, for you will be surprised at the works of art of small size which people put in their chapels. The window is broken, a stick slipped through the hole, and all sorts of things worth having are fished out, then the bronze stealers, who take away as much as they can carry in their special pockets and make from 15 to 20 francs a day at the game until we catch them.

"A little while ago a bust weighing forty pounds was taken out of the cemetery over one of the walls. But the most curious form of robbery is, perhaps, that of the pearl wreaths. Women are the principal offenders. They select the new ones, which are not weather stained, fasten them with their backs against the tombstone, slip them under their dresses, and walk off. They have got away with them. I have no right to search even suspicious looking customers, sell them to dealers, to whom they tell the well worn story of a poor workwoman who has need of food.

"You would hardly believe it, but Pere Lachaise," said the keeper, "is a favorite meeting place for lovers. We get lovers of all ages, and perhaps more schoolboys and schoolgirls than anything else. But the three most curious things we see here in the cemetery are the forlorn widows, the letter boxes and the cafe." "The cafe?" I asked. "Yes. There are hundreds of people in Paris who refuse to believe that their dead do not enjoy after death the good things they used to like when they were alive. Mothers bring apples and sweets and leave them on the tombstones of their children. People bring wine and glasses, and there is one old gentleman who leaves a potato salad on his son's tombstone regularly every Sunday. Of course the children soon find out these things, and we have never been able to convince the people who bring them of the absurdity of doing so. It is a very harmless superstition, after all."

"And the letter boxes?" I asked. "Lovers' letter boxes?" said the guardian. "There are dozens of them in all parts of Pere Lachaise. Sometimes they are holes in the trunks of trees; sometimes they are little hollows under stones.

"The inconsolable widow is a frequent visitor. She is a pretty woman, and black suits her. She kneels down by a tombstone, rarely the same one, and when a likely looking mourner of the other sex appears bursts into tears. He consoles her pretty soon, and the two leave the cemetery arm in arm. One of these widows invited me to her wedding six months ago, and last month I was called to give evidence about her meetings with her victim, for she had seven other husbands living."—St James' Gazette.

THE STORAGE WAREHOUSE.

It Sheds Some Side Lights Upon Life and Morals.

For a few dazzling side lights upon life and morals apply to the storage warehouse. You can find almost anything there from baby alligators to blocks of ice cream and from Teddy bears to sauerkraut. So you won't be amazed at what the institution has most recently divulged. Here you have the story.

Mrs. Q. repaired to the storage warehouse to extract her soup spoons, though it may have been aunts or uncles or popcorn or guinea pigs. At any rate, her property declined to come out. It had been tucked in by Mr. Q. Only Mr. Q. might tempt it forth. Mrs. Q. protested. She wanted her cutnip or theology or safety razor, or whatever it was, and made representations with great emphasis. She moved upon the management. She stormed and wept. After long wrangling the warehouse decided it would yield up the college ice—or was it the piano?—if Mrs. Q. would swear she was still married to Mr. Q. and would send him a written statement she was in Quebec, and I lost track of him owing to bewilderment produced by merely thinking of a storage warehouser and make him return the statement, countersigned, to the management. This, then, is how Mrs. G. regained possession of her golf links or prayer book or sugar tongs. Well, say it was sugar tongs, though golf links would be likelier.

Pressed for an explanation, the warehouse remarked: "Have to be careful, you know, divorces, separations, affinities, you know. Minutes such things start up there's a face to the storage place. Cannot be enough to shatter everything first. Becomes calamitous, eh?"—Boston Transcript.

Too Much For the Ferret.

An old buck rabbit is not to be lightly tackled by weasel, stoat or even ferret. On the sanded floor of a small pebble house a ferret of long experience was matched with an old lop eared buck, the property of the landlord. The ferret made straight for the rabbit's throat, but the latter was in the air before master ferret could reach him and, leaping clean over the ferret's head, let out with those powerful hind legs of his a kick which hurled the ferret bodily against the wainscot. Twice the ferret returned to the attack, and twice he missed his grip and went hurtling through the air. The third repulse was enough for him. He knew he was beaten and could not be persuaded to stand up for a fourth round.—Pearson's Weekly.

Sitting Bull.

To look at Sitting Bull one would say that he was always quiet and self contained. In fact, he did usually keep himself under control, but he was cruel and almost heartless. He had practiced cruelty to animals and men from his childhood and as long as he lived; he was full of passion and often very angry. He was always imperious and insolent toward our generals, the Indian agent and other friends of the great father at Washington, whom he claimed to hate. He had great talent and ability to plan campaigns and battles and wonderful influence in bringing Indians together. Notwithstanding all this, he was afraid of death, and, though he planned the greatest victory which the Indians ever gained over white men, Sitting Bull himself was a coward and disgraced himself even before his own people by running away in the very face of success.—General Howard in St. Nicholas.

Practical.

"Oh, George, did you bring the deeds with you?"—Baltimore American.

There is considerable sickness hereabouts, mostly jaundice, grippe, etc.

William Drake, an old and respected resident of this place, was buried here Friday at 2 o'clock. He leaves a widow and five children to mourn his loss. Mr. Drake suffered a paralytic stroke some time ago and never rallied from its effects.

About twenty-five of the young friends of Miss Ruth Osborne last Friday night met at her home and when she returned home from taking tea with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Delos Distin, they reminded her that it was her sixteenth birthday anniversary and wished her many returns of the day. After spending the evening in amusements, refreshments were served and good-byes were said. A number of gifts were left as reminders of the day.

The Rowlee School will hold a shadow social and pillow sale at the home of Allan Osborne Wednesday evening, Nov. 25th, to which they cordially invite the public. A grab-bag will also be in evidence.

Citizens Club Active.

The Citizens Club is certainly the most representative body of men in Fulton, and quality has never been sacrificed to quantity in the membership. This week Secretary Charles R. Bennett has been mailing to members the following letter which is a very conservative statement of fact and a moderate plea for a larger membership:

CITIZENS CLUB,
Fulton, N. Y.

Mr. Citizens' Club Member,

Dear Sir—Always with the advent of long evenings and cold weather, interest awakens in the Club. This year is no exception beyond the fact that unusual interest is evidenced, and the Club season promises to be interesting.

Doubtless you have certain friends with whom you would like to share the pleasant evenings a club member enjoys. Why not invite them to join? The Club is "above board" financially, the rooms are pleasant and attractive, and altogether the Citizens' Club is a credit to its members and to the city.

The dues are ten dollars, payable semi-annually in advance. Five dollars must accompany each application for membership, and this paid now, would pay all dues up to July, 1909.

Two blanks are enclosed; two new members should be the result.

Truly yours,
CHARLES R. BENNETT,
Secretary.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB

Interesting and Instructive Debate on a Question of National Importance—Present European Political Situation an Object Lesson.

The session of the Current Events Club on Monday evening, at the home of Attorney and Mrs. A. T. Jennings, was thoroughly enjoyable and instructive.

The following was presented for debate:

"Resolved, That the United States, if invited, should accept representation in a Congress to settle questions affecting the peace and welfare of the various European countries."

The leaders were: Affirmative—Mr. E. R. Redhead and Prof. G. B. Deuel. Negative—Rev. S. G York and Attorney Giles S. Piper.

Mr. Redhead, in presenting the resolution for the affirmative side, submitted these propositions:

1. The United States, by reason of increase in population and wealth, and on account of the intelligence and progressiveness of her people, has become one of the world powers.

2. As a world power, she has responsibilities co-extensive with the uttermost bounds of civilization.

3. She ought, therefore, to exercise her moral influence for the promotion of the peace and welfare of all the nations and peoples of the earth.

Mr. Redhead stated that if the foregoing propositions are accepted as true, then it was an easy matter to affirm that the United States, if invited, should accept representation in a congress to settle questions affecting the peace and welfare of the various European nations.

The ever-present European question was presented in detail by Mr. Redhead, embracing the Balkan question, and in order to give an intelligible conception of the facts, the history of Turkey and the wretched rule of the Porte were submitted. The treaty of San Stefano was referred to, which was a treaty of peace between Russia and Turkey in 1878. This treaty contained articles providing for the independence of Montenegro, Servia and Roumania, and the settlement of affairs in Bulgaria. It was made to be broken, and then the Berlin treaty followed, which was for the reconsideration of the preliminary treaty of San Stefano. This treaty provided that Bulgaria should become an autonomous principality under the sovereignty of the Porte, with a Christian governor and a national militia; complete civil and political equality and religious freedom were guaranteed under the constitution; the complete independence of Montenegro was guaranteed by all the Powers—religious liberty and confessional equality were decreed and her territory increased.

Mr. Redhead's contention was that through the jealousy and selfish interests of the Powers the provisions of the foregoing treaty were never seriously considered. In fact, the principal, viz.: complete civil and political equality and religious protection, were ignored, and afterward Turkish emissaries fomented a massacre of Christians in Bulgaria.

Mr. Redhead contended that the United States, as one of the great world-powers has responsibilities, and that she should exercise her moral influence in the settlement of questions of vital importance to the Christian nations of the earth. The speaker exhibited a most comprehensive and intelligible conception of the facts as historically set forth, and his argument was logical and conclusive.

The Rev. J. G. York, who spoke on the negative side of the question, contended that the United States had an established policy of non-intervention and neutrality toward foreign powers. This was a fundamental rule in our national life and was prescribed by statesmen of wide reputation, who elucidated the distinctively American policy of non-intervention. Mr. York, in defense of his proposition, quoted from Washington in his farewell address, as follows: "The great rule and conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible." Also, from Thomas Jefferson, "Peace, commerce and honest friendship with all nations—entangling alliances with none." It was the opinion of the speaker that to break away from this policy would be to endanger amity with foreign nations, and that the highest interests of our commercial and industrial development demand that we maintain the policy of non-intervention.

Prof. Deuel spoke in defense of the affirmative proposition, believing that with the joining together of the Atlantic and Pacific, the conditions which confronted the statesmen of bygone days had completely changed. The United States was a great world-power, and was justified in interfering with any nation in the interest of the peace of the world. Indeed, the speaker stated, that in his judgment "if invited" should be eliminated from the resolution, and that the obligation by the United States to safeguard the commercial and industrial, moral and religious liberties of the nations of the earth, should receive paramount consideration.

Attorney Giles S. Piper spoke in defense of the negative side of the proposition, and Mr. Redhead summed up for the affirmative side, asserting that the proposition was no new expedient, for the United States had participated not only in the Hague convention but also in the Chinese embroglio, setting an excellent example to the nations of the earth in refusing to accept the full indemnity awarded by the plenipotentiaries of Europe and Asia for the repression of the Boxer rebellion, and later in the Algiciris convention, becoming a party to the agreement formulated.

When Prof. Faingrieve asked for a vote of the Club on the propositions submitted, it was discovered that a tie was the result. It was conceded, however, that the session would be a memorable one in the history of the club.

The next meeting of the Club will be held on Monday evening, December 7, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Redhead. The leaders will be the Rev. F. A. Miller and Mr. George Chauncey.

Board Public Works.

The Board of Public Works on Monday accepted the work done by Contractor Samuel Bonn of Syracuse in laying the West Side sewer in Hannibal, Northwest, First and West Third streets and voted to pay the balance due Mr. Bonn.

The City Engineer was authorized to furnish estimates for the cost of the paving to be done in Oneida, Hannibal, South First, West First and West Third streets and Broadway from the bridge to the cemetery. He will report by December 21.

Rural Carrier Arrested.

Donald G. Hudson, a rural carrier from the Oswego Post Office, whose home is in Scriba, was arrested at the Post Office as he was turning away from a sorting case from which he was seen to take several letters and put them in his pocket, on Thursday.

The warrant was issued by United States Commissioner L. W. Baker on an affidavit of Carl D. Kenyon, deputy postmaster. The charge alleged in the warrant is that Hudson had opened letters passing through the mail. Officer Czirr of the police force made the arrest and Hudson was placed in custody at Police Headquarters.

The penalty for this violation of the postal regulations is $500 fine or one year in prison or both at the discretion of the court.

The Limit cigar is rightly named. You won't find any better smoke for the price anywhere. V. C. Lewis is exclusive salesman for Fulton.

Sixty-one Boarders.

The County Jail is filled to overflowing with short term prisoners and those awaiting trial at County Court, which opens Monday. Altogether there are sixty-one in the jail, and it keeps Chef Dad France busy broiling chickens and baking hot rolls for them. The board of sixty-one prisoners costs the county $179.34 a week.—Oswego Times.

Take your choice between a Rocky Ford and an Enthuso 5c cigar. They are both winners. V. C. Lewis, 109 Cayuga street.

Jealous Negro Shoots Fiancee.

Oswego city was the scene of another murder on Wednesday night when Benjamin Lee, colored, a private in Company H, 24th Infantry, stationed at Fort Ontario, cut the throat of his fiancee, Emma Letcher, from ear to ear with a jack knife, severing the jugular vein and all veins and arteries in her throat, almost severing the head from the body. The cause for the deed was jealousy of the attention of some other man.

As soon as the bloody act was consumated Lee ran from the house in which he and the woman were stopping, and going immediately to the county jail told of his crime and asked to be shut up. Not finding any credence placed in his story he again ran through the streets to the police headquarters where he was placed under arrest and locked up. He confessed his crime, but insisted that he had not meant to kill the woman.

The body of the woman was shipped to her former home in Ohio, the expense being borne by Lee's army comrades, all of whom are at a loss to understand his horrible act, as he had a splendid army record and was always a brave soldier under fire. When arraigned upon a charge of murder Lee plead not guilty.

THEY have the charm and style that distinguishes the Paris models and a grade of workmanship that generally goes with $25 and $30 suits—Then too, there are so many style variations that every woman can find what is, personally, most becoming. Those long black broadcloth and Kersey cloaks as well as the fancy weaves have that snap and style so characteristic of high grade garments, but notwithstanding this fact, we are content with a very small margin of profit, just to satisfy you, and maintain the reputation we now enjoy. —O'Brien's

IF YOU own only one Suit, let that one be black—if you own half a dozen, let one of them be black. That's good advice from a woman who knows how to dress well. And what is more handsome—what wears better—what keeps it's charm longer than black?

We've provided liberal opportunities for choosing this season—from a clever little cheviot at $10.95 to a handsome creation at $25—and numerous styles in between. Come and let us show you! —O'Brien's

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Second Day.

Supervisor Rounds introduced a resolution favoring the appointment of a committee of three to consider the advisability of appointing a purchasing agent for the county. Mr. Whitney made a motion that the matter be made a special order for Dec. 1.

Supervisor Rounds moved that all reports of committees appointed to settle with county officers shall be read item by item before being adopted and shall lay on the table five days, that they may be inspected by members of the Board.

W. M. Barker said if adopted the resolution might extend the session into next year.

Mr. Whitney also objected to it on the ground that it would prolong the session and that the present rule was sufficient. He asked that the Ayes and Nays be called. Mr. Rounds said there was no occasion for the resolution prolonging the session a single day and even if it would do so he believed that the taxpayers would regard it as time well spent.

Mr. Rogers said that to him the resolution had the appearance of being a good one.

Mr. Whitney finally withdrew his call for the Ayes and Nays and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. Terry introduced a resolution for the appointment of a committee to call for bids to print the official Journal.

It was decided that the meetings of the Board shall be held daily at 11:30 a. m., except Mondays when the meetings will be at 7:30 p. m.

Third Day.

The principal business transacted at the Board of Supervisors this morning was the offering of a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who murdered John and Peter Boll. District Attorney Baker urged that the reward be offered and several members of the Board spoke in favor of the resolution in the interests of the law and order of the county.

District Attorney Baker sent a communication to the Board outlining what had been done but he said it was necessary to offer a reward of $1,000 to attract outside detectives to the case. He stated the county should spare no expense to bring the persons guilty of the brutal double murder to justice.

Supervisor Howard moved the communication be received and printed in the Journal.

Supervisor Howard then moved that a reward of $1,000 be offered for the arrest and conviction of the person or persons who murdered John and Peter Boll and that the Sheriff advertise the reward.

Supervisor Gregg of Schroeppel spoke strongly in favor of the adoption of the resolution. He said the residents of Schroeppel, in which the double murder occurred, were alarmed and wanted something done to arrest the murder or murderers. He said the town was overrun with foreigners attracted by the barge canal work and various crimes were being committed.

He said that the people of the county should be willing to pay $1,000 to uncover such a crime. Supervisor Abbey of Fulton, said the people were aroused and he thought the reward should be more than $1,000 to attract the most skilled detectives. Supervisor Woodworth of Hastings, advocated the adoption of the resolution. He said the people in his town were frightened over the criminal wave in Oswego county and he thought a reward of $1,000 might result in the arrest of the guilty person or persons. The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Supervisor Beardsley of Granby moved a levy of $113.77 for extraordinary repairs on Dutton bridge.—Adopted.

Chairman Hydorn announced the appointment of the following committees to receive bids for printing the Journal Supervisors — Terry, Hamer, Scoville.

To direct legislation making sheriff's office salaried one—Supervisors Beardsley, Buck, Sweetland and Gray.—Adjourned.

Supervisor Barker presented a petition from the assessors of New Haven providing that the assessment on the Dempster Camp grounds be stricken from the roll. The Supreme Court holds that the property is used for religious purposes and it is therefore exempt from taxation.—Approved.

Chairman Hydorn announced the following standing committees:

To Compare Rolls—Woodworth, Whitney, Scoville, Simons, Barker, W. M. Skillen, Wilson, Lockwood, Cullivan, Abbey, Borst, Sweetland, Gray, Terry, Tighe.

To Foot Rolls—Terry, Mariotte, Hunt, Beardsley, Rogers, Taylor, Howard, Gregg, Kellogg, Garlock, Woods, Buck, Barker, A. S. Thompson, Potter.

Supervisor Beardsley moved a levy of $-5 on Granby for Memorial Day. Levy ordered.

Supervisor Rounds moved that a committee of five be appointed to consider the advisability of purchasing three book typewriters for the recording room in the County Clerk's office. Adopted.

Supervisor Howard moved a levy of $20 on Palermo for Memorial Day. Levy ordered.

Clerk Spencer read a communication from the State Comptroller's office asking Oswego County to raise $2,153.61 to pay for stenographers and librarian in the Fifth Judicial District, and $245.24 to pay Oswego County's portion of the salaries of the librarians of the district in Syracuse.

A communication was read stating that $600 must be levied for the improvement of Oswego County roads as follows: Oswego-Sterling road, $100; Minetto road, $150; Mexico road, $300 and Fulton-Volney road, $150. Ordered filed.

The Board adjourned to meet on Monday, Nov. 30, at 7:30 p.m.

A Christmas Blotter.

"With two large sheets of blotting paper of contrasting colors and an ordinary little calendar pad may be made an extremely useful gift," says Woman's Home Companion for December. "Out of the large blotters cut twelve small ones of uniform size, about ten by four inches. Paste a 'month' from the calendar, one on each small blotter, and with the colors alternating. Keep the twelve together by tying ribbon around them, with a pretty bow on top. Each month a fresh blotter may be slipped from under the ribbon and the month's calendar is right at hand. Red and green blotters tied with red ribbon are a Christmas combination."

If you are looking for a fine watch for a Christmas gift, consult G. B. Farley, The Jeweler, 21 First street.

Electric Light Company Successful

Last Wednesday brief mention was made of the fact that the Fulton Light, Heat & Power Company had secured a verdict in their favor and against the State, in that the State Court of Claims refused to dismiss the claim of the company. A fuller discussion of the matter follows: "The State Court of Claims today decided against the State in a motion to dismiss the claim of the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company of Fulton, Oswego County, for $3,428,028 for the permanent appropriation for barge canal purposes of land in Fulton and the developed and undeveloped water power in the Oswego River there together with depreciation in value of the electric light plant of the company.

The claim, which involves a test case on behalf of power concerns at various points whose water power is to be taken over for canal purposes, was before the court on the issue of the State's ownership of title to the bed of the river and the water rights which the companies are seeking to protect, and the claim has not been tried on the question of the amount of damages sustained by the concern. The decision of the Court of Claims undoubtedly later on will be carried to the Court of Appeals.

In refusing to dismiss the claim, the court in an opinion written by Judge Rodenbeck in which the others concur, that the claimant is the owner of the lands which are to be taken for barge canal purposes, which include the power site of the company at Fulton. The court agrees with various contentions of law advanced for the claimant but under the opinion handed down has reached no conclusion as to the extent of the riparian rights attaching to the land which must be determined when the trial is resumed. Until the case is fully closed hereafter and an award fixing the amount of damages is reached, the State cannot review this determination of the Court of Claims in the higher courts.

The main points covered by the opinion are that a State patent bounded by a fresh water non-tidal stream carries title to the center of the stream; that a private individual may acquire title by prescription in the bed of such a stream even though the stream may be navigable.

The far-reaching effect of this decision, if it is sustained, in increasing the cost of the barge canal or other improvements to navigation in this State cannot be overstimated. There are a score of other sites like Fulton at each of which there is a score or more of water power users who will file similar claims in like amounts. It is understood that these water power users are acting somewhat in concert in furthering the prosecution of the claim now on trial.

Trial of the claim has brought out a notable array of attorneys in behalf of the power companies, headed by Prof. S. A. Collins, former counsel to Governor Flower. The State was represented by Attorney General George P. Decker."

Fruit For the Christmas Tree.

Cushion Novelties That May Be Made at Home by Deft Fingers — Heart Shaped and Doll Pincushions.

Of all the Christmas presents that can be made at home at small expense none is more simple or has more originality than the ever welcome pincushion. Fortunately for the woman whose income is small, these decorative and useful cushions are quite easy to make at home.

A very dainty little hanging cushion is heart shaped and three or four inches long. Trace the outline of the heart on paper and cut it out for pattern.

MATERIALS REQUIRED.

Sheet of lightweight cardboard.
Odd pieces of silk.
A pretty doll.
Baby ribbon.
Pins.

HEART SHAPED CUSHION.

Then draw the heart shape for the cushion on a sheet of lightweight cardboard and cut out. Two shapes are needed, one for each side. Any odd piece of silk may be used, plain or figured. Cover the cardboard with scented cotton, then cover that with the silk. Put the doll's head between the pieces of cardboard and overhand neatly with silk. On each side of the head fasten a bow of baby ribbon by which it can hang.

The little doll is dressed in soft yellow silk and gauze wings that fasten on her back at the waist line and show

MATERIALS REQUIRED.

A half yard of yellow silk for dress.
A small doll.
String of beads.
Cotton batting.
Gauze for wings.

DOLL PINCUSHION.

a little above the head. The full skirt is filled with cotton, and then a piece of cardboard cut round and three inches wide, covered to match the dress, is sewed to the bottom of the skirt.

A set of natural colored crash cushions is a most acceptable gift to the college boy or girl. They may have tops of perfectly plain linen and cords or narrow frills of a contrasting color, or each one may be embroidered, one with the college emblem, another with the recipient's initials, a third with the class colors and a fourth with a fraternity design.

Cover For Medicine Glass.

A pretty Christmas trifle utilizing scraps of fine white linen is a cover for a glass of milk or one containing medicine that has perhaps to stand some time. First a square of glass is cut the required size, then two pieces of linen a little larger than the glass, on one of which is embroidered a spray of small flowers or two or three single larger blossoms, as pansies, according to fancy. The two pieces are sewed together and bound with ribbon matching the embroidery, and into this case the glass square is slipped. This little device would as a gift bring much pleasure to a sick child or even adult.

Equally acceptable, too, will it be to those taking the milk diet.

Christmas Hints.

Corset bags of ribbon are not new, but hose with outside pockets, containing suspenders and corset laces, are a novelty.

If there is a baby to be remembered, a little sack of soft cashmere is a suggestion. It could be made in nightingale style.

Ribbon corset bags made on the order of the toothbrush case minus the rubber lining would be a welcome gift when dainty sachet pouches are sewed up to the bottom.

A MISSION PILLOW.

Christmas Gift Design Which Carries Out Stained Glass Pattern.

So popular has become the mission style of furniture that now there is a real demand at Christmas time for sofa pillows in the same type of design.

Herewith is given a very effective design in this style that is sure to meet the hearty approval of embroiderers who desire an odd mission cushion.

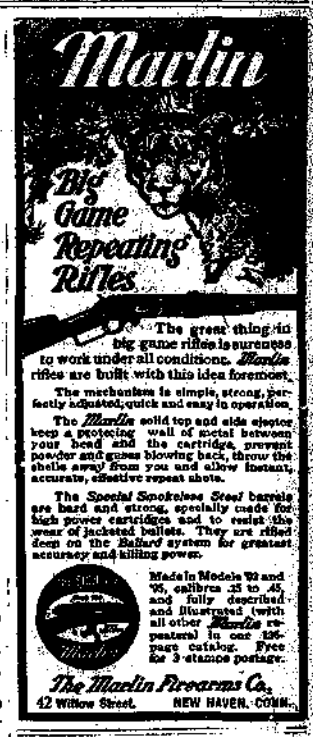
It is known as the stained glass design and is worked out in the reds, blues, yellows and greens.

Two yellow petals, two blue petals and one red petal are used in the embroidering of the flower.

The buds are worked in red, with cross section in the center worked in green at the top and bottom of the pillow, and in red with the cross sections in blue at the sides. The stems and dots are worked in red.

The design is padded and then worked in the satin stitch. If desired, it may be worked in outline stitch only, but will not be nearly so effective.

If it is not desired to have colors, then the pillow may be prettily worked out in tan shades on natural colored linen, or the delft blues may be used.



A prettier design for a Christmas pillow can hardly be imagined.

"And what is the height of your ambition now?" asked his friend.

THANKSGIVING.

With the mills and factories all working on full time, with orders enough ahead to insure continuous work, and the mild weather so far this Fall, our residents as a majority have ample cause for thankfulness. As compared with a year ago the outlook is most promising for prosperity and a winter without cold or hunger pangs unless the individual, through uncontrollable appetite, laziness or disease, is unable to take advantage of wage earning privileges. Throughout the land industrial conditions are vastly improving with each day, and Fulton is sharing in the general return to prosperous conditions. Perhaps the twelve-month just passed has brought much to regret to many of us, but we can at least rejoice this Thanksgiving season in contemplation of the fact that matters were at no time as bad as they might have been.

"They called us sea-sick scullery maids and we called them ass-marines," and "Tell it to the marines," are sayings which express the proverbial antipathy between the sailors and their ancient jailers. This antipathy will now become a fading memory, for owing to a recent order of the President their antagonism must come to an end, because they will no longer be in scrapping distance. Marines have been banished from the men-of-war and some say any and all service, for it is difficult to understand why they should exist as an organization separate from the Navy or Army. Possibly they may be absorbed in the Army, rank and file, though it is difficult to understand how the rank can be amalgamated, considering the jealousies of West Point.

There is a growing spirit of skepticism with reference to the perfection of our public schools, and it has come none too soon. The profuse cant of the Fourth of July orator and his gushing, unqualified praise of the American educational system in public schools, has been too long unquestioned and uncriticised Dr. Scott, of the Boston Normal School, has recently brought a stream of criticism upon his head by asserting that no woman should be permitted to teach after she is thirty years old, unless she is married. His argument is that if a woman is unmarried at this age, she is an embittered woman whose "pyschic content," to speak after the manner of Boston, is reflected upon her school in a sour, crabbed disposition, that makes her teaching a failure.

The educated, well-informed and well-read man of modern times has no opportunity for ennui. The events of the world are daily spread before him. What with the bloodless revolution in Turkey; a presidential election in the United States; the turning of the French worm on its German tormentor in the Casa Blanca affair; the humiliation of the most arrogant of European rulers in the eyes of the world, and even in the eyes of his hitherto subservient subjects; the almost simultaneous demise of the real and the puppet ruler of China. Here is matter for study, thought and contemplation.

According to a New York merchant, undarned socks are a sign of prosperity, inasmuch as women will not darn the hose of themselves and their liege lords as long as they have the price for a holeless pair in their possession. And since the election of a Republican president the demand for hosiery has advanced with a bound, while there has sprung into existence a most depressing slump in the sale of darning cotton. Verily, the signs of the times all point to a return of prosperity

The bill being framed by the committee from the Board of Supervisors, providing that the office of Sheriff be placed upon the salaried list, is a good one and should become enacted into a law at the earliest practical moment. The fee system throughout the country has fallen into ill repute owing to its abuse in many instances, and the system should be abolished.

Syracuse Has New Postmaster.

The name of Mr. William Cowie has been recommended to President Roosevelt for the postmastership of Syracuse, and his speedy appointment when Congress meets is expected. It is thought that Mr. Cowie will this week take up the duties of the office, which position has been vacant since the death of Postmaster Bruce, several months ago. Mr. Cowie is 62 years of age and has been a prominent Republican of Syracuse for many years.

COUNTY COURT.

The November Trial Term of County Court opened in Oswego on Monday. Richard C. Carr, formerly clerk to the Board of Public Works of this city, plead guilty to grand larceny in the second degree and through his attorney, A. T. Jennings, asked the clemency of the Court. He furnished a receipt from the City Chamberlain showing that the money had all been paid back. It was accompanied by a resolution of the Fulton Common Council stating that they did not desire to have Mr. Carr further punished and also by a petition. This petition was signed by Thomas Hunter, J. J. Chauncey, Ex-Mayor Foster, Walter Bradley, President of the Board of Works; H. P. Allen, W. A. Butts, E. R. Redhead, F. B. Dilts, William Hunter, C. R. Lee, G. P. Wells, L. C. Foster, J. C. O'Brien, G. C. Webb, J. A. Foster and others.

Judge Stowell suspended sentence on Mr. Carr but read the law to him showing that if he should be brought into court within five years on any charge, the sentence, now suspended, can be enforced.

How to Cure a Cold.

Be as careful as you can you will occasionally take cold, and when you do, get a medicine of known reliability, one that has an established reputation and that is certain to effect a quick cure. Such a medicine is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It has gained a world wide reputation by its remarkable cures of this most common ailment, and can always be depended upon. It acts on nature's plan, relieves the lungs, aids expectoration, opens the secretions and aids nature in restoring the system to a healthy condition. During the many years in which it has been in general use we have yet to learn of a single case of cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used, which shows conclusively that it is a certain preventive of that dangerous disease. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

RUBBERHIDE BOOTS

Outwear Two Pairs

You take chances when you buy ordinary rubber boots with rubber soles.

They give only slight protection to your feet—a sharp stick or a nail may go through the sole at any moment. Then they are done for.

NOT SO with Rubberhide Boots. The Sock Oak sole outwears several rubber soles as well. That's why they are most economical for you to buy. Better for ditching, spading and all kinds of wet work. Absolutely water-tight, and, unlike other boots, always stay so. Your feet are dry all the time.

Resolable by any cobbler

Rubberhide Boots, with ordinary care, will outwear two pairs of ordinary rubber boots. If they should not, we agree to make good any difference in wear in money.

Last week he became so bold as to follow and seize women as early in the evening as 6 o'clock and his operations are not confined to any one locality. He was seen on Saturday near the Park and an hour later between Fourth and Fifth streets on Oneida street. Perhaps a plain clothes man could capture the fellow and have him sent over the road. It seems incredible that he should have run at large so long.

USEFUL PRESENTS.

Dainty Christmas Trifle For the Woman Who Sews—Ribbon Holder.

A sewing case of cretonne is always appreciated as a gift by the woman who does her own mending. The vivid colors of the cretonne and the grace of the design make it particularly attractive as a material for this purpose. The case illustrated may easily be made at home at a very small cost. A strip of cretonne is used for the outside of the case, and the inside is lined with silk harmonizing with the colors in the design. The sewing materials are held in place with straps of ribbon. At each end of the case are ribbons that tie it when not in use.

A most ingenious and convenient holder for the rolls of baby ribbon which are such necessary trifles in the wardrobe of the dainty woman has been devised and is so simply formed that it may be attempted by the merest amateur in sewing. When complete it resembles a very large spool of cotton, and the starting point is to cut two rounds in cardboard one inch larger in diameter than the roll of baby ribbon. These are covered on both sides with anything convenient, though white linen outside and white china silk on the inside is a suggestion.

MATERIALS REQUIRED:
One strip of cretonne.
One strip of silk.
One pair of scissors.
Four spools of cotton.
Four papers of needles.
Tape measure.
Yard and half of ribbon.
Stiletto.

CRETONNE SEWING CASE.

Around one end may be embroidered "A Friend in Need," on the other the initials going diagonally. Holes are pierced in the center of the cardboard and the rolls of ribbon and the ends secured under rosettes sewed on the cardboard where the holes are in the the cotton spool, the rolls in varied hue taking the place of the cotton. The hanger also starts from these points, and through a loop on one end of the spool a tiny pair of scissors is slipped, the other end holding a bodkin in a similar loop.

SET OF BLOTTERS.

Useful Holiday Gift That May Be Made at Home.

This simple and inexpensive gift can be made with little trouble. Buy a big sheet of gray blotting paper, dark gray preferred, the tiniest calendar that you can purchase and a yard of one-half inch holly red ribbon.

Cut twelve pieces of the paper 3 by 6 inches. Then, after taking the calendar apart, paste one month on the upper left hand corner of each blotter. Put the blotters in a pile, taking care to have the months of the calendars in order, and tie them together with the ribbon in the way shown in the illustration.

If you wish, you can make an envelope of cardboard, provided it is thin enough, after the patterns of any envelope in the house, and print in the upper left hand corner in gilt letters "Greeting to a Friend." Place the blotters in this, and you have a very attractive and useful present.

Waist Protectors.

One of the simplest and at the same time one of the most appreciative gifts which one can make a girl is a waist protector to slip over the closet hanger which holds her fancy waists.

It is the easiest thing in the world to make.

Take a square of figured silk, silkoline or any pretty, light material, cut a hole in the center large enough to slip easily around the collar of the waist and finish around the edges with some pretty white lace.

Rosettes of narrow satin ribbon tacked on the corners will add to the dainty effect.

Lining is not advised, as this would make the protector too heavy for delicate waists.

Nickel Bread Trays.

Quaint and ornamental for the table are the nickel bread trays in old colonial design, showing fluted and beaded borders in highly polished finish. These trays are somewhat boat shaped and show ornamental effects in pierced work.

Appropriate Motto Cards.

Motto cards have come into great prominence as Christmas gifts. Popular quotations illuminated with elaborate floral garnitures printed on large cards and furnished with rings by which to suspend them are 25 cents each.

Jane Ward's Thanksgiving

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright, 1906, by American Press Association

JANE WARD bent over her knitting, her wrinkled face puckered into harsh lines that belied the mild brown eyes behind the steel bowed spectacles. Jane's chair was drawn in front of the stove, and her clicking needles kept time to the ticking of the big clock.

Suddenly the door opened, and another woman entered. She was tall and thin, with scanty dark hair strained away from her forehead.

"Howdy do, Jane Ward?" she said in a deep masculine voice, seating herself in the Boston rocker, where she could stare into Jane Ward's face. "I thought I'd run in and see what preparations you was making for Thanksgiving this year."

Jane Ward looked up. "I ain't making none," she said, with a little snap of her lips, "and you know it, Esther Pike. You know I ain't keeping Thanksgiving any more."

"You're tempting Providence, Jane," returned the other woman succinctly.

"Tempting fiddlesticks!" snorted Jane contemptuously. "I kept Thanksgiving for thirty years, and you've et with me often enough to know that I kept it well!"

Esther Pike winced. "There ain't no denying but you set a mighty liberal table, Jane," she said hastily. "What I meant was that it does seem dreadful wicked for you to set up and say you won't keep no Thanksgiving when every soul in Upper Village is laying out to have something. Even the darkies down in the Patch are"—

Jane Ward arose and straightened her little figure. She pointed a shining needle at Esther Pike, who wriggled as though she were impaled upon its end. "How many years is it since I kept Thanksgiving, Esther Pike?" demanded Jane.

"Oh, four or five, I guess," replied Miss Pike reluctantly.

"Ain't it ever since my son Asa was lost at sea?" quavered Jane Ward.

"Yes—for goodness' sake—yes. Of course I know it, Jane. I didn't mean no harm." Miss Pike was visibly alarmed at Jane's strange manner.

"Ain't you been here every Thanksgiving eve to ask me if I was going to keep Thanksgiving?"

"Yes," returned Esther as faintly as her booming tones would allow.

"What is it you're trying to find out, then?" demanded Jane Ward harshly. "Do you think I'm going to keep Thanksgiving just because you come and tell me I'm flying in the face of Providence if I don't? Providence! Humph!"

Esther Pike paled and rose to her ungainly height. "I guess I'll be going, Jane Ward," she said sourly. "I ain't partial to visiting blasphemers!"

Jane sat down in her chair again. "Well, Esther, by the time you've made the round of Upper Village and told everybody that Jane Ward's a blasphemer it'll be time to get home and set your own pot a-biling!"

The door slammed sharply, and Jane Ward, bending over her knitting, felt the hot tears dropping on the blue sock. She was thinking of that Thanksgiving eve five years before, when she had watched for Asa's return. The pantry was groaning with toothsome viands. Asa's favorite pies stood in a row on the shelf, and Asa's cookies and Asa's doughnuts awaited him in deep, cool pots. The turkey was stuffed and waiting, the cranberry sauce molded in the best glass preserve dish.

THE DOOR WAS FLUNG OPEN AND—

Asa's room was warmed and waiting. His slippers stood before the fire, where the Boston rocker awaited his tired body. The great fire on the hearth reflected all these things and shone on Jane's tired, eager face, watching at the window, when Captain Smith came halting up the path and told her. The gale, a man overboard, Asa Ward—that was all. The bluff old captain went away, and Jane Ward, in a fury of grief, devastated her larder and threw the viands to the fowls. Jane lived alone after that, her stony resignation broken by occasional fierce bursts of grief. Never after that night did Jane Ward keep Thanksgiving. She took a fierce delight in fasting on that particular day that was set apart for thanksgiving.

Twilight gathered in, and Jane lighted a lamp and made a cup of tea. Then she got out some apple sauce and bread and butter and ate her supper. After that was over she washed the dishes and sat down again before the fire. Somehow tonight seemed different from former Thanksgiving eves. There was a reminder of that other night when Asa did not come in the low wail of the wind through the oak trees, and the swishing of the locust boughs against the roof sounded like the rush of waves.

There was a fiercer blast, a rising shriek, and Jane arose and clasped her hands to her ears. A shudder of superstitious horror crept over her, and her skin seemed to shrink as the little house rocked on its foundation. Then the wind subsided as suddenly as it had arisen and there was dead stillness.

Jane sank trembling to her knees. "Lord, whatever has come over me?" she whispered brokenly. "I am weak as a baby to be scared by a squall like that." She knelt there for a long time with closed eyes, and then gradually there came a great peace into her worn face. Her lips moved noiselessly, and Jane Ward prayed.

"I'll do what I can to give a feast to some poor soul," murmured Jane as she got upon her feet. "God forgive me for a sinful woman."

She lighted a lantern and, tying a shawl over her head, went out into the night. It was moonlight, and the path to the chicken house was a broad, white way, down which her little figure walked, leaving a grotesque, black shadow behind it. The air was crisp and sharp, and there was a light wind—a singular change from the sudden squall that had so unnerved her.

Jane pushed the door open and looked around. The large white rooster, the youngster of the flock and the apple of Jane Ward's eye, grumbled at the crowding hens about him. He sat invitingly near the door. If he had been in the topmost corner of the roost Jane Ward would have captured him that night. She had never killed a chicken in her life—the sight of blood made her faint—yet somehow she slew the white rooster, and while his headless body still contorted before her horrified eyes she returned to the roost and sacrificed yet another victim.

SHE SLEW THE WHITE ROOSTER.

She carried them to the house. She built a roaring fire in her cooking stove; she picked, cleaned and washed the chickens and set them in the cool pantry. She went to the cellar and brought up a pumpkin. That night she made pumpkin pies; she made cookies and doughnuts; she got apples from the garret and cider from the cellar.

She built a fire in the drum stove in Asa's room. She aired his bed and warmed it with the old brass warming pan. She made all ready for the coming of some one as she had made ready five years ago.

It was 3 o'clock when Jane Ward went to bed, and the tired old woman fell immediately into a deep, sound sleep from which she did not awaken until the morning was well advanced.

With unabated vigor Jane prepared her Thanksgiving dinner. The chickens were roasting in the oven; the table in the dining room was spread with a spotless cloth; the blue and white dishes reflected the firelight; the sun shone on the glass dishes of currant jelly and turned them into glowing rubies. Above all was the Thanksgiving atmosphere.

Esther Pike tramped heavily into the kitchen and stopped short at the sight of Jane Ward. Jane was peeling vegetables. There were great golden turnips, silver skinned onions, crisp white potatoes, crackling spicy celery.

"Good morning, Esther Pike," said Jane kindly. "I was afraid I'd scared you away for good and all last night. I hope you don't mind what a disappointed old woman says out of the hardness of her heart."

"Land, no!" ejaculated Esther cordially. "I am dreadful pleased you've come to your senses, Jane Ward! Going to have company to dinner?" she asked eagerly.

"I don't know," returned Jane soberly. "I'll have whoever the Lord sends. My table is waiting for the hungry and the needy."

"Land, it makes me hungry to smell all your good things," returned Esther meaningly.

"You staying with Ann?" asked Jane abruptly.

"Yes; we're going to have roast pork and apple sauce."

"That ain't to be despised," returned Jane.

"I thought you wasn't going to keep Thanksgiving no more, Jane Ward," said Esther presently, with a keen glance at the old woman.

"I wasn't going to till I got to thinking things over, and I made up my mind I would keep it every year," said Jane slowly, while her faded eyes filled with tears.

"Well, I guess I'll be going along. Seems too bad if nobody comes along. You'd have a lot of victuals on your hands," said Esther, rising and peering into the well filled pantry.

"I guess somebody 'll come along before night," replied Jane. "If there don't, the food won't be wasted."

"Maybe I'll come over tomorrow," remarked Esther, with a flickering hope in her eyes. "Perhaps I'll come over and bring my knitting."

"Do," said Jane, without enthusiasm.

She carried an armful of wood upstairs and filled the drum stove in Asa's room. It made a cheery roar as the flames leaped up the chimney, and Jane listened with a rapidly beating heart. It did seem as though Asa must be coming. Everything bore such an old familiar look. The cold loneliness of the later years had slipped away, and it needed only the firm, light step bounding up the stairs to wipe out all those bleak years and bring back the warm, beautiful past.

Captain Smith rolled down the street toward the station. He turned once and watched a rabbit scuttling across the road, and his mouth watered as he thought of the delectable rabbit pie that was browning in the Smith oven at that moment.

When he faced about again he stared into the eyes of a stranger—no, not a stranger, but a ghost, for the sea does not give up her dead. So it must be a ghost!

A hard hand on his shoulder, a familiar voice ringing in his ears—the hand and voice of Asa Ward! But Asa Ward was dead!

"Hello, captain! Tell me how my dear old mother is. I haven't heard a word in years, and I've written, God knows, I have written"— Tears fell down Asa Ward's bronzed cheeks and splashed upon the hands which were tightly clasped in Captain Smith's.

"She's all right, boy," wheezed the captain joyfully, now fully convinced that the substantial hands he held were not ghostly ones, "but she's grieved herself most to death. It will be a great shock to her!"

"Take me to her now, captain, or, stay, is she still in the old place?"

"Yes. But where have you been? We thought you were lost!"—

"I was picked up by a southbound tramp steamer and carried around the cape to the south sea islands and China. I got a job on a Yangtse river steamer and wrote mother regularly. I don't know why she did not hear. Then I wrote to you, and I have been afraid to come home for"— His voice broke.

"Run along, lad. Jane Ward is waiting for you. Joy never kills. Make haste."

Jane Ward surveyed the table wistfully. It was set now with all the viands, and no stranger had come to partake of them; she felt no appetite for them herself. She turned away with a sudden revulsion of feeling and a sharp return of the old bitterness.

At that instant the gate clicked. There was the light, firm step on the path, the door was flung open, and—

"Asa! Asa! Asa!" she cried joyfully "The Lord is very good!"

The Diving Bell.

The celebrated philosopher Aristotle speaks of a diving bell which was put over the head of the diver, but there is no proof of the use of the bell in ancient times. John Juesnier, who lived in the early part of the sixteenth century, makes the earliest mention of the practical use of the diving bell in Europe. In all probability the first real practical use of the diving bell was in the attempt at rescuing the treasures of the Spanish armada off the English coast, 1590 and on.

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. All the Gold IN GEORGIA Could not Buy-

Reding, Ga. August 27, 1906.
Messrs. E. C. DeWitt & Co.,
Chicago, Ills.
Gentlemen:—
In 1897 I had a disease of the stomach and bowels. Some physicians told me it was Dyspepsia, some Consumption of the Lungs, others said consumption of the Bowels. One physician said I would not live until Spring, and for four long years I existed on a little boiled milk, soda biscuits, doctors' prescriptions and Dyspepsia remedies that flooded the market. I could not digest anything I ate, and in the Spring 1903 I picked up one of your Almanacs as a poor emaciated Dyspepsia wreck will grasp at anything, and that Almanac happened to be my life saver. I bought a fifty cent bottle of KODOL DYSPEPSIA CURE and the benefit I received from that bottle ALL THE GOLD IN GEORGIA COULD NOT BUY. I kept on taking it and in two months I went back to my work, as a machinist, and in three months I was well and hearty. I still use a little occasionally as I find it a fine blood purifier and a good tonic.
May you live long and prosper.
Yours very truly,
C. N. CORNELL.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Of Interest To Women.

To such women as are not seriously out of health, but who have exacting duties to perform either in the way of household cares or in social duties and functions which seriously tax their strength, as well as to nursing mothers, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has proved a most valuable supporting tonic and invigorating nervine. By its timely use much serious sickness and suffering may be avoided. The operating table and the surgeons' knife, would, it is believed, seldom have to be employed if this most valuable woman's remedy were resorted to in good time. The "Favorite Prescription" has proven a great boon to expectant mothers by preparing the system for the coming of baby, thereby rendering childbirth safe, easy, and almost painless.

Bear in mind, please that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is not a secret or patent medicine, against which the most intelligent people are quite naturally averse, because of the uncertainty as to their composition and harmless character, but is a MEDICINE OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, a full list of all its ingredients being printed, in plain English, on every bottle-wrapper. An examination of this list of ingredients will disclose the fact that it is non-alcoholic in its composition, chemically pure, triple-refined glycerine taking the place of the commonly used alcohol, in its make-up. In this connection it may not be out of place to state that the "Favorite Prescription" of Dr. Pierce is the only medicine put up for the cure of woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, and sold through druggists, all the ingredients of which have the unanimous endorsement of all the leading medical writers and teachers of all the several schools of practice, and that too as remedies for the ailments for which "Favorite Prescription" is recommended.

A little book of these endorsements will be sent to any address, post-paid, and absolutely free if you request same by postal card, or letter, of Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure constipation. Constipation is the cause of many diseases. Cure the cause and you cure the disease. Easy to take as candy.

Why He Did the Washing.

A man came up out of one of the little roof houses across from the woman's window with a big basket of clothes. He was followed by two small boys, carrying more clothes and clothespins. The man put the basket of clothes down and began to sort them out preparatory to hanging them on the line. The boys helped, handing him the clothespins and some small pieces, one at a time. They were a long while hanging out the clothes because of their awkwardness. It was evidently work they were unaccustomed to, but at last it was finished, and the boys went down into the little roof house, leaving the man on the roof. He stood for a moment looking at the clothes, then, going over to a parapet, sat down between two tall chimneys. The woman could see him from her window lean against one of the chimneys and by and by throw his arm across his eyes.

She found out afterward that his wife had died the week before.—New York Press.

Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup not only heals irritation and allays inflammation, thereby stopping the cough, but it moves the bowels gently and in that way drives the cold from the system. Contains no opiates. It is pleasant to take, and children especially like the taste, so nearly like maple sugar. Sold by all druggists.

A Wedding Present.

A widower in Scotland proposed to and was accepted by a widow whose husband had died but a month or two previously.

To celebrate the occasion he asked the widow's daughter what she would like for a present. She wanted nothing, she said, but being pressed to name something she replied:

"Well, if you want to spend siller you might put up a headstone to my father."—London Telegraph.

Ample Cause.

"What on earth possessed you to become engaged to Herbert?" a young lady asked her friend. "You don't love him an atom!"

"I know," was the candid reply, "but that horrid Jones girl does!"

Sea Roses.

The sea rose is a leathery looking creature which attaches itself to a stone at the bottom of the sea in its infancy and ultimately attains a size about three inches in length and an inch and a half in breadth. When quiet and feeding under water its top opens and blossoms into the semblance of a large pink rose, with petals fully an inch long, a really handsome object. As soon as it is disturbed, however, it shuts itself resolutely into its leather pod.

Kodol contains the same digestive juices that are found in an ordinary healthy stomach, and there is, therefore, no question but what any form of stomach trouble, indigestion or nervous dyspepsia, will yield readily yet naturally to a short treatment of Kodol. Try it today on our guarantee. Take it for a little while, as that is all you will need to take. Kodol digests what you eat and makes the stomach sweet. It is sold by all druggists.

A Doubtful Bag.

Salesman—Sorry we're quite out of game, but I can recommend the sausages.

Mr. Von Sharpeshooter—H'm, yes! But the wife would not believe I shot 'em.—London Half Holiday.

The Jawkins of Green Lane

A Boy's Thanksgiving

By FRANK H. SWEET
Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association

It was Thanksgiving day, and the boy was standing in the doorway watching papa and mamma get into the carriage. They were going away, though they did not want to go at all, and the boy had to stay at home, though he wanted to go. Things sometimes happen so!

Papa and mamma had to dine with Aunt Briggs because she was ninety years old and all alone, and Aunt Briggs did not like little boys. So papa and mamma looked very sad as they kissed their hands for goodby, and when the boy saw that he tried to look as if he liked to be left behind and smiled and kissed his hand to them very cheerfully.

But after they were gone he felt very solitary, so he thought he would go and feed his guinea pigs. He also gave bits of cabbage to the snails that lived down by the fence. He was sure they must be very hungry because the things they used to eat were all gone.

"Here is your Thanksgiving dinner, snails," he said gravely. "You are thieves, you know, because you used to eat the peas and the celery, but I suppose you get hungry just the same." The snails said nothing, but perhaps they were grateful.

Two boys were fighting for an apple out in the street, and presently the bigger boy got it away from the smaller one, and the smaller one cried. "Here, bi!" said the boy to the one who had lost the apple. "Wait a minute!" He ran to the kitchen and brought back a great, round, rosy apple three times as big as the one for which the boys had been fighting.

"Take this!" he said to the little boy. "Are you hungry?"

"Yes, I be!" said the boy, who was very ragged and still barefooted, although it was cold.

"But you will have your Thanksgiving dinner soon, won't you?" asked our boy.

The other nodded. "Salt fish and taters!" he said.

Our boy looked very serious. "No turkey?" he asked.

"Well, I guess not!" said the other, whose name was Timmy Jawkins. "Thank ye!" he added gruffly. "I'm goin' to give it to Sis. She can't eat salt fish."

And he went off, rubbing the apple on the sleeve of his grimy jacket.

The boy looked after him with a troubled face. He knew that this boy lived in a little yellow cottage down the Green lane, that he had five brothers and sisters and that his mother was very poor. He was still thinking about them when the bell rang for dinner.

He went in hand in hand with Cousin Sarah, and they sat side by side because they thought it would be more sociable.

"TAKE THIS!"

When Mary brought in the turkey it looked almost big enough to carry her instead. It was like a brown mountain, all smoking hot and smelling, oh, so good! And it puffed out its breast and held its arms and legs close to its sides and looked as proud as if it were still strutting majestically about the farmer's barnyard.

Cousin Sarah carved it and gave the boy the drumsticks, which he liked the best, and took a piece of the breast herself, but that seemed to make very little impression on the great turkey.

The boy was silent for a while, for he was hungry and the drumsticks were very good. Presently, however, he said, "Cousin Sarah, must people give thanks when they haven't anything to give thanks for?"

"Why, what do you mean, dear boy? Every one has something to be thankful for, and you have a very great deal."

"Yes, I know I have!" said the boy. "But must people be thankful for salt fish and potatoes when they haven't anything else at all?"

Cousin Sarah thought they must, for salt fish and potatoes were a very great deal better than nothing, and the boy returned to his drumsticks, finished the first and began on the second.

Presently he said, "Will you have some more turkey, Cousin Sarah?"

"No, dear, thank you! I have had quite enough."

The boy drew a long breath. "Then I can have the rest of the turkey," he said in a tone of satisfaction, "because mamma told Mary she might go to dinner with her sister after we were done."

Cousin Sarah looked at him in amazement.

"My dear little boy," she said, "what do you mean? The rest of this huge turkey? Why, you would die! Anyway you couldn't eat half of it."

"I don't want it myself!" the boy explained. "I want it to take to the Jawkins' because they have nothing but salt fish and potatoes, and I'm afraid they may not know that they ought to give thanks for that."

Cousin Sarah listened with interest to the boy's story about Timmy Jawkins, the red apple and the salt fish.

Then she rose and said: "You shall take the turkey to them, dear boy! I am sure it is just what your mamma would like. Only I think you will have to let me carry it for you, for it is almost as big as you are."

So Cousin Sarah took the turkey on its great blue platter, and the boy took the cranberry sauce in one hand and a dish of apples in the other, and off they went.

The people whom they met looked very much surprised to see a young lady carrying a huge turkey through the street, but Cousin Sarah didn't care in the least for that, but only thought how pretty the boy looked, trudging along with her, holding his cranberry sauce so carefully and looking round every now and then to see if she was all right.

So they reached the poor little cottage where the Jawkinses lived, and they stopped a moment outside the door to take a breath, for they had been walking fast.

They heard a child crying inside, and then a tired woman's voice said: "It's all there is, dear, 'cept taters. Try a tater, and then Timmy 'll give ye the pretty apple. Do now, Sissy, like a good girl. Doctor said you must eat, else you wouldn't never get well."

THE BOY MARCHED IN BRAVELY.

At this moment Cousin Sarah opened the door and stood holding up the great turkey, while the boy marched in bravely with his two dishes.

"Here is your Thanksgiving dinner!" he said, looking round at the six hungry faces which were clustered round the bare table. "You must give thanks, you know, even when it's only salt fish, but I thought you could give more thanks for turkey and cranberry sauce, 'cause I'm sure I could myself." And for the first time in their lives the Jawkins children did give thanks.

THANKSGIVING OF THE PESSIMIST.

By J. A. EDGERTON.

PESSIMIST sat on the small of his back,
Where pessimists sometimes sit.
He painted the universe all in black.
He frequently muttered: "Alas, alack,
The world is essentially out of whack!
There isn't a doubt of it."

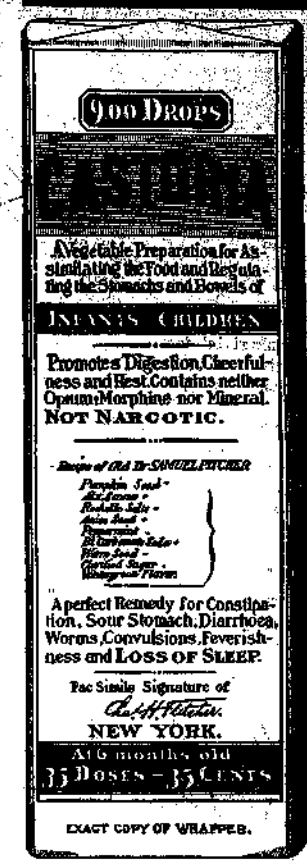
His grouch was the worst he had ever had,
Which was strong, as you may believe.
The thing that had gotten him in so bad
And had made him so temperamentally sad
Was the fact that every one else was glad,
For it was Thanksgiving eve.

"And whom are they thankful to?" he said.
"And what are they thankful for?
There is no God. He is long since dead.

And accident governs the world instead.
There is nothing but trouble and woe ahead
And more of the same in store."

He grew as bright as a cheerful tomb,
And his mood was a dismal blue.
He crammed himself with a jag of gloom
Till for anything else he had no room.
Yet strangely his dreams of a direful doom—
Not one of them ever came true.

There was nothing the matter with things below
In spite of the pessimist's pain.
He needed an actual grief to show
How flimsy was all his imagined woe.



It was only a pose, he assumed, you know,
And was due to a kink in his brain.

The thanks of a nation upon its knees
In chorus rose full and strong.
The pessimist's plaint was lost in these,

As the squeak of a mouse mid the organ keys
When God smites the worlds into melodies
And the stars sing their morning song.

The themes for thanksgiving are infinite,
But the greatest of all the list
Is simply the gift of an inward sight
To see the universe whole and right.
So thank the Giver of mental light
That you are not a pessimist.

What a Political Speaker Endures.

The political stump speaker has many amusing and many unpleasant experiences. A party of us went down into the heart of the east side of New York one night with a politician somewhat handicapped by his wealth and social position, who nevertheless elected to go to the doubtful district personally. At a street corner a bunting draped cart awaited him, and, climbing to the tailboard of this, he began telling the ragged audience in well rounded periods how they should vote and why. A few jeers began to crop from the tolerance of the crowd. The jeers gained volume. He was told to "Aw, shet up!" "Close your head!" "Say, give us a drink; your talk makes us t'irsty." Somewhat disconcerted, but still determined to finish his speech, he was continuing when something hurtled past his head and splashed gently on the floor of the cart. Another something and another followed, and every one was dodging decadent tomatoes until, it becoming impossible to hear a shout above the jeers and laughter of the voters, the horses were started forward out of the soft, red bombardment and the district left to its own political sins.—John R. Winchell in Metropolitan Magazine.

Bruises, scratches, sores and burns that other things have failed to cure will heal quickly and completely when you use DeWitt's Carbolized Witch Hazel Salve. It is especially good for piles. Sold by all druggists.

Spanish Nicknames.

One of the peculiar ways in which Spanish differs from English is in the names the language gives to all people with a certain infirmity or peculiarity. A blind man is referred to as el ciego, a man with but one eye is a tuerto, a pug nosed man is chato, one who is cross eyed is a bisojo, a cojo is a lame man, and a manco has but one arm. If he is humpbacked, he is a jorobado; if baldheaded, a calvo, and if his hair is very short he is a pelon. The feminine titles for the same classes are the same, with the exception that they end in "a" where the masculine terminate with "o." These short names are used most commonly. In fact, they are applied as nicknames in many cases, and especially among the lower classes persons are addressed or referred to only by these names.

Pleasant, sure, easy, safe little liver Pills, are DeWitt's Little Early Risers. Sold by all druggists.

A Little Paint Badly Applied.

The Journal des Debats in an article on "Napoleon on the Stage" tells why the play "L'Homme de Destin" was taken from the stage when its triumph was at the zenith. One evening, according to the story, the emperor, accompanied by his friend Duroc, went in disguise to the Porte St. Martin theater, where the piece was being performed. Eugene Chevalier appearing as the man of destiny. They bought a box, but had hardly entered it when the emperor broke forth in violent execrations against the "fool managers." It seemed that the decorators had left in the box pots of oil and paint, and into these the emperor had stepped. "Whd with rage," says the writer, "he rushed from the house and, to make matters worse, was recognized in the lobby. No paper mentioned the incident, but by order of the emperor the play was never produced again, and Chevalier never appeared again as the man of destiny—and all on account of a little paint badly applied."

Specific Directions.

The message was transmitted to the "cub" telegrapher. As written it read:

"Foundation under freight house needs attention at once."

As delivered to the general foreman the dispatch contained a rather startling bit of information. It read:

"Found a lion under freight house. Needs attention at once." To which he replied briefly:

"Feed the lion and notify the live stock agent."

Bad Luck.

"Mother," said five-year-old Jack, "how much older than you is father."

"Just thirteen years," replied the unsuspecting parent.

"Well, mother," seriously continued the child, "the next time you marry, don't marry a man thirteen years older than you. Don't you know it is bad luck?"—Delineator.

A Strong Pull.

Two men were having an argument as to their respective strengths.

"Why," said the first, "every morning before breakfast I get a bucket and pull up ninety gallons from the well."

"That's nothing," retorted the other. "I get a boat every morning and pull up the river."

You've got to stan' some pain
That's hard to bear, er otherwise

MASONIC FAIR.

Auspicious Opening and Record-breaking Attendance—Every Booth and Department Center of Attraction.

The various Masonic orders of the city may well be pleased with the auspicious opening of the Fair which is in progress in Church's Hall, First street, and which will continue through the remainder of this week. The Fair opened on Saturday evening with a record breaking attendance for the first night, the receipts from all sources being over $200. The contributors had been most generous and it is estimated that the value of the articles contributed would aggregate over $2,000. Dancing is enjoyed each evening after the older guests repair to their homes, and music by orchestra and band enliven the hours. Fun is found everywhere and every booth and department seems a center of attraction. Much credit is bestowed upon Milt J. Cranmer for his cleverness in arranging the detail for so enormous and successful an undertaking.

The prize winners on Saturday evening were James Flynn, who won a ton of coal donated by E. T. Munger; C. H. Gardner, who carried away a Masonic picture given by C. H. Hulett; Bernie Doyle, who won a pair of micrometers, the gift of F. A. Stafford, and Miss Anna Strain, whose door number, 1,142, won the ton of coal offered as a door prize.

The following comprise the various committees responsible for the existence of the Fair and the substantial sum which will be obtained therefrom for the lodges.

The soliciting committee from the Lodge, Chapter and Club, consists of E. E. Ames, Harry A. Allen, C. M. Allen, H. Bennion, H. Baldry, S. R. Baldwin, H. J. Baker, H. C. Beals, A. Loomis Baldry, W. G. SHOP EARLY.

The Times carries a liberal amount of advertising this week and the Holiday spirit prevails in most of the matter written by the merchants. They cordially invite you to shop early and they have a feast of good things ready to spread before you, and right now. Last year you recall you waited until the last week and you had to be satisfied with what the early shoppers had left. And, by the way, the early shopper is fast becoming in the majority because they have had such satisfactory demonstration of the old adage, "The early bird catches the worm."

Just place yourself in the position of the merchant and the sales-people for a moment and imagine how gratefully you would remember the one who bought early when there was time and assortment, as opposed to the feeling you will entertain for the individual who crowded in during those last few days before Xmas, when you had been working from 8 a. m. until 11 p. m., days and nights in the week, and then you had to listen to unpleasant comment because the assortment was not good and the best was sold.

This plea is for the vender and for the purchaser; a plea for mercy for the former and a suggestion of helpfulness for the latter. Your merchants have thought to prepare early for you and you should now avail yourself of the opportunity presented.

A NOTABLE SPEAKER COMING.

Dr. Homer C. Stuntz, Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal church, is to deliver an address at the State Street Methodist Episcopal church of this city Wednesday evening, Dec. 9. Dr. Stuntz was for some years a missionary in India, and was afterward the superintendent of the mission work in the Philippine Islands. He is considered one of the finest orators in Methodism. At the last General Conference of the church he was one of the most prominent candidates for bishop. His lecture will be free and a cordial invitation is extended to the public to attend.

This week V. C. Lewis calls your especial attention to two brands of smoking tobacco—The Carrick and Imperial Cube Cut. They win friends when used.

DEPLORABLE ACCIDENT.

The community was shocked on Friday when it became known that Charles Rawson, aged 42, and a very popular man with his associate, had been crushed to death in the gravel bed in Eighth street. The deceased came to this city from Minetto about two years ago and with Mr. Birnie Clark acquired the Rawson and gravel beds in this city. On Friday morning with seven workmen Mr. Rawson was engaged in blasting out gravel with dynamite when the cave-in occurred which caused his death. An over-hanging shelf of earth failed to loosen with the explosion and Mr. Rawson crawled into the pit to place a second charge when others noticed the mass quivering and called to Mr. Rawson. As he crawled from the hole the mass fell upon him breaking his back, crushing his head and instantly killing him. Coroner Marsh was called and the remains were removed to the home in North Sixth street from where the funeral services were held on Monday, the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle officiating. Interment was made in Mt. Adnah.

Resolutions of Respect.

Adopted on the death of Mr. Charles E. Rawson, by Fulton Camp No 9329, Modern Woodmen of America, of Fulton, N. Y.

Whereas, It has pleased a Divine Providence to enter our ranks and remove from our midst our beloved neighbor, Charles E. Rawson.

Resolved, That in his death this Camp loses an esteemed member, his wife a devoted husband; that it would in accordance with the amiable disposition of our departed neighbor, could he but know our sorrow to say: "Weep not for me when I shall fall asleep; what you call death, dear friends, is not the end; It is the dawn of bright, eternal day. Our life on earth is night; dark, starless, deep; and blind with sin we grope, till God shall send, the angel man calls death, to light the way;" and while lamenting our loss, we are not forgetful of those to whom he was nearer and dearer; then be it

Resolved, That our Charter be draped in mourning for thirty days, and that this testimonial be spread on our records, that copies of the same be forwarded to the wife of the deceased, and be published in the City papers.

Union Thanksgiving Services.

Union Thanksgiving services were held last Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the State street Methodist church. Despite the threatening rain an audience that filled the auditorium was present. Revs. Charles Olmsted, J. G. York and F. A. Miller assisted in the services, and the Rev. W. L. Sawtelle preached a most excellent sermon from the text—"I will bless the Lord at all times; His praise shall continually be in my mouth." In a very practical and helpful manner he presented the thought that not only should thanksgiving be rendered for past and present blessings, but that believing in the goodness and wisdom of our Heavenly Father our thanksgiving should also reach into all the experiences of the future, whatever these may be.

Miss Mariette Flint sang a solo—"Lest we forget," in pleasing manner. The offering was donated to the Salvation Army to be used for the worthy poor. At the close of the sermon a short but interesting prayer meeting, under the leadership of the Rev. J. G. York, was held.

Beware of Frequent Colds.

A succession of colds or a protracted cold is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh, from which few persons ever wholly recover. Give every cold the attention it deserves and you may avoid this disagreeable disease. How can you cure a cold? Why not try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy? It is highly recommended. Mrs. M. White, of Butler, Tenn., says: "Several years ago I was bothered with my throat and lungs. Someone told me of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I began using it and it relieved me at once. Now my throat and lungs are sound and well." For sale by E. A. Putnam.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

Thanksgiving was celebrated in the good old fashioned way hereabouts, family dinners and reunions being the order of the day. Most of the schools were closed Friday to allow teachers and pupils to recuperate.

The Shadow Social at Allan Osborne's was attended by about 75 persons and the net proceeds were $22.50. George Peckham acted as auctioneer and shadows sold as high as $3.50 apiece, which speaks well for the auctioneer as well as the shadow and much amusement was the result.

Miss Emma Ives spent last week with her grandmother, Mrs. Emma Crooks, in South Scriba.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Ives made a flying trip to Syracuse recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Bartlett are home from a two weeks' visit with relatives in Dakota.

Miss Wellwood, teacher in the Rowlee District, is on the sick list.

Fred Spink is home from a pleasant trip abroad.

Isaac Hale received word of the death of an aunt in Michigan.

Mead Osborne was a recent guest at Ernest Gibson's.

Miss Florence Austin was the guest of her aunt, Miss Mildred Austin, last Saturday.

Mrs. Minnie Crouk and children spent Sunday at Ed. Durfey's.

Earl Foster is erecting two large greenhouses adjacent to his residence, all of which will be heated with steam.

There was an attendance of forty-five at the Grange last Saturday and eight new applications were received and will be initiated on Saturday of this week. It will also be election of officers. Saturday the Grange will open at 1 o'clock instead of two.

Mrs. Lydia Osborne is the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Ernest Rowlee.

Mrs. Abner Lamb is home from Jersey City, where she accompanied her brother-in-law, Allan Austin, after the burial of Mrs. Austin here.

The apple dryers in this vicinity are about through with their labors and they certainly have cause to be thankful for the beautiful November weather which all have enjoyed. Many farmers have their plowing all done while few have done none.

The Grange Fair at the hall Dec. 11th is an assured success and the zeal with which each committee is doing their part is very gratifying. The admission to the fair will be 5 cents each and chicken pie supper 20 cents each. Children under 14, 10 cents each for supper while everything will be on sale from confectionery to millinery and vegetables. Don't purchase your Christmas gifts until after the fair as it will be the chance of a lifetime.

Good Cough Medicine for Children.

The season for coughs and colds is now at hand and too much care cannot be used to protect the children. A child is much more likely to contract diphtheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quicker you cure his cold the less risk. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the sole reliance of many mothers, and few of those who have tried it are willing to use any other. Mrs. F. F. Starcher, of Ripley, W. Va., says: "I have never used anything other than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children and it has always given good satisfaction." This remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Issued Every Wednesday at No. 66 South First street, Fulton, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 2, 1908

THE statement of Congressman Burton, which is understood to have the approval of President-elect Taft after their interview at the Hot Springs, presages opposition to Speaker Cannon's re-election in the House. The President-elect would doubtless like to avoid friction by advising Mr. Cannon indirectly that yielding on his part would avoid unpleasantness. The announcement of Mr. Burton is simply the first notification to members of Congress and to the public that there is friction or something more. Having taken the first step, it is difficult to see how a breach can be averted. It is said that the Speaker already has pledges of the majority for his re-election when the special session is called after the Fourth of March, but these claims are easily made and as easily refuted, and the matter cannot be decided except by an actual vote in the House of Representatives. In taking the stand that he has, President-elect Taft is again representing the President and the Roosevelt policies. In the last session of Congress, the Speaker was strong enough to block certain measures that were earnestly urged by the President. Again, at Chicago, the President was thwarted by the Cannon forces in platform-making and in the selection of the candidate for the vice-presidency. Speaker Cannon is a doughty opponent and he comes fresh from his district, triumphant and vindicated, after a hard struggle and a desperate effort on the part of Democracy and Organized Labor to defeat him.

It is now two or three months before the inauguration, and the President-elect is in conflict with the same elements that temporarily defeated President Roosevelt the last session of Congress. Mr. Taft is no doubt solicitous for real tariff reform. He is aware that if he fails to get it, it will be because of such opposition as is chiefly represented by four or five leaders in the House and two or three in the Senate. It is not necessary to mention names. The President-elect also knows that if the Rooseveltian policy of tariff reform is thwarted at the special session, he will not be able to make headway at the regular session beginning in December, 1909. The issue is plain. Speaker Cannon must have his way. There can be no satisfactory compromise, and if nothing shall be accomplished by the Republican Congress which has been returned with the distinct understanding that it represented the policies of Roosevelt and Taft, the second Congress will be controlled by another political party.

PRINCE CHUN, the new man behind the throne in China, is said to be a disappointment to the diplomatic corps, but it is more than possible that the diplomatic corps was not considered in his appointment. There is a homely maxim that "the hour will produce the man," and if there is half going on in China that is reported by missionaries and by the press, the renaissance of that kingdom is in progress, and it must be effected not by the regent, or by one strong man, but by many strong men.

THE Shah of Persia has had a great deal of trouble with that constitution which he attempted to grant to his country a couple of years ago, and he has now decided to withdraw it on the ground that it conflicts with the Law of Mohammedanism, which in Persia is a kind of synonym for conservatism. Why does not the Ways and Means Committee cut that tariff investigation short because it conflicts with the Law of Mohammedanism?

ONLY one vote was cast against Mr. Samuel Gompers as president of the American Federation of Labor at the Denver Convention. His election was as nearly unanimous as could be. Mr. Gompers has done better for himself in president-making than he was able to do for the Democratic candidate who was nominated at Denver.

The marriage of Miss Edna Halstead and Mr. William Diefendorf, both of this city, took place on Wednesday at the home of the bride's uncle, Mr. Mason Andrews, in West Broadway. The Rev. I. J. Wilmarth of Hannibal was the officiating clergyman and the immediate relatives of the young couple witnessed the ceremony.

On November 26, at the home of the bride's uncle, Mr. Charles Lanning in Volney, occurred the marriage of Mr. Otto Louis Steever and Miss Jeanie R. Hutchinson. The Rev. W. G. Bassett was the officiating clergyman.

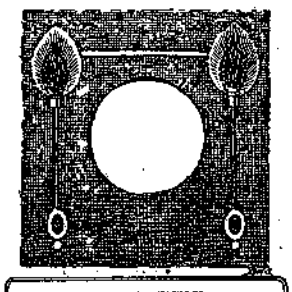
ATTRACTIVE TRIFLES.

Artistic Gifts That Take Little Time to Make.

The mission photograph frame is carried out in heavy green linen crash. The colors used in embroidering the conventional design are the dark shades of green and the bronze browns.

Pretty opera bags are always a welcome gift, and half a yard of handsome ribbon will make up into a most desirable receptacle for glasses.



Candle shades covered with pale pink baby ribbon in little crinkly loops are attractive and as presents would please most housewives.

Perfumed coat and skirt hangers are popular, and so are the ribbon cases that contain the glass tube hatpin holder.

Really beautiful utility cases that can be hung upon a wall or rolled for traveling are made from ribbon. To make such an article get half a yard of ribbon that is six inches in width. Turn down an inch wide hem at the top and along the bottom gather and sew on a thin piece of silk the same size. This is then divided into pockets and the upper edge shirred. Runners the length of the case, dividing it into sections, should then be put on the inside.

Through these articles of the toilet such as a shoe horn, button hook, manicure implements, etc., and a sewing outfit with pockets for needles, spools of thread and silk, scissors and all such necessaries are put. A little pincushion is set firmly at one end. The pockets receive bolts of baby ribbon, buttons and all the trifles that go to furnish a workbasket.

Cardboard boxes neatly covered with ribbon and furnished with three spools of baby ribbon in dainty colorings are a gift within the skill of the amateur seamstress. A loop should be added

MATERIALS REQUIRED.

One small linen doily.
Filo embroidery silks.
Sheet of cotton wadding.
Ten cents' worth of sachet powder.
Three yards of baby ribbon.

MISSION PHOTOGRAPH FRAME.

inside the cover to hold a couple of bodkins and a pair of tiny scissors.

A ribbon covered glove case is equally simple of construction. It should be interlined with perfumed cotton and fitted with a soft silk lining. A pretty finish is to turn back one corner, holding down with a bow of ribbon.

Another acceptable present that can be made by the artistic girl is a set of name cards, hand painted. These are sure to give pleasure if given to a woman who entertains largely.

Those in the form of floral wreaths cut out so they slip on over the edge of the tumbler are new; also dainty figures of women copied from some old painting and provided with pasteboard backs so they stand. These figures can carry big muffs as reticules that can be lifted and show a blank space for the name underneath, thus making them available later for framing when pasted to a flat surface and surrounded by a gilt mat.

College Flags.

College flags are quite simple to make for Christmas gifts, but require care and much precision in putting the letters on as well as in cutting them.

A good plan is to cut the letters from stiff cardboard and trace around them on the felt, afterward cutting with a sharp knife.

In mounting on the felt background paste them on with a very thin coating of photograph paste and couch around all edges with many strands of silk caught down at regular intervals with a single strand of the same color.

Couching means to hold the heavy cord or many strands of silk along the edge of the thing to be outlined and stitching across it and through the material with the single thread in the needle.

Handkerchief Case.

A handkerchief case is a pretty gift that can be made from ribbon by first cutting two pieces of cardboard into heart shapes. These hearts are covered on both sides and form the bottom and the cover, respectively.

The broad flowered ribbon used is gathered on both edges, one of which is sewed to the heart at the bottom. Then a lining of plain soft silk is set in, and the edge of the ribbon is connected to the upper edge of the lining. A ruching of narrow ribbon trims the cover and a bow acts as a hinge. A loop answers the purpose of a lid lifter.

Gifts For Fifty Cents.

For the young man of the family sleeve buttons, silver pencil, coat hanger, sofa cushion cover, penknife, cigar cutter, leather collar box, satchel tag, linen table cover or a photograph frame for his room.

For little girl, dolls, games, workbox, skates, string of beads or a music roll.

For small boy, baseball, games, studs, face mask, penknife, stamp book, skates, books or a box of paints.

For smaller boy, train of cars, locomotive, skates, transparent slate.

Miss Bertha LaLonde will be pleased to see her friends at G. B. Farley's jewelry store from now until Christmas.

It is difficult to realize that December is fairly commenced when we are without snow and the temperature demands Summer rather than Winter apparel. However, the ice king will undoubtedly make up in quality of cold what will be lacking in quantity, owing to the late Fall.

The Syracuse Herald of Sunday, in its society column, gave the following items which will prove of interest to many of our readers, Miss Bacon being a former Fultonian: One of the prettiest luncheons of the season was given on Wednesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Francis E. Bacon, at which the engagement of Miss Lucille Olivia Bacon to George Garrish Bailey of St. Johns was announced. The table was centered by an immense basket of pink roses, tied with dainty pink tulle and the candelabra were shaded in pink, while the hand-painted place cards were full blown pink roses. With the coffee a plate of tiny white tissue-covered packages was passed, each tied with lovers' knots of pink ribbon, and upon opening these the guests found small cubes of wedding cake and cards upon which were written the names of Miss Bacon and Mr. Bailey. An orchestra played during the luncheon. Seated with Miss Bacon were: Mrs. William Avery Groat, Miss Hazel Andrews, Miss Robera Hill, Miss Mabel Lowther, Miss Minnie Boyd, Miss Marian Chappell, Miss Margaret Shafer, Miss Clara Hoyt, Miss Maude Clark, Miss Norma Ackerman, Miss Mollie Wilkinson, Miss Maybelle Dosser, Miss Mary Nichols, Miss Georgianna Kline, Miss Ruby Roff, Mrs. I. Elbert Greene, Miss Leslie Girvin and Miss Alice Stansfield. * * * Mrs. William Avery Groat has issued invitations for a bridge whist on Wednesday afternoon in honor of her sister, Miss Lucille Bacon. * * * Miss Roberta Hill will entertain for Miss Lucille Bacon on Thursday afternoon.

Night school will open on Monday next.

Price of milk in Fulton will soon advance to 7 cents a quart.

Mr. James A. Foster presented the members of the fire department with a box of cigars on Tuesday, in recognition of their good work at the Knife Factory on Monday evening.

The hearing before the Common Council in the matter of John Young's removal as janitor of the City Hall, which was to have been heard last evening, was postponed until next Tuesday evening.

Mr. T. C. Giroux has purchased the interest and good will of the barber shop in the Waldhorn block, First street, where he will be pleased to meet his friends and customers. Every convenience found in a modern, up-to-date barber shop, will be found there.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Independent Telephone Company was held in the office of Manager Powell on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The directors elected were Messrs J. R. Sullivan, H. L. Paddock, A. W. Wiltsie, M. S. Powell, Edward Quirk, John Hunter, Charles R. Lee, F. A. Gage, D. E. Wadsworth, C. T. Currier, T. C. Sweet and A. H. Cowie. The only change made in the directorate from last year was the substituting of Mr. Currier for Mr. L. W. Emerick. The annual report showed good for the company and proved that satisfactory progress had been made during the past year. The officers will be elected later.

Passengers as Bouncers.

A passenger in a full railway carriage in England has a perfect legal right to push away any one else who tries to get into it. This decision was given at Marylebone police court when a man complained that he was pushed out of a carriage at Bishop's road station by another passenger, who said the car was full. "It is the duty of conductors," said the court, "to see that the trains are not overcrowded. They are perfectly entitled to use reasonable force to prevent any one from boarding cars when they are full. If they fail to avail themselves of this right the passengers are entitled to act for themselves."

A man recently entered a restaurant and ordered a steak. When the waiter served him with it the customer said, "I'm afraid you'll have to take it back, for I find I've come out without my"—

"Purse," of course interrupted the waiter.

"No," replied the man, "my false teeth!"

The Secret of Success.

The motto of success was given in this tale, told at a banquet:

A Swede among the miners in the west was noted for always striking pay dirt. His fellows thought that there must be some secret to the unusual success of the Swede and questioned him as to how he always succeeded in finding the spot where the gold cropped out.

"Vell, Ay don't know ef Ay can tell anytang 'bout dat," answered Ole. "Ay only know dat Ay just keep on diggin'."—Milwaukee Free Press.

TIMES have changed greatly since the pilgrim fathers instituted in Massachusetts the Thanksgiving observances which have since become annual customs throughout the land. But the heart of the nation has changed little since the good old days in New England when the hardy pioneers gathered their families about their rude but bounteous boards and praised the Almighty for a good harvest and the opportunity to live upon a free soil. Their descendants maintained the customs of Thanksgiving in their original spirit. Modern innovations have effected the observance of other national festivals, but it is the old fashioned Thanksgiving which reigns supreme in the hearts of the people today. In the big cities some may sit down in palatial hotels or fashionable restaurants to enjoy all kinds of luxuries with French names and prepared under the superintendence of a professional chef. But, no matter how many costly courses are served at such a feast or how many dollars are charged per cover, it never tastes as good to the average American as the mince and pumpkin pies and roast turkey and cranberry sauce made in old fashioned kitchens in the old fashioned way at the old homestead. How the mouth waters at the very thought of those pumpkin pies that grandma made! Grandma used to say: "Now, my boy, will you have mince, pumpkin or apple?" And, not being able to decide which to leave out, wanting all three, the answer would come from childish but hungry lips, "A little piece of each, grandma." And grandma, knowing a boy's failing, would cut those "little" pieces big enough to fill a very empty stomach.

Nowadays mince pie is looked upon as rather a strenuous diet for a people who are getting dyspeptic in their hurry to get rich. But grandma's mince pies never gave a boy a stomach ache unless, of course, he ate so much that his poor little abdominal organs were stretched to the bursting point. And some way a boy's stomach will take in a remarkable quantity of assorted food products before that point is attained. It seems to be especially elastic at Thanksgiving time. How it happens that a youngster of eleven or twelve can eat as much at Thanksgiving as a big 200 pound man could on ordinary occasions has never been satisfactorily explained. For instance, how is it possible for one boy to put in his stomach at one sitting and without a disastrous aftermath two drumsticks, with lots of dressing, potatoes and turnips and onions and celery and cranberry sauce ad libitum, marmalade and quince jelly, lemon and apple and mince and apple pie, cheese, apples and oranges, nuts and cider? But anybody who has attended the reunions at the old homestead knows that this is no extraordinary feat for a healthy youngster. The multimillionaire whose digestive organs have been impaired in the feverish race for the almighty dollar wishes at the Thanksgiving feast that he could eat like that again. But, alas, there is a fatal antagonism between the ways of the simple life and of high finance, and he who chooses the latter must forfeit the humbler but more satisfying pleasures which go with a mode of living based on the old fashioned plan.

Really, now, what made the meals served at the old homestead so good? Was it the cooking alone, or was there something else, some peculiar appetizer that one does not have in these days? To be sure, the mothers and grandmothers on the farms were splendid cooks, and they are still. On that subject they can't learn much from the Roosevelt farm life commission. But if they were to serve exactly the same food, mince and pumpkin pies and all, cooked in exactly the same way at some other place than the old homestead, probably the peculiar flavor of olden time would be gone. The cooking had a good deal to do with it, but it wasn't all. There was the healthy farm life—lucky are those that have it still—and there was the vitality that chased away the germs folks have to fight so much if they live in cities. And, then, it was the old homestead. Nowhere else could anything be so good. The man or woman who has no memories of an old home, the dwelling place of father and mother, of grandfather and great-grandfather perhaps, he that home in country or city, has missed some of the fondest and most sacred associations of life.

Backward, turn backward,
O time, in your flight!
Make me a child again
Just for tonight.

These are the lines that recur on the eve of the Thanksgiving festival, especially if, as with so many, there is an old homestead to go to now.

CARMACK A GREAT WIT.

Assassinated Ex-Senator One of South's Most Brilliant Representatives.

"When Robin James Cooper, son of Colonel Duncan Cooper, shot to death in the streets of Nashville ex-Senator Edward W. Carmack he shattered the most brilliant brain in Tennessee, he ended the life of the most brilliant man the south has sent to the senate these twenty years," remarked a senator who knew Carmack well.

In all probability Carmack was the wittiest man who ever entered the United States senate. His wit was not forced, as the wit of so many congressional humorists is.

When Senator Taylor ran for Carmack's place in the senate ex-Governor Benton McMillin, having gone to Mexico for a few months' vacation, returned to Tennessee with the announcement that he was out for Carmack's seat, that his health was fine that he had taken a bath every day and sometimes twice a day and was in great shape physically. This report was carried to Carmack for a reply.

SENATOR CARMACK AND SCENE OF SHOOTING.

"I am doomed," said Carmack. "A hatred for me that would cause Benton McMillin to take a bath every day, let alone twice a day, must be as bitter as fate and as unrelenting as death."

Ex-Senator Carmack's reputation among his colleagues, however, did not rest on mere wit. On both sides of the senate he was regarded as one of the most capable, thorough, solid men that the south has ever sent to congress.

Pagopago.

Pagopago is on the route from San Francisco to Auckland, from Valparaiso to China and from Panama to Sydney. It is about 2,000 miles from Australia, about double that distance from the Philippines and about 5,000 nautical miles from the Pacific coast and San Francisco. In all respects it is an ideal base for almost any naval operations this country may find necessary in the south seas or in the orient and could answer its purpose no better if it had been made to order.

'Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

AN INGENIOUS SWINDLER.

The Daring Scheme That Was Worked by a German Doctor.

Near a small village in one of the lake states lived a western millionaire in seclusion with his little daughter and a few servants. The child was afflicted with a rare cerebro spinal complaint, a most unpleasant manifestation of which was a frequent hiccough, and eminent physicians, both in America and Europe, had pronounced the case organic and incurable.

Later there came to live in the village a widow with a little girl affected similar to the millionaire's daughter. This child was a delicate, flower faced creature, wistful from the isolation that must have been her sad lot, and the peculiar bark-like hiccough which she made at once attracted the millionaire's attention, and, being a big hearted if rather ignorant man, he gave the mother employment about his home and showered the afflicted child with presents.

Perhaps four months after the widow's advent an eccentric German doctor settled in the village, and, his services being sought by the widow, he gave her child treatment, with the result that it was completely cured.

The millionaire immediately sought to place his own daughter under the German's care, but the latter flatly refused to take the case. He was a Socialist of a violent type and would have nothing to do with a man whose wealth exceeded the sum that he had fixed upon as the lawful limit of material possession.

Finally, however, after the father had patiently borne the grossest insults the German agreed to give the afflicted child treatment on condition that the other would first deed over a large tract of land in Texas for a Socialist colony and pay him for his fee a sum little short of $50,000. This the millionaire did, but as soon as the doctor had cashed the check he disappeared with the widow and her child, and the wealthy man realized that, blinded by paternal love, he had been made the victim of an ingenious swindle.

The flower faced girl of the widow had been taught to simulate a disease, and the German was no doubt her father. He was subsequently located in Buenos Aires, but he injured man, not wishing his daughter's affliction published broadcast, dropped the prosecution.—

The Russian Joke Teller.

Story telling and jesting have always been counted the favorite amusements of semibarbaric people. To the first we owe the "Arabian Nights" and to the second the clowns, who were formerly the appendage of all great houses. In Russia the paid joker still flourishes, and the people pay so much an hour to listen to his jokes and witticisms. He provides himself with two or three hundred tickets, and, mounting a sort of rostrum, he announces that he is going to regale his audience with choice tidbits of mirth provoking lore. He begins selling tickets at a penny each, and when he has sold enough to warrant his beginning he turns himself loose, and the audience remains spellbound by his humorous stories for an hour or two. A recent traveler who saw a number of these jokers in St. Petersburg says, "I listened to them several times, and, although I could not understand one word the joker said, I was sure from the way the audience greeted his stories with roars of laughter that the jokes were above the average."

Adam, Eve and Some Apples.

How many apples did Adam and Eve eat?

Some say Eve 8 and Adam 2, a total of 10. Others say Eve 8 and Adam 8 also; total, 16. But if Eve 8 and Adam 82, the total will be 90. Now, if Eve 81 and Adam 812 the total would be 893. Then if Eve 8 11st and Adam 812 the total would be 1,623. Or, again, Eve 814 Adam, Adam 81242 oblige Eve, total 82,056. Though we admit Eve 814 Adam, Adam, if he 8181 242 keep Eve company; total, 8,182, 056. All wrong. Christmas Hints For Santa Claus' Helpers—An Embroidered Pincushion—Doily Sachet and Other Presents Easily Made.

Any of the gifts pictured in this column may easily be made in an evening.

The pincushion shown is worked out in scrim and decorated with empire wreaths in shaded green ribbon.

The sachet shown can easily be made out of a small doily, which may be embroidered in any appropriate flower.

EMBROIDERED PINCUSHION.

MATERIALS REQUIRED.

A half yard of white linen scrim.
One bolt of empire green baby ribbon.
One-half yard each of two lighter shades of ribbon.
Two yards of clumy lace.

The sachet pads are held in place by baby ribbons harmonizing with the embroidery tints.

A party bag that is decidedly unique resembles in shape a Chinese lantern.

Three yards of pompadour ribbon five inches wide were used in making it.

The ribbon was cut into six pieces of equal length, pointed at one end.

The pointed ends were sewed together, forming the full bottom of the bag.

A casing of white satin ribbon an inch wide was sewed around the bag eight inches from the top.

Into the casing thus formed was run featherbone, then covered with fancy stitches of pink and green rope silk matching in shade the figures of the ribbon.

The bag was drawn in the usual way, having a frill two inches deep at the top which was faced with white silk.

The featherbone ring keeps the bag in shape, so that when it is opened all its contents are visible, which in itself is a boon to any one who has searched in an ordinary workbag for some elusive article that cannot be found until the bag has been turned upside down and inside out.

This feature makes it an excellent model to be carried out in black ribbon for a convenient shopping bag.

The tea strainer pincushion is a useful article that needs no particular skill in its development. You buy the strainer and paint a simple flower upon

MATERIALS REQUIRED.

Pasteboard photograph frame.
Half yard heavy green linen crash.
Three skeins green silk.
Three skeins brown silk.

it, then fill with horsehair and secure this by a cardboard disk, covered with a bit of any bright silk, etc. Conceal the edge of the strainer with a frill of ribbon from one to two inches wide and tie a bow to the handle, by which the cushion hangs.

Gifts For Young Girls.

Set of collar pins.
Crescent brooch, set with pearls.
Gold bar tie pin.
Hand embroidered turnovers and cuffs.
All dainty neckwear.
Gold and silver pencils.
Overnight bags (leather).
Silver garter clasps.
Morocco workbox, fitted.
Ivory or pearl manicure set.
Good standard books.
Set of the American poets.
Engraved initial or school stationery.
Silver toilet utensils.
Cologne and toilet water.
Sofa pillows.
Bureau cushion and cover.
Down quilt.
Shirt waist box.
Silk for dress or blouse.
Hand embroidered handkerchiefs.
Bows for the hair.
Silver slipper buckles.
Carbon prints or photographs.
Good framed pictures.
Plain gold bracelets.

An Artistic Pillow.

An artistic looking sofa pillow may be made from coarse crash. In constructing it use two pieces about eighteen inches square—the front and the back. The former can be decorated with three large conventional tulips placed side by side and running to the top of the cushion. These are cut from leather, painted in natural shades and then glued to the cover. The deep reds and soft greens are most effective on the neutral background of crash, and this pillow will be decidedly handsome.

A Most Valuable Agent.

The glycerine employed in Dr. Pierce's medicines greatly enhances the medicinal properties which it extracts from native medicinal roots and holds in solution much better than alcohol would. It also possesses medicinal properties of its own, being a valuable demulcent, nutritive, antiseptic and antiferment. It adds greatly to the efficacy of the Black Cherry-bark, Bloodroot, Golden Seal root, Stone root and Queen's root, contained in "Golden Medical Discovery" in subduing chronic, or lingering coughs, bronchial, throat and lung affections, for all of which these agents are recommended by standard medical authorities.

In all cases where there is a wasting away of flesh, loss of appetite, with weak stomach, as in the early stages of consumption, there can be no doubt that glycerine acts as a valuable nutritive and aids the Golden Seal root, Stone root, Queen's root and Black Cherrybark in promoting digestion and building up the flesh and strength, controlling the cough and bringing about a healthy condition of the whole system. Of course, it must not be expected to work miracles. It will not cure consumption except in its earlier stages. It will cure very severe, obstinate, lung-cough, chronic, coughs, bronchial and throat troubles, and chronic sore throat with hoarseness. In acute coughs it is not so effective. It is in the lingering hang-on coughs, or those of long standing, even when accompanied by bleeding from lungs, that it has performed its most marvelous cures.

Prof. Finley Ellingwood, M. D., of Bennett Med. College, Chicago, says of glycerine:

"In dyspepsia it serves an excellent purpose. Holding a fixed quantity of the peroxide of hydrogen in solution, it is one of the best manufactured products of the present time in its action upon enfeebled, disordered stomachs, especially if there is ulceration or catarrhal gastritis (catarrhal inflammation of stomach), it is a most efficient preparation. Glycerine will relieve many cases of pyrosis (heartburn) and excessive gastric (stomach) acidity."

"Golden Medical Discovery" enriches and purifies the blood curing blotches, pimples, eruptions, scrofulous swellings and old sores, or ulcers.

Send to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., for free booklet telling all about the native medicinal roots composing this wonderful medicine. There's no alcohol in it.

CHARACTER SKETCHES.

The Blacksmith of Halls Corners.

Jack Dean M— came to Halls Corners back in the forties from Bethel, Conn., where he went to school with P. T. Barnum, the great showman. He said the latter, as a boy, was a tough proposition and had the faculty of getting into lots of scrapes and of getting out again.

Jack was a Democrat and studied the Albany Argus for thirty years. He and Mary Ann, his wife, were were thorough-going Methodists and gifted in exhortation. On Sunday he used to wear a white fur bell-crowned hat and a blue swallow tail coat with brass buttons. In the old red school house before the churches were built, I have heard him exhort like a house afire. His brother, Dr. J. B. M—, was a noted New York divine with D. D. attached to his name. He came to Halls Corners to visit Jack and preached a great discourse on Sunday. If Jack had taken a different course in life, had been ambitious and had acquired a good education, he might have become his brother's equal, as he had considerable natural talent. During the greater part of his life he remained faithful to his trust, but there were times when the trials and temptations were too many for him, and he would get sidetracked.

Occasionally family jars will sometimes affect a man's life. Jack was the Corners blacksmith and was a picture—with his begrimed countenance, rimless straw hat and short stemmed pipe with the bowl bottom side up—as he briskly shod horses and told stories. His house was a short distance from the shop and perhaps in the midst of a political discussion a prolonged call would cut the air from the front porch and reach the shop, when Jack would rush out hastily with a short, crusty, "What you want?" He would then turn, enter, and say to his customers that the old woman had got to have some wood, and that he had better go and cut some. Jack Dean had three good cronies at the Corners; the storekeeper, the shoemaker, and an old time Colonel; all good loyal Democrats. Their home surrounded the school house and if we went there after a drink of water Mary Ann at once washed the dipper after we had used it.

Nine Mile creek wound its way around through a flat back of the school house on Jack Dean's small farm. He was an expert angler for trout, and kept two or three poles set where they lived so I knew just where to fish and caught two trout that weighed a pound each. Mary Ann kept a large flock of geese on the creek flat. One Winter's forenoon John Dean with pan and lantern went down cellar after apples. It wasn't long before a most unearthly yell issued from that cellar, which aroused the neighborhood. Jack Dean had approached a bin of greenings, four or five feet high, and reached over into it, placing his hand in a good, stiff, steel, spring trap which made him exclaim, "Oh! Ouch!" in no still small voice. Mary Ann set the trap without Jack Dean's knowledge.

The old couple have long since passed to the majority and the old familiar scenes around their home have changed.

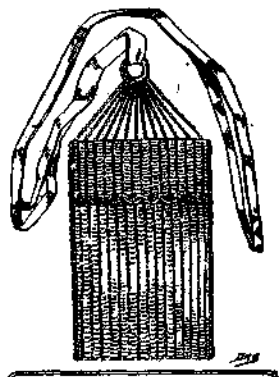
A BRIDGE PURSE.

A Useful Trifle to Carry When Playing the Game.



As there is no sign of the fascinating game of bridge losing its attractions for smart society, the bridge purse seen in the illustration will be an acceptable gift for the girl who likes to make her game more exciting by playing a penny or so a point. To make the purse commence with 36 chain, miss 1 chain, 1 double into every stitch, 1 chain turn.

Second row—1 double into 70 stitches (taking up in this and every row the two top threads), 2 chain, miss 2 double, then 12 double into the next 12 double, 1 chain turn.

Third row—12 double, 2 into the 2 chain of last row, 70 more double, 1 chain turn; repeat these last two rows until you have worked 26 rows altogether—that is, 13 stripes—then 1 double into end of stripe, 4 treble into next stripe *, 1 double into next stripe *, 1 double into next, 5 treble into next *, repeat three times, 1 double into next, 4 treble into next, 1 double into next (the last stripe), and fasten off—this is the right side—then fold together and sew up on the wrong side.

Then for the chain loops:

Cut off a length of silk about five yards and with it crochet 1 double on to the inside of the purse on the right hand side 25 chain, draw through the first loop of 2 chain, 2 double on to the ring, 25 chain, draw thread through the next loop, 2 chain on purse, and repeat until all the loops are filled (this requires a little care so as not to get the thread entangled, but it saves breaking off and threading in the ends every time); then do double crochet

MATERIALS REQUIRED.

One ball of crochet silk, any color preferred.
One yard and quarter of narrow ribbon to match silk.
One small ivory ring.
A few steel crochet needles.

to nicely cover and fill up the ring, fasten off and neatly run in the ends of silk. Fold the ribbon and sew on to the top of the ring.

GIFTS EASY TO MAKE.

Ideas For Christmas Any Needlewoman Can Carry Out.

Among the new fancy articles that are being made for Christmas is a folding hatrack which very much resembles a candlestick shade. A semicircle is first cut out of buckram or tailor's canvas, the outer edge being twenty-two inches and the height five inches. It can be covered with denim, colored linen or flowered cretonne and is bound with gold braid, which is glued on, or with silk braid to match the cover. Three clamps or hooks are sewed on the ends, and when these are fastened together the whole forms a cone on which the hat can rest on the table or the hatbox.

Another acceptable gift is a handmade medicine case, which would be found most useful when traveling. It is made of plain linen bound with red braid. Cut a piece of the linen 14 by 12 inches and fashion it so that it forms four well shaped flaps. Bind these with the braid. Then take about ten inches of red silk garter elastic and stitch it to the center of the linen in six different places. In the elastic put five two ounce bottles.

MATERIALS REQUIRED.

One-eighth yard of cretonne.
One-eighth yard of china silk.
One piece of cardboard.
One spool of black darning cotton.
One spool of white darning cotton.
Half yard of ribbon.

DARNING COTTON HOLDER.

These can easily be obtained from any druggist. The two cross flaps are finished with a button and buttonhole.

A darning cotton holder is a most welcome gift to a mother. Two oval pieces of cardboard, about four and a half inches long by two and a half inches wide, are covered with flowered cretonne or any odd pieces of silk and a lining of white. Two spools of darning cotton, one black and the other white, are placed between the two pieces and held there by a piece of ribbon, which passes through the center of the spools and the upper and lower pieces of cardboard, being tied finally in a large bow at the top

Hem one end, then fold over at the two-thirds mark and run a tuck along this line the same depth as the hem. Be careful not to do it on the same side as the end hem, as this forms the other side of the bag, through which the ribbon is run to draw up the bag when not in use.

Becky Sharp Needlebooks.

Quaint and pretty are the Becky Sharp needlebooks, completed at so little trouble, too, that they are well worth describing. Two pieces of cardboard five inches in diameter are covered first with perfumed cotton and then with silk or satin, not necessarily alike if the contrast is good, though the effect is better if the two forming the lining match. Overhand all around the circles and cover the stitches with a fine silk cord, then connect the two by means of a bow of narrow ribbon and sew in flannel leaves pinked on their edges for holding the needles. Tie ties are of ribbon, and at this stage very fine lace edged doilies the size of the needlebook are sewed invisibly to the outer parts of the covers. This is a dainty addition to the workbox as well as a useful one.

TREAT YOUR Horses Right

Employ Expert Horse Shoers--Preserve your Horses' Feet and They Will Do Better Work and Not Break Down

In this age of inventions it is self-evident that one of the impossibilities is that of shoeing horses by machinery. Otherwise some intelligent mechanic would have evolved such a machine.

This impossibility having been unsolved, we are confronted with the fact that this work must be done by hand and to be successfully done, the workman must be thoroughly conversant with the art of horse shoeing. It is an art to fit the shoe properly and preserve the horse's feet, for an amateur could ruin any horse in a very short time.

Being thoroughly conversant with horse shoeing and shoe fitting, having made it a study for many years, I have always made it a point in my shop to employ none but the best of horse shoers. Today I am paying my master horse shoer higher wages than any other journeyman horse shoer in Oswego county receives. The same is true in regard to all the mechanics employed in my shop. I have none but the best. Having the largest and best equipped shop in the county, I carry the largest stock of horse shoeing materials and can attend to all orders for work and finish them quicker and in better shape than any of my competitors.

SPECIAL WORK

In the matter of special work, I wish to say we make a specialty of treating contracted feet, horses that interfere, knee-knockers and horses that overreach and our prices are no higher than those charged at any other horse shoeing shops.

Sharpening Shoes

Every horse shoer is making extra preparations for "sharpening time," the harvest time of this business. This is the special time for owners of horses to watch the quality of the work done for there are more horses' feet ruined during that time than at any other time of the year.

Never-Slip Horse Shoes

Owners of horses can always find a full supply of Never-Slip Shoes and all of the different sizes of calks at my horse shoeing shop. I would advise those using them to watch these calks. Should the calks, by neglect, get worn down so that a wrench cannot grip them, it will be necessary to remove the shoe, heat them and punch out the old calks and this is expensive and can be avoided with a little care.

All our work is done in the most satisfactory manner. We give a guarantee of first class work or no pay.

Call and see me if you have horses and want them shod properly and have their feet treated in a scientific manner.

Look out for those cheap "bargain shops" that offer to do your work for less than the regular price. Remember, they will not give you any more than you pay for.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Drop by drop the offensive discharge caused by Nasal Catarrh falls from the back of the nose into the throat, setting up an inflammation that is likely to mean Chronic Bronchitis. The most satisfactory remedy for Catarrh is Ely's Cream Balm, and the relief that follows even the first application cannot be told in words. Don't suffer a day longer from the discomfort of Nasal Catarrh. Cream Balm is sold by all druggists for 50 cents, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren Street, New York.

Asked Too Much.

In R. F. Johnson's book, "From Pekin to Mandalay," the author tells the story of a poor Chinese scholar noted for his piety, who heard the voice of an invisible being who spoke to him thus: "Your piety has found favor in the sight of heaven. Ask now for what you most long to possess, for I am the messenger of the gods, and they have sworn to grant your heart's desire." "I ask," said the poor scholar, "for the coarsest clothes and food, just enough for my daily wants, and I beg that I may have freedom to wander at my will over mountain and fell and woodland stream, free from all worldly cares, till my life's end. That is all I ask." Hardly had he spoken than the sky seemed to be filled with the laughter of myriads of unearthly voices. "All you ask," cried the messenger of the gods. "Know you not that what you demanded is the highest happiness of the beings that dwell in heaven? Ask for wealth or rank or what earthly happiness you will, but not for you are the holiest joys of the gods."

Only a Misunderstanding.

Several years ago in a well known wholesale house in a big manufacturing town an old bachelor bookkeeper, who had been many years with the firm, suddenly announced that he was to be married.

The partners gave him a week's holiday, and his fellow clerks raised a little purse and presented it to pay the expenses of his wedding trip.

A couple of days after the wedding one of the members of the firm went down to a seaside resort, and there, lounging about the parade and apparently enjoying himself immensely, he saw his recently married old bookkeeper, but alone.

"Where's your wife?" asked the principal.

"She's at home," was the reply.

"But I thought you had money given you for a wedding trip?"

"So I had," was the reply, "but I didn't understand that it was intended to include her."—Pearson's Weekly.

Marriage Customs in Savage Africa.

The charge which is sometimes brought against white men of "marrying for money" cannot be used against their sex in Africa, for there it is the other way about, husbands having to purchase their wives. When a man has a wife bestowed upon him as an act of charity he feels that she is not properly his own, and she, if she will, can treat him with contempt. This custom of wife purchase, although it is to be decried as tending to lower marriage to the level of a commercial contract, is an incentive to young men to work. Lazy youths cannot compete with energetic ones in the matrimonial market, as they are despised by the young women and rejected by their parents as being unworthy of their daughters.—Wide World Magazine.

The Ungrateful Cuckoo.

To hear the cuckoo's cheery note you might think he had the clearest conscience in the world. He can have neither memory nor moral sense or he would not carry it off so gayly. We say nothing of the "raptores," who are a race apart, but the most disreputable of birds, as a rule, are guilty of nothing worse than peccadillos. The jackdaw will steal for the mere fun of the thing, for he can make no possible use of plate or jewelry, and sometimes under temptation may make a snatch at a pheasant chick. Sparrows are, of course, notorious thieves, but they rank no higher in crime than the sneaking pickpockets. But the cuckoo, so to speak, is a murderer from his cradle. He violates the sanctity of a hospitable hearth. His first victims are his own foster brothers, and before he tries his wings on the first flight he is imbrued in fraternal blood, like any Amurath or Bazajet.—London Saturday Review.

CHRISTMAS ADVICE
To Parents

Very few people are born with a faculty for saving money. Most people have to acquire the habit.

The easiest and surest way to form a habit, good as well as bad, is to do it when you are young.

Teach the Habit of Saving to your children

One of the best ways to do this will be to make a deposit with us in their names and give them the books for Christmas, and encourage them to add to the amount.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Makes Annual Recommendations to Congress.

ATTACKS ANTI-TRUST LAW

Sherman Act Should Be Amended to Permit Combinations Which Are In the Interest of the Public, Says the President — Urges Legislation to Safeguard the Wageworkers—Dwells on Need of Protection For Forests. Views on the Army and the Navy.

Washington, Dec. 8.—In his message to congress, read to the two houses, the president said:

The financial standing of the nation at the present time is excellent, and the financial management of the nation's interests by the government during the last seven years has shown the most satisfactory results. But our currency system is imperfect, and it is earnestly to be hoped that the currency commission will be able to propose a thoroughly good system which will do away with the existing defects.

During the period from July 1, 1901, to Sept. 30, 1908, there has been a net surplus of nearly one hundred millions of receipts over expenditures, a reduction of the interest bearing debt by ninety millions, in spite of the extraordinary expense of the Panama canal and a saving of nearly nine millions on the annual interest charge. This is an exceedingly satisfactory showing. There has been a reduction of taxation.

Corporations.

As regards the great corporations engaged in interstate business, and especially the railroads, I can only repeat what I have already again and again said in my messages to the congress. I believe that under the interstate clause of the constitution the United States has complete and paramount right to control all agencies of interstate commerce, and I believe that the national government alone can exercise this right with wisdom and effectiveness so as both to secure justice from and to do justice to the great corporations which are the most important factors in modern business. I believe that it is worse than folly to attempt to prohibit all combinations, as is done by the Sherman anti-trust law, because such a law can be enforced only imperfectly and unequally, and its enforcement works almost as much hardship as good. I strongly advocate that instead of an unwise effort to prohibit all combinations there shall be substituted a law which shall expressly permit combinations which are in the interest of the public, but shall at the same time give to some agency of the national government full power of control and supervision over them. One of the chief features of this control should be securing entire publicity in all matters which the public has a right to know and, furthermore, the power, not by judicial, but by executive action to prevent or put a stop to every form of improper favoritism or other wrongdoing.

The railways of the country should be put completely under the interstate commerce commission and removed from the domain of the anti-trust law. The power of the commission should be made thoroughgoing, so that it could exercise complete supervision and control over the issue of securities as well as over the raising and lowering of rates. As regards rates, at least this power should be summary. Power to make combinations and traffic agreements should be explicitly conferred upon the railroads, the permission of the commission being first gained and the combination or agreement being published in all its details. The interests of the shareholders, of the employees and of the shippers should all be guarded as against one another. To give any one of them undue and improper consideration is to do injustice to the others. Rates must be made as low as is compatible with giving proper returns to all the employees of the railroad, from the highest to the lowest, and proper returns to the shareholders, but they must not, for instance, be reduced in such fashion as to necessitate a cut in the wages of the employees or the abolition of the proper and legitimate profits of honest shareholders.

Telegraph and telephone companies engaged in interstate business should be put under the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission.

It is to the interest of all of us that there should be a premium put upon individual initiative and individual capacity and an ample reward for the great directing intelligences alone competent to manage the great business operations of today. It is well to keep in mind that exactly as the anarchist is the worst enemy of liberty and the reactionary the worst enemy of order so the men who defend the rights of property have most to fear from the wrongdoers of great wealth, and the men who are championing popular rights have most to fear from the demagogues who in the name of popular rights would do wrong to and oppress honest business men, honest men of wealth, for the success of either type of wrongdoer necessarily invites a violent reaction against the cause the wrongdoer nominally upholds.

The opposition to government control of these great corporations makes its most effective effort in the shape of an appeal to the old doctrine of states' rights.

The proposal to make the national government supreme over, and therefore to give it complete control over the railroads and other instruments of interstate commerce is merely a proposal to carry out to the letter one of the prime purposes, if not the prime purpose, for which the constitution was founded. It does not represent centralization.

I believe that the more farsighted corporations are themselves coming to recognize the unwisdom of the violent hostility they have displayed during the last few years to regulation and control by the national government of combinations engaged in interstate business.

Labor.

There are many matters affecting labor and the status of the wageworker to which I should like to draw your attention. As far as possible I hope to see a frank recognition of the advantages conferred by machinery, organization and division of labor, accompanied by an effort to bring about a larger share in the ownership by wageworker of railway, mill and factory. In farming this simply means that we wish to see the farmer own his own land. We do not wish to see the farms so large that they become the property of absentee landlords who farm them by tenants nor yet so small that the farmer becomes like a European peasant.

The depositors in our savings banks now number over one-tenth of our entire population. These are all capitalists who through the savings banks loan their money to the workers—that is, in many cases to themselves—to carry on their various industries. Postal savings banks will make it easy for the poorest to keep their savings in absolute safety. The regulation of the national highways must be such that they shall serve all people with equal justice. Corporate finances must be supervised so as to make it far safer than at present for the man of small means to invest his money in stocks. There must be prohibition of child labor, diminution of woman labor, shortening of hours of all mechanical labor. Stock watering should be prohibited, and stock gambling, so far as is possible, discouraged. There should be a progressive inheritance tax on large fortunes. Industrial education should be encouraged.

Protection For Wageworkers.

There is one matter with which the congress should deal at this session. There should no longer be any paltering with the question of taking care of the wageworkers who, under our present industrial system, become killed, crippled or worn out as part of the regular incidents of a given business. The object sought for could be achieved to a measurable degree, as far as those killed or crippled are concerned, by proper employers' liability laws. As far as concerns those who have been worn out, I call your attention to the fact that definite steps toward providing old age pensions have been taken in many of our private industries.

Pending a thoroughgoing investigation and action there is certain legislation which should be enacted at once. The law passed at the last session of the congress granting com-

Good Cough Medicine for Children.

The season for coughs and colds is now at hand and too much care cannot be used to protect the children. A child is much more likely to contract diphtheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quicker you cure his cold the less risk. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the sole reliance of many mothers, and few of those who have tried it are willing to use any other. Mrs. F. F. Starcher, of Ripley, W. Va., says: "I have never used anything other than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children and it has always given good satisfaction." This remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

GAS

IT has been successfully demonstrated—time and time again—that GAS is the most satisfactory and least injurious artificial light for reading and working purposes. It is brighter, yet softer, than any other illuminant now on the market, and another, not the least feature, it is cheaper. To the numerous purchasers of useful articles for Christmas gifts, we wish to suggest the practicability and economy of purchasing one of our

PAPER CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

How to Make Attractive Desk Blotters and Wall Pockets.

Make your Christmas presents of paper. One of the most attractive of these paper articles is a desk blotter. The usual size for a woman is eighteen inches deep by fifteen wide. The materials necessary are one piece of cardboard of the dimensions mentioned and a second piece half an inch less in each dimension. The pad is covered with flowered paper on the lower side and has flowered paper corners. Plain crape paper is used to cover the top of the pad.

The largest of the cardboard rectangles is first covered with the flowered paper. The paper is folded over the edge to a considerable depth, at least an inch and a half being desirable. Its edges are then pasted neatly down, care being taken to make neat corners. The smaller cardboard rectangle is covered with the plain crape paper, which, for instance, may be yellow if a yellow flowered paper is being used. Four right angled triangles which are three inches on the two even sides are then cut from stiff and very heavy wrapping paper and covered on one side with plain and on the other with flowered paper. These are the four corners. When they are covered a margin of paper is left on the equal sides, and this is re-enforced by a narrow strip of muslin. This margin is turned over and pasted to the upper side of the cardboard, which is to form the bottom of the pad. The upper part of the pad is then laid on the lower part, and they are pasted neatly together. The corners, of course, go underneath the pad corners. The pad corners are not pasted down along their long side, as it is desirable to have them free so that new blotters may be slipped in and out at will.

A wall pocket of paper may be made which contains three pockets. For this purpose the bordered crape paper which comes in rolls may be used, or you may select paper napkins whose borders are in the form of garlands, which will not make the pocket too long. The pocket must, of course, be just as long as the motif of the design.

The materials needed are three pieces of cardboard about nine inches long. The length, however, depends upon the design of the paper which is to be used. The cardboard is just the length of the design. The three cardboards are of graduated depths. They are straight on three sides, and on the top they are cut in the shape of the design of the paper. Sometimes the top line is straight and rounding, and again it will have large scallops. A design should not be chosen which has too small a pattern.

All of the cardboards are covered on the outside with the bordered paper and inside with plain crape paper. Perforations are made at equal distances in the three pieces along the bottom and sides. The perforations along the bottom are close enough together to permit of the sections of the pocket being laced together. Only three holes are necessary along the sides. Ribbon the color of the flower in the border is used to lace the sections together and fastened at the ends with two tiny bows. Along the sides bands of ribbon are used to hold the sections together. The lowest band is very short, the next one longer and the top one longest of all. The edges of the pocket may be touched with gold paint, which adds to the attractiveness of the design.

The Brakeman's Joke.

"Ran over a cow this morning up above Coffeyville," said the brakeman to a reporter.

"How did it happen?" asked the reporter.

"She was drinking out of a creek under a bridge," shouted the brakeman as he swung on to the last car and went grinning out of town.—Kansas City Times.

Crazy.

"But the plea was not that of insanity," remarked the court.

"That's just the point we made," rejoined the foreman. "We decided that any man who didn't have sense enough to know that an insanity plea was the proper caper must be crazy."—Philadelphia Ledger.

WEDNESDAY'S STORM.

The backbone of the Indian Summer which we have enjoyed all the Fall, was broken with a vengeance on Wednesday by the avalanche of two and one half feet of snow which fell within twenty four hours. It was the heaviest snowfall within so short a period that this vicinity ever experienced and when the first flakes came they fell in the dust, the streets being as dry as in July. Nor was the quantity of the snowfall the only remarkable feature of the freak storm. The small area which was included in the distribution, was a subject of considerable comment as the storm belt did not extend more than two miles in any direction from the center of the city. Oswego on Wednesday received a three inch snow deposit while Syracuse did not see a feathery flake. Mt. Pleasant received about four inches of "the beautiful" and Granby was even less favored than Volney.

Fourteen passenger and freight trains were stalled within the city limits on Wednesday night and the passenger trains were all annulled at 6 o'clock as it was impossible to move them an inch. It was not until midnight that the train due in Fulton at 5:05 from Oswego, was able to get beyond Broadway and the 6 o'clock train from Syracuse did not reach the Cayuga street depot until nearly 4 A. M., having been stalled near the Nestle plant. Pedestrians suffered keenly the inconveniences from the storm and business was at a standstill, even the grocery deliverys finding it impossible late in the afternoon to make their routes.

Taken altogether the storm will not be forgotten by many who witnessed it and not by anyone who encountered the elements.

Thirteen An Unlucky Number.

Thirteen is considered an unlucky number by the superstitious, but he or she who has his or her Holiday shopping well under way prior to this, the thirteenth shopping day before Christmas, may well be counted in the lucky column. The stores advertised in these columns are well stocked with desirable merchandise and at moderate prices. The Christmas trade has opened well and much praise is bestowed upon the various stores and the arrangement of goods.

But thirteen shopping days remain before Christmas and many of the remaining ones will undoubtedly be very stormy. Just a little reminder this article is, that the earlier you buy the better off you will be both in your mind and in the quality of the articles you will have presented you to select from.

At three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon Dr. Stuntz will conduct a Round Table for the Methodist preachers of this section of the district.

Masonic Fair Continues This Week.

The Masonic Fair has eclipsed all previous fairs in this city in point of attendance and success. There was such a demand for its continuance during this week that the management concluded to listen to the request of the public and every night this week will be a gala night, until the automobile is drawn on Saturday night.

The diamond ring was drawn on Monday night by Miss Margaret Dumont. The pony and cart will go tomorrow night.

Oswego Times.—Word has been received here of the death of Mrs Arba Leonard in New York city. Mrs. Leonard was in her ninetieth year and was one of the old time residents of this city. She came here from Carthage when a young girl and later married Arba Leonard, who was one of Oswego's earliest and best known school teachers and who later for many years was the librarian of the city. Mrs. Leonard left this city some twenty years ago but is well remembered by some of the older residents. Mrs. Leonard lived for years in the brick house on West Bridge street just west of Eighth street and later lived in West Fourth street near Van Buren. The burial will be at the Mt. Aduah cemetery in Fulton.

GIFTS

Homemade Presents For the Dainty Woman—Shoe Case For Traveling—Night-dress Case—Holder For Baby Ribbon.

For women who travel as well as those who stay at home there are many novelties in workbags and sewing cases being shown in the shops which are not only attractive, but essentially practical. While the cost of

Two yards of pretty cretonne.
One yard and half of elastic.
One piece of tape.
Four brass eyelets.

SHOE CASE FOR TRAVELING.

these is not exorbitant, any one of them may be made at home from odd pieces of ribbon, chintz, silk or linen, which, with the addition of a bit of hand embroidery, make pretty gifts.

The shoe bag or case is a useful article which also may be constructed at home at a trifling expense from almost any material one chooses, provided it is heavy enough to keep its shape. Either linen or cretonne is particularly effective, the four pockets accommodating two pairs of shoes or slippers. These pockets are bound and fastened to the case with ribbons or tape matching or harmonizing with the material of the case, in the top of which are set four brass eyelets. In this way the necessity of tacking in place is avoided, the eyelets being slipped over brass hooks screwed in door or wall.

A convenient pocket pincushion and pin case are bowed with ribbon and set above the shoe pockets. When traveling the case is simply rolled and tied with a matching ribbon tacked at one end on the outer side.

A pretty case for the robe de nuit embroidered with a heavy mercerized thread on a heavy linen identifies the long envelope case with its embroidered buttoned flap as that in which the particular girl carries her dainty night robe. This is made of heavy white butcher's linen in envelope pattern, embroidered in white cotton thread, and may be lined, if one elects,

MATERIALS REQUIRED.

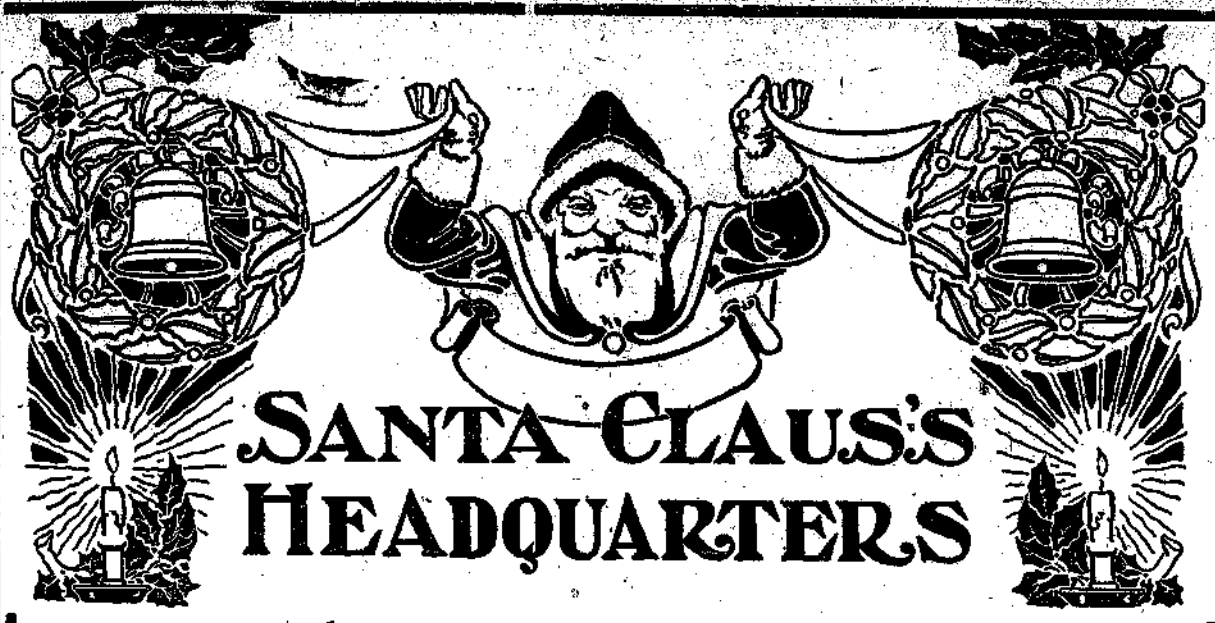
Three skeins white mercerized cotton.
One and a half yards China silk.
Sachet powder.
One pearl button.

NIGHTDRESS CASE.

with a dainty pink and blue china silk, beneath which is laid a single sheet of sachet scented wadding.

Every girl who uses baby ribbon would be delighted with a case filled with three or four different shades as a Christmas gift. Here are two attractive ways to prepare such a gift: For the first take a long, shallow pasteboard box just wide enough to hold a ten yard roll of baby ribbon and long enough for as many bolts as you may wish to give. Cover this box neatly inside and out with wall paper or a pretty fancy silk, first having made as many small slits on the top as there are bolts of ribbon.



Paste the covering on the box, and if it is found difficult to turn in the edges neatly around the slits do not attempt it, but cover the roughness with a narrow edge of gilt paper for braid.

Put the ribbon in the box, first having removed the paper and rewrapped the ribbon and put one end through each slit so it is about an inch on the outside of the lid. If these ends are fastened through bodkins, for which narrow strips have been provided on the top of lid to hold them in place, it will add much to the convenience of the gift.

Workbag For Christmas.

A capacious workbag is made of silk a yard and a quarter long. Across each end featherbone is sewed; then the selvage on either side is gathered up as close as possible and secured so that the two places meet.

Ribbons tie the opening together in the middle, and the bag is carried by handles of ribbons that start from big bows on either side where the silk is drawn up.

A Bank on Two Legs.

"For more than thirty years the most popular woodsman's bank in Maine was a bank on two legs," says Major Holmes Day, author of "King Spruce." "Until he was over seventy years old Uncle Nate Swan was conductor on the Bangor and Piscataquis railroad, running between the city and Moosehead lake. With him rode the woods and driving crews. When they forgot themselves and made a racket on his train he used to cuff them into submission, and no man ever raised his hand against Uncle Nate. When the men came out of the woods with their pay most of them realized from bitter experience that the city folks would get all their money away from them in a few days. As soon as they would get aboard the train they would begin to strip ten dollar bills off their rolls and hand the money to Uncle Nate to 'sink' for them, banking it on call. They never forgot, nor did he, and in all the years there was never a dispute between Conductor Swan and any of his depositors. When they came back on his train they were sure of enough money for their fare and their tobacco at the lake outfitting store. They wouldn't have known very well what to do with more."

All the Gold IN GEORGIA Could not Buy-

Roding, Ga. August 27, 1906.

Messrs. E. O. DeWitt & Co., Chicago, Ills.

Gentlemen:—

In 1897 I had a disease of the stomach and bowels. Some physicians told me it was Dyspepsia, some Consumption of the Lungs, others said consumption of the Bowels. One physician said I would not live until Spring, and for four long years I existed on a little boiled milk, soda biscuits, doctors' prescriptions and Dyspepsia remedies that flooded the market. I could not digest anything I ate, and in the Spring 1902 I picked up one of your Almanacs as a poor emaciated Dyspepsia wreck will grasp at anything, and that Almanac happened to be my life saver. I bought a fifty cent bottle of KODOL DYSPEPSIA CURE and the benefit I received from that bottle ALL THE GOLD IN GEORGIA COULD NOT BUY. I kept on taking it and in two months I went back to my work, as a machinist, and in three months I was well and hearty. I still use a little occasionally as I find it a fine blood purifier and a good tonic.

May you live long and prosper.

Yours very truly,

G. N. CORNELL.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

pensation to certain classes of employees of the government should be extended to include all employees of the government and should be made more liberal in its terms. In this respect the generosity of the United States toward its employees compares most unfavorably with that of every country in Europe—even the poorest.

The terms of the act are also a hardship in prohibiting payment in cases where the accident is in any way due to the negligence of the employee. It is inevitable that daily familiarity with danger will lead men to take chances that can be construed into negligence.

I renew my recommendation made in a previous message that half holidays be granted during the summer to all wageworkers in government employ.

I also renew my recommendation that the principle of the eight hour day should as rapidly and as far as practicable be extended to the entire work being carried on by the government.

The Courts.

I most earnestly urge upon the congress the duty of increasing the totally inadequate salaries now given to our judges. On the whole, there is no body of public servants who do as valuable work nor whose moneyed reward is so inadequate compared to their work. Beginning with the supreme court, the judges should have their salaries doubled.

It is earnestly to be desired that some method should be devised for doing away with the long delays which now obtain in the administration of justice and which operate with peculiar severity against persons of small means and favor only the very criminals whom it is most desirable to punish.

At the last election certain leaders of organized labor made a violent and sweeping attack upon the entire judiciary of the country, an attack couched in such terms as to include the most upright, honest and broad minded judges no less than those of narrower mind and more restricted outlook. Last year before the house committee on the judiciary these same labor leaders formulated their demands, specifying the bill that contained them, refusing all compromise, stating they wished the principle of that bill or nothing. They insisted on a provision that in a labor dispute no injunction should issue except to protect a property right and specifically provided that the right to carry on business should not be construed as a property right, and in a second provision their bill made legal in a labor dispute any act or agreement by or between two or more persons that would not have been unlawful if done by a single person. In other words this bill legalized blacklisting and boycotting in every form. The demand was made that there should be trial by jury in contempt cases, thereby most seriously impairing the authority of the courts. All this represented a course of policy which, if carried out would mean the enthronement of class privilege in its crudest and most brutal form and the destruction of one of the most essential functions of the judiciary in all civilized lands.

The wageworkers, the workingmen, the laboring men of the country, by the way in which they repudiated the effort to get them to cast their votes in response to an appeal to class hatred have emphasized their sound patriotism and Americanism.

Courts Imperiled by Judges.

But the extreme reactionaries, the persons who blind themselves to the wrongs now and then committed by the courts on laboring men, should also think seriously as to what such a movement as this portends. The courts are jeopardied primarily by the action of these federal and state judges who show inability or unwillingness to put a stop to the wrongdoing of very rich men under modern industrial conditions.

There are certain decisions by various courts which have been exceedingly detrimental to the rights of wageworkers. This is true of all the decisions that decide that men and women are by the constitution "guaranteed their liberty" to contract to enter a dangerous occupation, or to work an undesirable or improper number of hours, or to work in unhealthy surroundings, and therefore cannot recover damages when maimed in that occupation and cannot be forbidden to work what the legislature decides is an excessive number of hours, or to carry on the work under conditions which the legislature decides to be unhealthy.

There is also, I think, ground for the belief that substantial injustice is often suffered by employees in consequence of the custom of courts issuing temporary injunctions without notice to them and punishing them for contempt of court in instances where, as a matter of fact, they have no knowledge of any proceedings. Provision should be made that no injunction or temporary restraining order issue otherwise than on notice, except where irreparable injury would otherwise result, and in such case a hearing on the merits of the order should be had within a short fixed period, and if not then continued after hearing it should forthwith lapse. Decisions should be rendered immediately and the chance of delay minimized in every way.

The courts are to be highly commended and staunchly upheld when they set their faces against wrongdoing or tyranny by a majority, but they are to be blamed when they fail to recognize under a government like ours the deliberate judgment of the majority as to a matter of legitimate policy when duly expressed by the legislature. The people should not be permitted to pardon evil and slipshod legislation on the theory that the court will set it right. They should be taught that the right way to get rid of a bad law is to have the legislature repeal it and not to have the courts by ingenious hair splitting nullify it.

People Themselves to Blame.

For many of the shortcomings of justice in our country our people as a whole are themselves to blame, and the judges and juries merely bear their share together with the public as a whole. It is discreditable to us as a people that there should be difficulty in convicting murderers or in bringing to justice men who as public servants have been guilty of corruption or who have profited by the corruption of public servants.

The huge wealth that has been accumulated by a few individuals of recent years, in what has amounted to a social and industrial revolution, has been as regards some of these individuals made possible only by the improper use of the modern corporation. Corporations are necessary instruments of modern business. They have been permitted to become a menace largely because the governmental representatives of the people have worked slowly in providing for adequate control over them.

Real damage has been done by the manifold and conflicting interpretations of the interstate commerce law. Control over the great corporations doing interstate business can be effective only if it is vested with full power in an administrative department, a branch of the federal executive, carrying out a federal law. It can never be effective if a divided responsibility is left in both the states and the nation. It can never be effective if left in the hands of the courts to be decided by lawsuits.

The courts hold a place of peculiar and deserved sanctity under our form of government. Respect for the law is essential to the permanence of our institutions, and respect for the law is largely conditioned upon respect for the courts. But we must face the fact that there are wise and unwise judges, just as there are wise and unwise executives and legislators. When a president or governor behaves improperly or unwisely the remedy is easy, for his term is short. The same is true with the legislator, although not to the same degree. With a judge who, being human, is also likely to err, but whose tenure is for life, there is no similar way of holding him to responsibility. Under ordinary conditions the only forms of pressure to which he is in any way amenable are public opinion and the action of his fellow judges. It is the last which is most immediately effective and to which we should look for the reform of abuses.

Forests.

If there is any one duty which more than another we owe it to our children and our children's children to perform at once it is to save the forests of this country, for they constitute the first and most important element in the conservation of the natural resources of the country.

Shortsighted persons, or persons blinded to the future by desire to make money in every way out of the present, sometimes speak as if no great damage would be done by the reckless destruction of our forests. It is difficult to have patience with the arguments of these persons. Thanks to our own recklessness in the use of our splendid forests, we have already crossed the verge of a timber famine in this country, and no measures that we now take can, at least for many years, undo the mischief that has already been done. But we can prevent further mischief being done, and it would be in the highest degree reprehensible to let any consideration of temporary convenience or temporary cost interfere with such action, especially as regards the national forests, which the nation can now at this very moment control.

[The president here cites in support of his contentions the great destruction wrought in China by the denudation of the forest areas.]

What has thus happened in northern China, what has happened in central Asia, in Palestine, in north Africa, in parts of the Mediterranean countries of Europe, will surely happen in our country if we do not exercise that wise forethought which should be one of the chief marks of any people calling itself civilized. Nothing should be permitted to stand in the way of the preservation of the forests, and it is criminal to permit individuals to purchase a little gain for themselves through the destruction of forests when this destruction is fatal to the well being of the whole country in the future.

Inland Waterways.

Action should be begun forthwith, during the present session of congress, for the improvement of our inland waterways—action which will result in giving us not only navigable but navigated rivers. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars upon these waterways, yet the traffic on nearly all of them is steadily declining. This condition is the direct result of the absence of any comprehensive and farseeing plan of waterway improvement. Obviously we cannot continue thus to expend the revenues of the government without return. It is poor business to spend money for inland navigation unless we get it.

Such shortsighted, vacillating and futile methods are accompanied by decreasing water borne commerce and increasing traffic congestion on land, by increasing floods and by the waste of public money. The remedy lies in abandoning the methods which have so signally failed and adopting new ones in keeping with the needs and demands of our people.

In a report on a measure introduced at the first session of the present congress the secretary of war said, "The chief defect in the methods hitherto pursued lies in the absence of executive authority for originating comprehensive plans covering the country or natural divisions thereof." In this opinion I heartily concur.

Until the work of river improvement is undertaken in a modern way it cannot have results that will meet the needs of this modern nation. These needs should be met without further dilly-dallying or delay. The plan which promises the best and quickest results is that of a permanent commission authorized to co-ordinate the work of all the government departments relating to waterways and to frame and supervise the execution of a comprehensive plan. The time for playing with our waterways is past. The country demands results.

National Parks.

I urge that all our national parks adjacent to national forests be placed completely under the control of the forest service of the agricultural department, instead of leaving them, as they are now, under the interior department and policed by the army.

Pure Food.

The pure food legislation has already worked a benefit difficult to overestimate.

Secret Service.

Last year an amendment was incorporated in the measure providing for the secret service which provided that there should be no detail from the secret service and no transfer therefrom. It is not too much to say that this amendment has been of benefit only, and could be of benefit only, to the criminal classes. The amendment in question was of benefit to no one excepting to criminals, and it seriously hampers the government in the detection of crime and the securing of justice. It prevents the promotion of employees in the secret service, and this further discourages good effort. In its present form the restriction operates only to the advantage of the criminal, of the wrongdoer.

The chief argument in favor of the provision was that the congressmen did not themselves wish to be investigated by secret service men. Very little of such investigation has been done in the past, but it is true that the work of the secret service agents was partly responsible for the indictment and conviction of a senator and a congressman for land frauds in Oregon. I do not believe that it is in the public interest to protect criminals in any branch of the public service, and exactly as we have again and again during the past seven years prosecuted and convicted such criminals who were in the executive branch of the government so in my belief we should be given ample means to prosecute them if found in the legislative branch. But if this is not considered desirable a special exception could be made in the law prohibiting the use of the secret service force in investigating members of the congress. It would be far better to do this than to do what actually was done and strive to prevent or at least to hamper effective action against criminals by the executive branch of the government.

Postal Savings Banks.

I again renew my recommendation for postal savings banks, for depositing savings with the security of the government behind them. The object is to encourage thrift and economy in the wage earner and person of moderate means. It is believed that in the aggregate vast sums of money would be brought into circulation through the instrumentality of the postal savings banks. Postal savings banks are now in operation in practically all the great civilized countries with the exception of the United States.

Parcel Post.

In my last annual message I commended the postmaster general's recommendation for an extension of the parcel post on the rural routes. The establishment of a local parcel post on rural routes would be to the mutual benefit of the farmer and the country storekeeper, and it is desirable that the routes, serving more than 15,000,000 people, should be utilized to the fullest practicable extent.

Education.

The share that the national government should take in the broad work of education has not received the attention and the care it rightly deserves.

I earnestly recommend that this unfortunate state of affairs as regards the national educational office be remedied by adequate appropriations.

Census.

I strongly urge that the request of the director of the census in connection with the decennial work so soon to be begun be complied with and that the appointments to the census force be placed under the civil service law, waiving the geographical requirements as requested by the director of the census. The supervisors and enumerators should not be appointed under the civil service law for the reasons given by the director.

Public Health.

The dangers to public health from food adulteration and from many other sources, such as the menace to the physical, mental and moral development of children from child labor, should be met and overcome. This nation cannot afford to lag behind in the worldwide battle now being waged by all civilized people with the microscopic foes of mankind. The first legislative step to be taken is that for the concentration of the proper bureaus into one of the existing departments.

Statehood.

I advocate the immediate admission of New Mexico and Arizona as states. This should be done at the present session of the congress. The people of the two territories have made it evident by their votes that they will not come in as one state. The only alternative is to admit them as two, and I trust that this will be done without delay.

Foreign Affairs.

This nation's foreign policy is based on the theory that right must be done between nations precisely as between individuals, and in our actions for the last ten years we have in this matter proved our faith by our deeds. We have behaved and are behaving toward other nations as in private life an honorable man would behave toward his fellows.

Latin American Republics.

The commercial and material progress of the twenty Latin American republics is worthy of the careful attention of the congress. No other section of the world has shown a greater proportionate development of its foreign trade during the last ten years, and none other has more special claims on the interest of the United States.

Panama Canal.

The work on the Panama canal is being done with a speed, efficiency and entire devotion to duty which make it a model for all work of the kind. No task of such magnitude has ever before been undertaken by any nation, and no task of the kind has ever been better performed. The men on the isthmus, from Colonel Goethals and his fellow commissioners through the entire list of employees who are faithfully doing their duty, have won their right to the ungrudging respect and gratitude of the American people.

Ocean Mail Lines.

I again recommend the extension of the ocean mail act of 1891 so that satisfactory American ocean mail lines to South America, Asia, the Philippines and Australasia may be established. The creation of such steamship lines should be the natural corollary of the voyage of the battle fleet. It should precede the opening of the Panama canal.

The Philippines.

Real progress toward self government is being made in the Philippine Islands. The gathering of a Philippine legislative body and Philippine assembly marks a process absolutely new in Asia, not only as regards Asiatic colonies of European powers, but as regards Asiatic possessions of other Asiatic powers, and indeed, always excepting the striking and wonderful example afforded by the great empire of Japan, it opens an entirely new departure when compared with anything which has happened among Asiatic powers which are their own masters. We have given the Filipinos constitutional government, a government based upon justice, and we have shown that we have governed them for their good and not for our aggrandizement.

At the present time, as during the past ten years, the inexorable logic of facts shows that this government must be supplied by us and not by them. We must be wise and generous. We must help the Filipinos to master the difficult art of self control, which is simply another name for self government. But we cannot give them self government save in the sense of governing them so that gradually they may, if they are able, learn to govern themselves. No one can prophesy the exact date when it will be wise to consider independence as a fixed and definite policy.

Porto Rico.

I again recommend that American citizenship be conferred upon the people of Porto Rico.

Cuba.

In Cuba our occupancy will cease in about two months' time. The Cubans have in orderly manner elected their own governmental authorities, and the island will be turned over to them. Our occupation on this occasion has lasted a little over two years, and Cuba has thriven and prospered under it. Our earnest hope and one desire is that the people of the island shall now govern themselves with justice, so that peace and order may be secure.

The Fleet's Reception.

I take this opportunity publicly to state my appreciation of the way in which in Japan, in Australia, in New Zealand and in all the states of South America the battle fleet has been received on its practice voyage around the world. The American government cannot too strongly express its appreciation of the abounding and generous hospitality shown our ships in every port they visited.

Mr. Charles Johnson, who was on Good Roads work, has been laid off for an indefinite time and Messrs McConnell, Drake and Manealy of the local barge canal office, were on Saturday notified that they were laid off without pay. It is thought that politics entered into their dismissal as new men were last week sent into the local office and these men, who were perfectly familiar with the locality and conditions, were removed.

Stella's Dignity.

"Glenn paid me a dandy compliment last night, mother—one that will please you, too," said Stella Harding. "He was talking about the girls in this block and how disgusted the boys were getting with them. He said the trouble with the girls round here was that they had positively no personal dignity, and he never seemed to take into account that I lived in the block myself. But he made up afterward for forgetting. He said not much; he guessed, he didn't mean me; that I was noted for my dignity with all the fellows, and he'd often heard them speak of it. What do you say to that?"

Mrs. Harding was listening with motherly satisfaction. "How did it happen to occur to him that you might be applying it to yourself?" she asked.

"I put it to him straight. I just waited until he stopped for breath, and then I said, 'Well, jiminy, Glenn, is this a slam?'"

"Stella, what a speech! There's no dignity about that!"

"Oh, toot, mamma!" was the laughing response, made without the slightest intention of disrespect. "That's just the way we all talk. Things like that don't count on dignity one way or the other—not in our bunch. It's how you act, don't you know?"—Youth's Companion.

Foxes' Scalps and Salvation.

Some years ago at a session of the legislature of Kentucky an effort to repeal the law offering a bounty on foxes' scalps was made, but was defeated by the appeal of a member from a mountainous and sparsely settled region. "Do the gentlemen want to deprive my constituents and me of the benefits of hearing the gospel preached?" he demanded, with indignation in his tone and overspreading his rugged countenance. "We are all Methodists up my way, and our preachers won't come without we can give 'em chickens, I know. We can't raise chickens unless the foxes are killed by somebody, that's sure, and there ain't anybody that can afford to spend their time hunting foxes and get nothing to pay for it. So, gentlemen, if you repeal this law you'll be depriving my constituents of the benefit of hearing the gospel preached; that's the way it looks to me!" The law was not repealed at that session.—Argonaut.

Hairs and Feathers.

Hairs are found on almost everything that grows, and, if we may so call the fine fibers of asbestus, they even invade the mineral world. From a piece of mineral asbestus quarried from the earth and looking like a stone with a satiny fracture the silken fibers can be rubbed with the finger till the lump is worn away.

Secure a feather somewhere—it will be much better than a picture—and you will see that it has a main stem or midrib. Along each side of this extends the thin part known as the vane. Look closely and you will see that this vane is composed of tiny feathers, called beards, fastened together throughout their whole length from where their bases join the midrib to their tips. You can easily separate one of these from the rest, when you will see how like a tiny feather it is, with what seems a fine fuzziness along each edge. —St. Nicholas.

Astronomy.

If there were any money to be made in astronomy everybody would be studying it. About all we can see is figures, and these are so big that they stagger the understanding. Every child in the United States knows how to find the north star (Old Polaris) from the pointers of the dipper, but no child can appreciate the statement that this star is distant from the earth 210,000,000,000,000 miles—two hundred and ten trillions! The Twentieth Century Limited, traveling at one mile a minute, would have to run without stopping for 479,000,000 years in order to traverse this distance. If light really travels 187,500 miles a second, a ray from the north star would be thirty-six years in reaching the earth.—New York Press.

Would Not Pay Charges.

He was an impecunious nobleman with air castles in sunny France. After much deliberation he sent the following note to the pretty heiress:

Dear Miss—I love you, but do not know how to express myself. How would you advise? COUNT DE BUST.

And the heiress penned the following:

Dear Count—Express yourself any way you wish except C. O. D., as you are not worth the charges.

—Chicago News.

More Worry.

"It used to be my ambition," said the business man, "to accumulate a fortune and then retire."

"Well," answered the friend, "haven't you realized it?"

"No. I've got the money, but I don't dare retire. I've got to stay awake night and day to keep somebody from taking it away from me."

A Safety Match.

"Papa, what is a safety match?"

Mr. Henpecked (looking carefully to see if his wife is within hearing)—A safety match, son, is when a bald-headed man marries an armless woman!—Short Stories.

Couldn't Lose.

"Things seem to be coming your way of late."

"Couldn't be any softer if I was the hero of a poker story."—Kansas City Journal.

HAY FEVER

The Broken Bottle Symbol.

The breaking of a bottle over the bow of a vessel at launching seems to be taken by many people as having a convivial, a sort of here's-looking-at-you significance, but nothing of the kind is meant; neither has it any association with Christian baptism, for the name of a man-of-war is given months before the launching. The real thing typified is sacrifice. Building a town or setting a ship afloat was a solemn matter away back in the dim past, and such an act was not to be undertaken without devoting a life to propitiate the gods. Our refined and humane civilization no longer dares to offer up a prisoner or a slave on such occasions, and therefore a bottle is broken to symbolize the taking of a man's life.—United Service Gazette.

"Glad Tidings of Good Cheer"

Giving

is the spirit of Christmas. A gift gladdens both him who receives and him who gives and the result of the giving is boundless good cheer.

But, to give the gift which is the right gift at the right time is an art requiring much application of mind and endless consideration of "the eternal fitness of things." What to give the wife, the parents, the sister, sweethearts and friends; what for the boy, the the girl, the baby! Ah! "there's the rub," and these problems require the time and attention of experts for their solution.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

Supervisor Kellogg moved a levy of $657.38 on Volney to pay bridge bonds.

Supervisor Rogers presented the report of a special committee and moved that thirty-four copies of Gilbert's manual be purchased at $4.00 each. He said these books were absolutely necessary for the supervisors owing to the highway laws.

Supervisor Beardsley presented a list of persons owing highway tax and moved a levy in each case.

Supervisor Kellogg moved a levy of $1,993.22 on Volney to pay principal and interest on Ontario and Western bonds.

Supervisor Cullivan extended an invitation to the Board of Supervisors in behalf of Superintendent Guthrie to visit the County Alms House Thursday, and he moved that the clerk be instructed to make the necessary arrangements. On motion the invitation was accepted.

Supervisor Rounds presented the report of a special committee recommending the purchase of three book typewriting machines at not to exceed $185 each for use in recording in the County Clerk's office.

Supervisor Whitney moved that the committee be empowered to purchase three machines.

Supervisor Buck moved that the city chamberlains of Oswego and Fulton and the town collectors be authorized to receive town and county orders in payment of taxes.

Supervisor Cullivan moved that the report of the committee to settle with the County Superintendent of Poor be taken from the table and adopted.

The Poor Superintendent's report showed that $12,317.34 was expended for all poor purpose including outdoor relief, the care of the poor and etc.

The Superintendent of poor asked that $8,500 be levied for the support of poor during 1909.

Supervisor Tighe of Williamstown, presented the bond of Sheriff-elect Charles W. Taft for $15,000, and it was accepted. It was signed by Charles W. Taft, Horace D. Scoville, Peter G. Hydorn, John K. Lynch, Willard M. Barker, W. L. Buck, Alonzo L. Adams, M. C. Hammond, W. G. Babcock, W. H. Selleck, A. H. Mowry.

The Board of Supervisors visited the County House at Mexico on Friday and took dinner with Superintendent Guthrie at the County House in Mexico. It was the first time that many of the supervisors had visited the institution and all were shown over the place by Superintendent Guthrie; barns, outbuildings, farming implements, horses, cattle, swine, etc., were inspected and then the visitors gave their attention to the house and the inmates. After the inspection a fine dinner was served, and after cigars had been lighted, Chairman Hydorn was made toastmaster and Supervisor Hamer and others made short speeches complimentary to Superintendent Guthrie, who for the past six years has conducted the affairs of his office in a model manner and in the interest of all the taxpayers. A general discussion followed regarding improvements, and it was admitted that new floors and a better system of fire protection are necessary, and both will be installed, as per the direction of the State Association.

Nominating a President.

Until the constitutional amendment of 1804 the president and the vice president were voted for on the same ballot, the man with the second highest number of votes becoming vice president. The presidential electors have not always been chosen by popular vote.

Before 1800 it was the general custom for the state legislatures to choose the electors, and it was not until 1828 that presidential electors were chosen in nearly all the states by popular vote. As late as 1876 the Colorado legislature chose the three presidential electors to represent that state. There is nothing in the constitution to prevent any state legislature naming its own electors without appeal to the people provided such a method of election is prescribed by the state laws.

From 1800 to 1824 presidential candidates were chosen by the members of congress in caucus. In 1824 the electoral college failed to make a choice from the candidates so submitted, and the matter went to the house of representatives. Four years later Tennessee's legislature nominated Andrew Jackson without any reference to the congressional caucus. His opponent, John Quincy Adams, was nominated in the old way, but that was the end of presidential nominations by congressional caucus.

Sailors' Pickings.

Here and there on an Atlantic liner in midocean sailors with pots of paint and huge brushes painted cowls, stanchions, rails, everything they could reach. Suddenly dropping his brush, one of these sailors rushed to a man in a black suit.

"Oh, sir," he cried distressfully, "you've sat down on fresh white paint."

With a roar the man leaped to his feet, curved himself acrobatically and stared at the seat of his trousers.

"But I've got a bottle of benzine in my bunk," said the sailor. "I'll run and get it. I'll have your pants all right in a jiffy."

Soon the pants were all right, and the man ere he strolled jauntily off (a little wet and smelly, perhaps) gave the sailor a quarter.

"That's the third today, Bill," the man said to his mate. "I tell you, what with all this paintin', us jackies do durn near as well on tips as the stewards."

"That's right," said Bill. "I made a dollar myself yesterday with that little bottle of benzine."

The Children's Friend.

Mr. C., a distinguished lawyer of Boston, was on his way to Denver to transact some important business. During the afternoon he noticed in the opposite section of the Pullman a sweet faced, tired appearing woman traveling with four small children. Being fond of children and feeling sorry for the mother, he soon made friends with the little ones. Early the next morning he heard their eager questions and the patient "Yes, dear," of the mother as she tried to dress them, and, looking out, he saw a small white foot protruding beyond the opposite curtain. Reaching across the aisle, he took hold of the large toe and began to recite, "This little pig went to market; this little pig stayed at home." The foot was suddenly withdrawn, and a cold, quiet voice said, "That is quite sufficient, thank you."

Mr. C. hastily withdrew to the smoker, where he remained until the train arrived in Denver.—Good Housekeeping.

Hard and Soft.

"What," asked the teacher, "does anthracite mean?"

"That's a kind of coal," said little Willie.

"Yes. Anthracite coal is what we call hard coal. So 'anthracite' must mean 'hard.' Now, can you tell me what 'bituminous' means?"

"That's coal, too," Willie replied.

"But it isn't the same kind of coal that anthracite is, is it? Bituminous coal is what we commonly refer to as soft coal. Now, Willie, let us see if you can form a sentence containing the words anthracite and bituminous."

Willie thought the matter over for a moment and then said:

"Here's one: 'This morning before pa started downtown ma wanted $5 for groceries and things, and she tried to get it by saying bituminous words, but pa gave her an anthracite look, and when he disappeared around the corner she was weeping bituminously.'"—Atlanta Constitution.

The "Smart" Schoolboy.

Modern children's intellects seem to bud and unfold much earlier than they did a generation or two ago. You often get some rare posers from the youth who is having his first taste of schooling. The other morning at breakfast an admiring father asked his budding prime minister how he liked school.

"Oh, very well, pa, except the master with the star teeth!"

"Star teeth! Star teeth!" puzzled the father. "What do you mean by star teeth?"

"Why, you know, pa, those that come out at night."

The attendant servant maid dropped the muffins, and pa suddenly found something of exceptional interest in the morning paper.—Edinburgh Dispatch.

Waterproof Coats of Grass.

In the tropics of Mexico, where torrential rains fall a part of each year, raincoats are a very necessary part of man's apparel. Owing to the intense heat which prevails in the summer season the ordinary rubber raincoat cannot be worn. A rainproof coat is made from native grasses and is worn by the men of the middle and upper classes. The grasses are woven close together, and it is impossible for the rain to beat through them, no matter how hard the storm may be. Some of these coats are made with a hood which protects the head as well as the body.

One Was Enough.

"Papa, why didn't you wear a pair last night?"

"A pair of what, child?"

"A pair of skates."

"What does the boy mean?"

"Why, Bill, the coachman, told the cook that you had a lovely skate on last night when you came home."—Exchange.

He Forged.

Trotter—When young Bilkins left college a few years ago, he declared he was going to forge his way to the front. Did he make good? Homer—As a forger—yes. He's now occupying a front row cell in the penitentiary.—Chicago News.

His Experience.

Spector—Your new house doesn't look much like the architect's original design. Victome—No, but it looks more like it than the cost looks like his original estimate.—Smart Set.

If no fight, no victory; no victory, no crown.—Savonarola.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

At a meeting of the Current Events club, held on Monday evening, Dec. 7, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Redhead, Mr. Redhead, who, at a previous meeting, had been appointed chairman of a committee on the observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Lincoln, stated that his committee was in favor of the proposition, the event to take place on the evening of Feb. 12, 1909.

In compliance with the foregoing decision, and on motion, the following committees were named by President Fairgrieve:

Literary Program—Prof. George B. Deuel, Mr. L. W. Emerick, Mrs. H. B. Emens and Miss Daisy Lounsberry.

Entertainment—Mr. E. R. Redhead, Hon. S. B. Mead, Mrs. Thomas Hunter and Dr. H. M. Doane.

President Fairgrieve is also ex-officio a member of each of the committees.

In the matter of arranging a literary program, Prof. Deuel requests the co-operation of all members of the club.

The routine business being concluded, the Rev. F. A. Miller introduced the regular program of the evening.

Mr. Miller gave an epitome of important events which were about to transpire in Congress, embracing tariff revision (although it was feared little would be accomplished during this session); Andrew Carnegie's opposition to protection on steel and the protests entered against his views by manufacturers of the product; the proposed Postal Savings Banks; reports of the various departments of governmental life; emigration statistics; the probability of serious trouble for England in India, and the charges formulated by the London Standard that arms and munitions of war were being surreptitiously shipped into India from the United States; the death of the Emperor of China and the Dowager Empress, along with a summary of the career of this distinguished woman.

The Hon. N. N. Stranahan was the next speaker. Mr. Stranahan gave a condensed history of the commercial and industrial development of Japan and the cordial relationship which existed between that country and the United States, culminating in the exchange of diplomatic notes and an agreement between the United States and that country to maintain the status quo in China, the Philippine and other Pacific Islands. While not a treaty, the speaker continued, the agreement was an ingenious method of informing the Powers that if any effort were made to disturb present geographical or political conditions, the two nations, which had the largest interests at stake, would intervene. The entente cordiale meant equal opportunity in China to the nations of the world and practically guaranteed the integrity of that Empire. It was the United States, Mr. Stranahan stated, which had really introduced the Japanese to the commercial and industrial nations of the world about fifty years ago, through the efforts of Commodore Perry, and at no time in the history of a people had such marvelous progress been made as that attained by the Japanese. The agreement entered into furnished indubitable evidence that while Japan is ambitious and progressive, yet she had no desire to seize our possessions in the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. George Chauncey gave an interesting discourse on the prospective trip of President Roosevelt into Africa, the itinerary extending from the Indian Ocean to the Atlantic coast line and embracing about 2,000 square miles. The scientific researches of George Compere, in his quest for a parasite to destroy the San Jose scale, were given in detail and furnished a fitting conclusion to a most interesting address.

An informal discussion followed, in which the following topics were presented: The postoffice deficit (Prof. Deuel); the commercial integrity of the Japanese (Mr. L. W. Emerick), and the moral phase of Japanese characteristics from the viewpoint of a resident of the Pacific slope (Mrs. Emma Howe).

The next meeting of the club will be held at the home of Mrs. Mary Emerick on Monday evening, Dec. 21. The leaders will be Messrs. L. W. Emerick and A. W. Wiltsie.

Thirty members of Columbia Circle, Ladies of the G. A. R., visited Syracuse last Wednesday and assisted in organizing a new Circle. The name of the Circle is "Webster Ransome, No. 53." Mrs. Mary E. Hancock organized and instituted the new Circle, assisted by Mrs. Frances E. Waugh. Columbia Circle of Fulton exemplified the floor work of the order for the benefit of the new Circle. A superb luncheon was served.

About eighty members of the Oswego Falls Grange accepted the invitation of the Bowens Corners Grange to visit them Saturday evening. Chicken pies and provisions galore were consumed by the hungry city farmers. The Granbyites have certainly been great producers this year. Everybody seemed to be sociable, jolly and happy. Long may the Bowens Corners Grange live and prosper. The State Master, Mr. Godfrey, was present and gave a good address.

S. D. Gardner of South Third street received a letter and picture cards from E. A. Henderson, son of O. Henderson. They are from Valdez, Alaska, and were mailed Dec. 2, reaching Fulton Dec. 14th, which was more expeditious than usual. He is clerk of the District Court for Valdez and Fairbanks. He was just closing the term at the former place and was to start Dec. 9th for Fairbanks, a distance of 375 miles by stage over the mountains. "It will take us ten days but it took me thirty days to come from there here this fall," he writes, and "I had to travel 4012 miles, all of which was by river and ocean except 710 miles by rail. Court commences in Fairbanks Dec. 21," and he states that it keeps him on the keen jump all the time. The Government allows $3 per day for the board of a prisoner at the federal jail in Fairbanks and writes that it costs us who are out of jail considerable more than that to live decently. In the picture of the stage is a fine looking turnout drawn by two span of horses, the party aboard being enveloped in furs. They have to be lowered down the mountains by a one-horse sledge.

Cooking With Sunlight.

Sun cooking—roasting and boiling by sunlight instead of coal or gas—has been going on for 300 years. There are sun stoves that roast a sirloin or boil a soup to perfection. They are only used, however, by scientists. A sun stove consists mainly of a mirror—a spherical mirror on a joint. There is also a reflector. The place for pot or plate is so situated that the mirror's rays can be focused on it accurately. A German, Baron Tschirnhausen, was the first sun cook. He began in 1687 to boil water, and in 1696 he had very good success at baking eggs. Sir John Herschel and Buffon are other famous names associated with sun cooking. In California various sun cooks have boiled a gallon of water in twenty minutes, roasted meat in two hours and poached eggs in fifteen minutes—quite as good time as the ordinary fire makes. An odd thing about meat roasted by sun rays is that it has an unpleasant taste. This is avoided by the insertion of a plate of yellow glass between meat and mirror. In all solar stoves the sheet of yellow glass figures.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Queer English Laws.

"No statute law of England ever can be obsolete," a legal journal says. "Once enacted, it continues in binding force until repealed."

If such be really the case, there ought to be some lively times ahead for several classes of the community. For instance, what will builders have to say to the act which penalizes any person who erects a house without attaching to it at least four acres of land? This was one of "good Queen Bess'" laws, and it has most certainly never been repealed.

By another unrepealed statute, which dates back to the first year of King James I., it is enacted that not more than a penny may be charged for a quart of the best old ale nor more than a halfpenny for a like quantity of small beer. The penalty for each infraction of the act is 20 shillings, so that if it were rigidly enforced it would not need, apparently, a licensing bill to ruin the brewers. Then, again, a Catholic owning a horse is still legally obliged to sell it for £5 to anybody who chooses to offer that sum for it.—London Graphic.

The First Mourning Paper.

The oldest known letter written on black edged note paper as a sign of mourning appears to be one dated Jan. 5, 1683. In Addison's comedy of "The Drummer," 1716, reference is made to the fashion in the words, "My lady's mourning paper that is blacked at the edges." A few years later Allan Ramsay, who died in 1758, speaks in one of his poems of "the sable bordered sheet" as a messenger of sorrow. Mann, writing from Italy to Horace Walpole in 1745, says that it was universally used in Florence at that time. The superior elegance of this Italian note paper, with its narrow margin of black, explains its ready acceptance in this country, where it superseded the quarto sheet with a black border sometimes a quarter of an inch wide. In this way it probably gave an impetus to the fashion. But it is a mistake to suppose, as some have done, that the fashion was introduced from Italy.—London Answers.

Caught Alive.

A New Yorker, a big game hunter of many years' experience, was lion shooting in Uganda. He had excellent luck. Nearly every day he posed in a complacent attitude beside a freshly killed lion, and his photographer snapped him for the magazines.

One afternoon the photographer, who was taking a nap in the hut, was awakened by a loud noise. He rose and looked out. Sprinting toward him from the jungle, hat gone and coattails flying, came his chief, and, with terrible roars and growls, a huge lion bounded at his heels.

The photographer gazed spellbound at the strange and exciting picture. His chief, perceiving him, shouted:

"Quick, quick! Open the door, George! I'm bringing him home alive!"—Washington Star.

Spoiling a Tragedy.

"If you don't marry me," he said desperately, "I shall kill myself."

"And write a note telling all about it?" queried the maid.

"Yes."

"And hold my photograph in your other hand?"

"I had thought about it."

"Well, just wait a minute," she said, "and I'll borrow pa's pistol for you. My, but won't it be romantic?"

But he faded.

The Head of the House.

It is folly to call the husband the head of the house; he is not. It is but a courtesy title at best, since in truth he is but an incident in the home life, while the wife and mother is its whole existence. Literally the sun of domestic happiness rises and sets in the face of the wife and mother.—Clara Morris in Housekeeper.

"Did you hang up any mistletoe las' Christmas?" asked Erastus Pinkley.

"'Deed I didn't," answered Miss Miami Brown. "I's got a little too much pride to advertise feh de ordinary courtesies dat a lady has a right to expect."—Exchange.

A Beggar In a Basket.

Perhaps the most curious use to which Mexicans put their baskets is to hold gamecocks. Sometimes the cock's basket is woven for the purpose; oftener it is made from a sombrero, the wide, high crowned, straw hat of the country, into which the bird is put, a hole cut in the crown to give him air and the brim carefully tied down that he may not escape. The bullfight has been called the national sport of Mexico, but cockfighting is much more universal, for the humblest peasant may have his gamecock, which he keeps in a carefully made cage in his patio, watches with pride and tends with care.

One of the strangest uses to which a basket has probably ever been put was the daily appearance in the streets of a young man carrying in a huge bushel basket on his shoulders his great-grandmother, of unknown age, who held out a skinny hand to the passer-by for the centavo which was almost unfailingly given. Surely a trust in Providence could go no further.—Eleanor Hope Johnson in Outing Magazine.

A Practical Joke.

He was a wag and was passing a large draper's shop in Manchester. There, drawn up, were three or four vehicles, and among them was a closed brougham with the driver fast asleep on the box. Evidently the mistress was inside the shop. Without a word the wag stole quickly up and, opening the carriage door, carefully slammed it to. In an instant the coachman straightened himself up and gazed up the street as if he had never seen anything more interesting to look at in his life. Then he stole a look over his shoulder and saw the wag standing hat in hand, apparently conversing with some one inside the carriage.

"Thank you, yes. Good morning," said the practical joker and bowed himself graciously away from the door turning as he did so to look at the coachman and say, "Home!"

"Yes, sir! Tch! Get up!" And away went the brougham home.

Where that home was, who the mistress of the carriage was or what she did or said when she came out of the shop or what the coachman did or said when he stopped at the door of "home" and found the carriage empty—all that only the coachman and the lady know.—London Tit-Bits.

"An electric thrill seemed to pass through me as he entered the room," she said afterward, and when the meeting was over she went up to him. "I leave for London on the next train," he said hurriedly. "Please send me your address." "I do not know where," she replied, with some embarrassment. He instantly handed out his card and was gone. A formal little note followed. "Dear Captain Reid.—As you asked me to send you my address, I do so." By return of post came the answer, "Only say that you love me and I will be with you at once," and then the reply "I think I do love you."

An Awkward Player.

In 1608 King James published his famous "Book of Sports" and, thinking to render the Presbyterian form of worship less rigid, ordered that certain of the sports therein commended should be played in the several church yards every Sunday at the close of divine service. John Ross, a minister of Blairgowrie, adopted a novel method of withstanding the royal ordinance. He was a strong, athletic man and seemed much interested in the recreations enjoined by the monarch. Foot ball was selected by the parishioners of Blairgowrie from the list of "Sunday games." When the services of the church were completed Mr. Ross appeared among his people in the church yard and joined them in their sport. None of the assemblage kicked more eagerly at the football than did the reverend incumbent. But constant misfortune seemed to attend him. Every kick missed the ball and fell heavily on the ankles of those who stood near. Apologies were promptly tendered and, of course, received, though every Sunday many of the parishioners returned home halting. Finally it was agreed that on account of the minister's awkwardness the game should be abandoned. Thus the ingenious divine gained his end and prevented compliance with the obnoxious order.

Dreams of the Blind.

In my dreams I have sensations, odors, tastes and ideas which I do not remember to have had in reality. Perhaps they are the glimpses which my mind catches through the veil of sleep of my earliest babyhood. I have heard "the trampling of many waters." Sometimes a wonderful light visits me in sleep. Such a flash and glory as it is! I gaze and gaze until it vanishes. I smell and taste much as in my waking hours, but the sense of touch plays a less important part. In sleep I almost never grope. No one guides me. Even in a crowded street I am self sufficient, and I enjoy an independence quite foreign to my physical life. Now I seldom spell on my fingers, and it is still rarer for others to spell into my hand. My mind acts independent of my physical organs. I am delighted to be thus endowed, if only in sleep, for then my soul dons its winged sandals and joyfully joins the throng of happy beings who dwell beyond the reaches of bodily sense.—Helen Keller in Century.

Whittier's Applause.

In his declining years the poet Whittier was extremely absentminded. He attended a church meeting where there were a large number of persons. As his presence was known, it was deemed fitting by one of the speakers to quote the poet's lines:

I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.

Great applause greeted the quotation and Whittier was noticed to join in the handclapping. "I suppose I must have had my mind on something else. I had no recollection of having written the verse," he said apologetically when his attention was called to the authorship.—Boston Post.

What He Wanted.

"You are a poor young man?"
"I am."
"Then what you want is a thrifty economical wife."
"Not at all. What I want is a rich liberal wife."

COMMON SENSE

Leads most intelligent people to use only medicines of known composition. Therefore it is that Dr. Pierce's medicines, the makers of which print every ingredient entering into them upon the bottle wrappers and attest its correctness under oath, are daily growing in favor. The composition of Dr. Pierce's medicines is open to everybody. Dr. Pierce being desirous of having the search light of investigation turned fully upon his formulas, being confident that the better the composition of these medicines is known, the more will their great curative merits be recognized. Being wholly made of the active medicinal principles extracted from native forest roots, by exact processes original with Dr. Pierce, and without the use of a drop of alcohol, triple-refined and chemically pure glycerine being used instead in extracting and preserving the curative virtues residing in the roots employed, these medicines are entirely free from the objection of doing harm by creating an appetite for either alcoholic beverages or habit-forming drugs. Examine the formula on their bottle wrappers—the same as sworn to by Dr. Pierce, and you will find that his "Golden Medical Discovery," the great, blood-purifier, stomach tonic and bowel regulator—the medicine which, while not recommended to cure consumption in its advanced stages (no medicine will do that) yet does cure all those catarrhal conditions of head and throat, weak stomach, torpid liver and bronchial troubles, weak lungs and hang-on-coughs, which, if neglected or badly treated lead up to and finally terminate in consumption.

Take the "Golden Medical Discovery" in time and it is not likely to disappoint you if only you give it a thorough and fair trial. Don't expect miracles. It won't do supernatural things. You must exercise your patience and persevere in its use for a reasonable length of time to get its full benefits. The ingredients of which Dr. Pierce's medicines are composed have the unqualified endorsement of scores of medical leaders—better than any amount of lay, or non-professional, testimonials. They are not given away to be experimented with but are sold by all dealers in medicines at reasonable prices.

Cashing Up.

"Have you ever played poker with your son-in-law?"

"Only once," answered Mr. Cumrox. "It wasn't very satisfactory."

"Did he win?"

"No; he lost. But it merely resulted in my having to write him a check so that he could indorse it over to me."—Washington Star.

Porter Always a Sailor.

During Grant's first term his secretary of the navy, Borie, for a time turned the actual administration over to Admiral Porter. Admiral Porter was a sailor in the strict etymological sense of the term in that he believed there was nothing like sails. As soon as he was in authority he caused the four bladed propellers of the vessels to be removed and replaced by two bladed ones in order that the ships might maneuver better under sail. The inefficiency thereby brought about is, of course, apparent to any engineer, as the size of the propeller opening was fixed and the two bladed screw could not be made large enough. A few years later in a report to the department he actually claimed that the vessels were faster under steam with the mutilated screws. The facts, of course, were just the reverse, and when his influence became less proper propellers were again fitted. This was when he was still in his prime and his judgment was, at least, not impaired by age. About twenty years later, when the Roach cruisers were being built, the dear old man, then over seventy, went before the naval committee and said that the plans of these vessels were wrong because they had only auxiliary sail power. In his judgment they should have been given full sail power with steam as an auxiliary. He was still a sailor! The world had not moved for him.—Engineering Magazine.

"Masculine," said the learned Tommy.

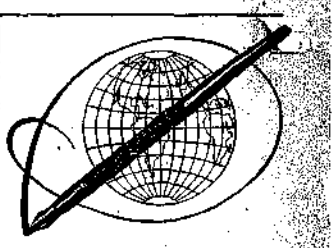
"Bean't it wonnerful!" said the proud father. "And thy mither, Tommy?"

"Feminine," replied the erudite juvenile.

"Hear that agen!" cried the delighted father. "An', noo, Tommy," he proceeded, picking up the family teapot, "what gender is this?"

"Neuter," said Tommy.

Sam's face fell.



"Well, well," he exclaimed, "it's allus the way. Still, not but what the little lad was far oot. He only said neuter 'stead of pewter, that's a'!"—London Tit-Bits.

Resentment.

An old toper, being very hard up, went into his favorite bar and asked the publican for a glass "on tick."

"No," said the proprietor, "I won't give you whisky on credit, but there's a sixpence. Now, what do you want?"

"Nothing here," replied the tippler, lifting the coin and putting it in his pocket. "The man who refuses me credit won't get my ready cash," and with an elevated nose he marched out at the door.—London Telegraph.

Cooking With Sunlight.

Sun cooking—roasting and boiling by sunlight instead of coal or gas—has been going on for 300 years. There are sun stoves that roast a sirloin or boil a soup to perfection. They are only used, however, by scientists. A sun stove consists mainly of a mirror—a spherical mirror on a joint. There is also a reflector. The place for pot or plate is so situated that the mirror's rays can be focused on it accurately. A German, Baron Tschirnhausen, was the first sun cook. He began in 1687 to boil water, and in 1688 he had very good success at baking eggs. Sir John Herschel and Buffon are other famous names associated with sun cooking. In California various sun cooks have boiled a gallon of water in twenty minutes, roasted meat in two hours and poached eggs in fifteen minutes—quite as good time as the ordinary fire makes. An odd thing about meat roasted by sun rays is that it has an unpleasant taste. This is avoided by the insertion of a plate of yellow glass between meat and mirror. In all solar stoves the sheet of yellow glass figures.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Queer English Laws.

"No statute law of England ever can be obsolete," a legal journal says. "Once enacted, it continues in binding force until repealed."

If such be really the case, there ought to be some lively times ahead for several classes of the community. For instance, what will builders have to say to the act which penalizes any person who erects a house without attaching to it at least four acres of land? This was one of "good Queen Bess'" laws, and it has most certainly never been repealed.

By another unrepealed statute, which dates back to the first year of King James I., it is enacted that not more than a penny may be charged for a quart of the best old ale nor more than a halfpenny for a like quantity of small beer. The penalty for each infraction of the act is 20 shillings, so that if it were rigidly enforced it would not need, apparently, a licensing bill to ruin the brewers. Then, again, a Catholic owning a horse is still legally obliged to sell it for £5 to anybody who chooses to offer that sum for it.—London Graphic.

The First Mourning Paper.

The oldest known letter written on black edged note paper as a sign of mourning appears to be one dated Jan. 5, 1688. In Addison's comedy of "The Drummer," 1715, reference is made to the fashion in the words, "My lady's mourning paper that is blacked at the edges." A few years later Allan Ramsay, who died in 1758, speaks in one of his poems of "the sable bordered sheet" as a messenger of sorrow. Mann, writing from Italy to Horace Walpole in 1745, says that it was universally used in Florence at that time. The superior elegance of this Italian note paper, with its narrow margin of black, explains its ready acceptance in this country, where it superseded the quarto sheet with a black border sometimes a quarter of an inch wide. In this way it probably gave an impetus to the fashion. But it is a mistake to suppose, as some have done, that the fashion was introduced from Italy.—London Answers.

Caught Alive.

A New Yorker, a big game hunter of many years' experience, was lion shooting in Uganda. He had excellent luck. Nearly every day he posed in a complacent attitude beside a freshly killed lion, and his photographer snapped him for the magazines.

One afternoon the photographer, who was taking a nap in the hut, was awakened by a loud noise. He rose and looked out. Sprinting toward him from the jungle, hat gone and coattails flying, came his chief, and, with terrible roars and growls, a huge lion bounded at his heels.

The photographer gazed spellbound at the strange and exciting picture. His chief, perceiving him, shouted:

"Quick, quick! Open the door, George! I'm bringing him home alive!"—Washington Star.

Spoiling a Tragedy.

"If you don't marry me," he said desperately, "I shall kill myself."

"And write a note telling all about it?" queried the maid.

"Yes."

"And hold my photograph in your other hand?"

"I had thought about it."

"Well, just wait a minute," she said, "and I'll borrow pa's pistol for you. My, but won't it be romantic?"

But he faded.

The Head of the House.

It is folly to call the husband the head of the house; he is not. It is but a courtesy title at best, since in truth he is but an incident in the home life, while the wife and mother is its whole existence. Literally the sun of domestic happiness rises and sets in the face of the wife and mother.—Clara Morris in Housekeeper.

Every kick missed the ball and fell heavily on the ankles of those who stood near. Apologies were promptly tendered and, of course, received, though every Sunday many of the parishioners returned home halting. Finally it was agreed that on account of the minister's awkwardness the game should be abandoned. Thus the ingenious divine gained his end and prevented compliance with the obnoxious order.

Dreams of the Blind.

In my dreams I have sensations, odors, tastes and ideas which I do not remember to have had in reality. Perhaps they are the glimpses which my mind catches through the veil of sleep of my earliest babyhood. I have heard "the trampling of many waters." Sometimes a wonderful light visits me in sleep. Such a flash and glory as it is! I gaze and gaze until it vanishes. I smell and taste much as in my waking hours, but the sense of touch plays a less important part. In sleep I almost never grope. No one guides me. Even in a crowded street I am self sufficient, and I enjoy an independence quite foreign to my physical life. Now I seldom spell on my fingers, and it is still rarer for others to spell into my hand. My mind acts independent of my physical organs. I am delighted to be thus endowed, if only in sleep, for then my soul dons its winged sandals and joyfully joins the throng of happy beings who dwell beyond the reaches of bodily sense.—Helen Keller in Century.

Lucky.

Rustic—What's the matter? Motorist—Matter! I can't get this car to go. Rustic—Then it's the lucky man you are, for just yesterday a motorist got nearly smashed to bits here because he couldn't get his car to stop.

Whittier's Applause.

In his declining years the poet Whittier was extremely absentminded. He attended a church meeting where there were a large number of persons. As his presence was known, it was deemed fitting by one of the speakers to quote the poet's lines:

I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.

Great applause greeted the quotation and Whittier was noticed to join in the handclapping. "I suppose I must have had my mind on something else. I had no recollection of having written the verse," he said apologetically when his attention was called to the authorship.—Boston Post.

What He Wanted.

"You are a poor young man?"
"I am."
"Then what you want is a thrifty economical wife."
"Not at all. What I want is a rich liberal wife."

COMMON SENSE

Leads most intelligent people to use only medicines of known composition. Therefore it is that Dr. Pierce's medicines, the makers of which print every ingredient entering into them upon the bottle wrappers and attest its correctness under oath, are daily growing in favor. The composition of Dr. Pierce's medicines is open to everybody. Dr. Pierce being desirous of having the search light of investigation turned fully upon his formulæ, being confident that the better the composition of Dr. Pierce's medicines is known the more will their great curative merits be recognized. Being wholly made of the active medicinal principles extracted from native forest roots, by exact processes original with Dr. Pierce, and without the use of a drop of alcohol, triple-refined and chemically pure glycerine being used instead in extracting and preserving the curative virtues residing in the roots employed, these medicines are entirely free from the objection of doing harm by creating an appetite for either alcoholic beverages or habit-forming drugs. Examine the formula on their bottle wrappers—the same as sworn to by Dr. Pierce, and you will find that his "Golden Medical Discovery," the great, blood-purifier, stomach tonic and bowel regulator—the medicine which, while not recommended to cure consumption in its advanced stages (no medicine will do that) yet does cure all those catarrhal conditions of head and throat, weak stomach, torpid liver and bronchial troubles, weak lungs and hang-on-coughs, which, if neglected or badly treated lead up to and finally terminate in consumption.

Take the "Golden Medical Discovery" in time and it is not likely to disappoint you if only you give it a thorough and fair trial. Don't expect miracles. It won't do supernatural things. You must exercise your patience and persevere in its use for a reasonable length of time to get its full benefits. The ingredients of which Dr. Pierce's medicines are composed have the unqualified endorsement of scores of medical leaders—better than any amount of lay, or non-professional, testimonials. They are not given away to be experimented with but are sold by all dealers in medicines at reasonable prices.

Cashing Up.

"Have you ever played poker with your son-in-law?"

"Only once," answered Mr. Cumrox. "It wasn't very satisfactory."

"Did he win?"

"No; he lost. But it merely resulted in my having to write him a check so that he could indorse it over to me."—Washington Star.

Porter Always a Sailor.

During Grant's first term his secretary of the navy, Borie, for a time turned the actual administration over to Admiral Porter. Admiral Porter was a sailor in the strict etymological sense of the term in that he believed there was nothing like sails. As soon as he was in authority he caused the four bladed propellers of the vessels to be removed and replaced by two bladed ones in order that the ships might maneuver better under sail. The inefficiency thereby brought about is, of course, apparent to any engineer, as the size of the propeller opening was fixed and the two bladed screw could not be made large enough. A few years later in a report to the department he actually claimed that the vessels were faster under steam with the mutilated screws. The facts, of course, were just the reverse, and when his influence became less proper propellers were again fitted. This was when he was still in his prime and his judgment was, at least, not impaired by age. About twenty years later, when the Roach cruisers were being built, the dear old man, then over seventy, went before the naval committee and said that the plans of these vessels were wrong because they had only auxiliary sail power. In his judgment they should have been given full sail power with steam as an auxiliary. He was still a sailor! The world had not moved for him.—Engineering Magazine.

Only a Letter Out.

"Talk about scholards," said the proud Sam Smith. "Listen to my little lad talk about grammar. Tommy, what gender is thy fayther?"

"Masculine," said the learned Tommy.

"Bean't it wonnerful!" said the proud father. "And thy mither, Tommy?"

"Feminine," replied the erudite juvenile.

"Hear that agen!" cried the delighted father. "An', noo, Tommy," he proceeded, picking up the family teapot, "what gender is this?"

"Neuter," said Tommy.

Sam's face fell.

"Well, well," he exclaimed, "it's allus the way. Still, not but what the little lad wus far oot. He only said neuter 'stead of pewter, that's a'!"—London Tit-Bits.

Resentment.

An old toper, being very hard up, went into his favorite bar and asked the publican for a glass "on tick."

"No," said the proprietor, "I won't give you whisky on credit, but there's a sixpence. Now, what do you want?"

"Nothing here," replied the tippler, lifting the coin and putting it in his pocket. "The man who refuses me credit won't get my ready cash," and with an elevated nose he marched out at the door.—London Telegraph.

It is highly probable that the appointive officers of the county will be placed on the Civil Service list just prior to or right after the new year. If Oswego county employes are placed under the Civil Service it will make nine counties in the State whose employes are thus protected.

COMMON COUNCIL

Fulton, Dec. 8, 1908.

Adjourned meeting Common Council Present — Mayor Quirk, Aldermen Crahan, Dwyer, Marvin, VanBuren.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

The following communication was read by the clerk:

To the Honorable Mayor and Common Council of the City of Fulton, N. Y.

I, as a taxpayer, hereby protest against the payment of any bills by Stephen Buck, commander of Post Schenck, G. A. R., or by any of the committee for the support, care, nursing, or doctor's bills in the case of the late Alpheus Sparks, a soldier, on the grounds that he was not a resident of the State of New York. He lived in the state of Ohio ten years prior to April 1st, 1908, which is about the date of his first appearance in Fulton. The law provides for the support of this man but he was not a charge on the city of Fulton. I went with Mr. Buck to the hospital, and got a statement of said deceased, Mr. Sparks, and at the request of Mr. Buck called up Mr. Guthrie, county superintendent of poor, who instructed me to telephone Dr. Wells, the county doctor, and have him attend the case, which he did until his death.

Also against paying any bills for coal, wood, provisions or rent in the case of William H. Bishop, who proves to be an imposter. This man called on me January 9th, 1908, stated that he came from Canaan Four Corners, near Poughkeepsie, N. Y., that he was sixty two years of age, with a wife and three children, the youngest a babe of nine months, owning nothing but two trunks. I helped him with provisions and fuel to the amount of $7.13 and wrote to Canaan and found out that he lived there but three months. I then notified Mr. Guthrie and he accepted him as a county charge, and the amount that I helped him, $7.13, was refunded to this city. Mr. Buck tells me that the G. A. R. helped him to the amount of $25.00 besides giving him $10.00 to leave town with. He was here but one month. Mr. Buck tells me that he is an imposter. Then I, as a taxpayer, would ask that you demand from Post Schenck, G. A. R. of the city of Fulton, N. Y., itemized bills, properly sworn to, and receipts for all moneys paid out by them in relief of their indigent poor soldiers and sailors, and that soldiers owning real property should take care of themselves.

I believe that the taxpayers should know what use is made of this money.

Several instances have come within my observation where physicians have been called by the local G. A. R. to care for sick poor and have been allowed to continue their visits when no longer necessary, thus running up an unwarranted bill against the city. I desire to protest against this practice, and to suggest that a closer watch on the part of the G. A. R. might save money for the taxpayers in this regard.

December 8, 1908.

A. W. STONEBURGH,
Taxpayer.

Alderman L. VanBuren introduced the following and moved its adoption:

Resolved, That the purchase of property by the Board of Public Works on behalf of the city from Emma A. McRea for the sum of $500 on which to construct a sewage disposal plant in connection with the West Side system, be and the same hereby is approved.

For That Dull Feeling After Eating.

I have used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets for some time, and can testify that they have done me more good than any tablets I have ever used. My trouble was a heavy dull feeling after eating.—David Freeman, Kempt, Nova Scotia. These tablets strengthen the stomach and improve the digestion. They also regulate the liver and bowels. They are far superior to pills but cost no more. Get a free sample at E. A. Putnam's drug store and see what a splendid medicine it is.

Friend—You took your son into your establishment some months ago to teach him the business, I understand. How did it turn out?

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

Supervisor Barker of New Haven presented a favorable report in behalf of the Highway Committee relative to the building of a new road from the Granby town line to the village of Hannibal. Supervisor Rogers moved that the report be accepted and the road ordered. —Adopted.

Supervisor Wilson moved that the Supply Committee for the year 1909 consist of Supervisors Taylor of Oswego; Buck of Mexico and Terry of Pulaski. —Adopted.

Supervisor Kellogg moved a levy of $100 on Volney for improvements on the Fulton-Volney road.

—Levy Ordered.

Supervisor Beardsley presented a report showing the bonded debt of Granby, including the West side of Fulton, for the bridge to be $280,000 and the amount of principal and interest due July 1 to be $3,120.

Supervisor Barker presented the report of Coroner Vowinkle, giving a list of the property found on dead persons.

Supervisor Whitney offered the report of the Equalization Committee. No particular changes have been made in the towns this year.

—Over One Day.

Supervisor Beardsley moved a levy of $1,284.33 on Granby to pay the town's share of bridge bonds.

—Levy Ordered.

Supervisor Terry presented a report showing the railroad indebtedness of Richland for the Syracuse Northern road to be $1,000 and the amount of principal and interest due to be $5,262.50. —Received.

Supervisor Gray presented a report showing the railroad bonded debt of Parish to be $4,000 and the amount of principal and interest due to be $2,105. —Received.

Clerk Spencer read a report from James H. Foster, Inspector for the State Charity Department, of the annual inspection of the County Almshouse at Mexico. The Inspector spoke in complimentary terms of the neatness of the institution and the kindness and courtesy shown to the inmates by the officials in charge. Everything was found in first class condition so far as the care of inmates was concerned. The inspector, however, criticises the buildings and says they should be extensively repaired, including new floors and sidewalls and stairways. The lack of fire escapes and other fire protection is criticised. Supervisor Whitney moved that the report be received and placed on file.

Supervisor Kellogg moved a levy of $500 on Volney to pay certificate of indebtedness. — Levy Ordered.

Supervisor Howard moved a levy of $11.12 on Palermo to pay County Treasurer for a tax deed.

—Levy Ordered.

Supervisor Sweetland moved that Edward S. Baker have charge of grounds around the County Clerk's office at a salary of $50.

—Levy Ordered.

Mr. Beardsley moved a levy on Granby of $10 for farmers' institute.

—Levy Ordered.

Supervisor Gregg moved that the Committee to Settle with the County Treasurer be authorized to employ an expert accountant at a compensation of not to exceed $150.

Supervisor Barker of Orwell said he understood that an expert could be employed for less and he thought the expense should be kept down. He thought it was up to the committee to settle the matter without any further authority from the board.

Supervisor Abbey thought the board should spend whatever was necessary to have the books examined.

Supervisor Gregg said the authority given by the board yesterday was not deemed sufficient as the board was only meeting as a Committee of the Whole. In regard to the price, he said the expert who examined the books last year (Mr. Farrell) wanted $10 per day and $2 expenses which would make the amount $150. He said that he understood to-day that an Oswego accountant had offered to do the work for less. The sum was fixed at $150 in order to be safe.

The resolution providing for an expert was unanimously adopted.

Supervisor Whitney moved that the report of the Equalization Committee be taken from the table and adopted.

Supervisor Barker of Orwell seconded the resolution so far as the equalization made by the Board was concerned but he objected to the equalization as made by the State Board of Canvassers. He said that when the State Board was here last summer the County Assessors were praised for assessing up to the value. By an examination of the equalization report Mr. Barker says that he now finds that the State Board of Assessors has saddled onto Oswego County an increased valuation of $845,455. He considered this amount exorbitant especially in view of the fact that the State Board reduced Kings County's assessed valuation $33,211,893; New York City's, $134,637,103 and our neighboring Onondaga County, $2,186,513. He declared that the increase made by the State was excessive.

Supervisor Barker of New Haven also made a protest and said it made a difference in his town of $250 for road purposes. He believed the counties should be represented when the State Board fixed the amounts.

The report of the Equalization Committee was taken from the table and adopted.

Supervisor Kellogg presented a report showing the O. and W. bonded debt to be $142,000 with principal and interest due amounting to $9,460; Volney bridge bonds outstanding $23,000 with principal and interest due amounting to $3,120.

It Is a Wonder.

For Bargain Day.

"She's no lady!"

"Why, I always thought her most refined."

"On the surface, yes. But what do you think of a woman who wears her little boy's football shoes to the bargain sales and spikes every one who gets in her way?"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Making Caricatures.

The way in which some artists can distort features without making them unrecognizable is certainly very remarkable. Thomas Nast possessed this faculty to an extraordinary degree, and he had a very peculiar way of adding new faces to his mental photograph gallery. When a fresh subject would arise in politics, for instance, he would invent some pretext to call upon him at his office or house and hold him in conversation as long as possible, studying his features. When he took his departure he would purposely leave his cane. Once outside, Nast would make a hasty pencil sketch on a card and would usually find that his memory was deficient as to some detail. He would then return, ostensibly for the cane, and another look at the victim would enable him to perfect his sketch. After that he had the man forever. When Joe Kepler was alive he used to make frequent trips to Washington for the purpose of seeing statesmen whom he wanted to draw. He was very clever at catching likenesses and scarcely ever referred to a photograph.

Her Ideal Villain.

The following anecdote, taken from "My Story," by Hall Caine, is interesting:

Immediately after the production of "The Woman in White," when all England was admiring the arch villainy of Fosco, the author, Wilkie Collins, received a visit from a lady who congraculated him upon his success with somewhat icy cheer and then said: "But, Mr. Collins, the great failure of your book is your villain. Excuse me if I say you really do not know a villain. Your Count Fosco is a very poor one, and when next you want a character of that description I trust that you will not disdain to come to me. I know a villain and have one in my eye at this moment that would far eclipse anything that I have ever read of in books. Don't think that I am drawing upon my imagination. The man is alive and constantly under my gaze. In fact, he is my own husband."

The lady was the wife of Edward Bulwer Lytton.

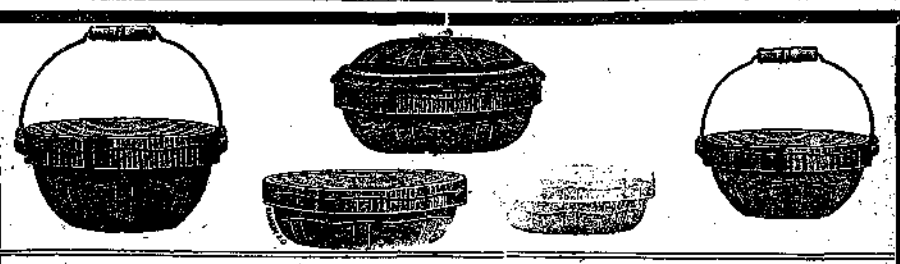
Hot Scotch.

The young wife dipped the ladle into the porridge and smiled inquiringly at the overnight guest.

"Will you have some hot Scotch, Mr. Dash?" she asked.

Dash laughed.

"Hot Scotch? Where is it?" said he.



"Why, here, of course," said the young wife in a perplexed tone. "Didn't you know that oatmeal is called hot Scotch?"

"Er—I"— Dash stammered, and then the young husband caught his eye, and he was silent.

"I didn't know it myself till last year," she explained. "I heard George inviting his cousin over the telephone to meet him at the office and have a hot Scotch. I didn't know what hot Scotch was till you told me, did I, George?"

George, very red, answered huskily: "No, my dear."

Laughing at her own ignorance, the lady proceeded to serve the thick, pale hot Scotch.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

'Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

The Christmas Sister

...By HOWARD FIELDING...

Copyright, 1908, by C. N. Lurie

HERE are two matters which may help to give me a nook of your mind for a few minutes. If you haven't heard of one, you very likely have heard of the other.

First, I am the only original survivor of the Delphic, that was lost at sea in May of 1887; second, in partnership with Tom Campbell I discovered the Golden Bush mine in Idaho. The wreck of the Delphic figures in this story; the Golden Bush mine merely stands in the background as a source of affluence.

"I TOOK CONNOR BY THE SHOULDER."

I was five years old when the Delphic was lost. With my father and mother and infant sister I had sailed from Liverpool in this ill fated vessel, which was in collision before she got out of sight of the harbor. She returned and was laid up for several days, not very much damaged, but most of the passengers were sent forward by another ship. My parents chose to stay by the Delphic, I know not why.

It has always been supposed that she struck an iceberg off the banks. I can tell you only that the disaster was at night. I remember the awakening, the thrill of half realized terror, the wild noises and the trampling. My father was carrying me, wrapped in a coat, my mother following with little Hilda. Then something crashed. I recall no feeling of a blow, but my consciousness went out like a candle. The next thing I knew it was dawn and I was in a boat with one sailor who had a wounded head and was covered with blood. It has been supposed that this boat was lowered end foremost in true panic style and all aboard her were pitched out except the wounded sailor and myself.

Eventually we were picked up by a sailing vessel, my companion unconscious and dying. I was taken to Boston and sent on thence to an uncle in New York, by whom I was reared. He died when I was thirteen, leaving a small property in trust. I attended Columbia college and school of mines and eventually took my inheritance and went west. Two years later came the affair of the Golden Bush, and I was rich.

The larger part of the year 1907 I spent in New York and thereabouts. I had everything except a home. On the 23d of December of that year I was living in luxurious bachelor apartments, more lonely than I was in the week that I spent on the Golden Bush claim with only the haggard faces of the mountains for company.

On the evening of the day that I have named I returned from a rather early and very lonesome dinner and found a young man named Connor waiting for me. I had never met him before. He was a sturdy, pleasant fellow, Celtic and Dutch on the face of him, and he introduced himself by presenting a letter from a very estimable and charming young matron, Mrs. Leslie Gilbert, whose somewhat misguided charities had occasionally appealed to my pocket.

"MY BROTHER!" SAID SHE.

"Mr. Connor will tell you a surprising story," wrote this lady. "I would have liked to tell you myself, but he insists upon his right. He is a journalist, and this is his story. My heartiest congratulations."

In my apartments the tables were littered with photographs, as they always are. My fad since I was a boy has been the study of the different kinds of men and the faces that they wear. I do not study horses, but it happened that I had some photographs that had been sent up from a friend's stock farm in Kentucky, and it seemed to me that Connor saw these before he fairly got into the room. He did not notice any of the portraits of people, but plumped straight down upon the picture of a horse which he recognized instantly, though there was no lettering on it.

"Humbert!" he cried and went on to give me the horse's pedigree—Bertram on one side and Humble on the other, and all the rest of it—but suddenly broke off this strain and came to the business that had brought him there.

First, with inimitable brevity and pith, he sketched the wreck of the Delphic.

"You," said he in closing, "were the sole survivor."

"Yes," said I.

"I have found another," said he. "There floated away from that wretched vessel, heaven knows how, a sort of life raft, very small and not properly a part of the regular equipment of the ship, though it was stenciled with her name. There is a tradition that one of the officers of the Delphic invented this style of raft or was interested in it in some way. Anyhow, it was aboard, and it floated and was picked up by a fishing schooner out of Newfoundland. It bore the dead body of a man and a living child. The man had saved this child even after his own death, for his stiffened arms held it. A little girl"—

I took Connor by the shoulder.

"You are going to tell me," said I, "that this girl was my sister. Don't do it unless you're sure. I am very much alone in the world. A sister would mean to me—well, perhaps rather more than you could easily believe."

He took some sheets of paper from his pocket. They were folded and fastened together at a corner.

"There's a list," said he, "of every human being on the Delphic. I told you that nearly all the original passengers were transferred to another vessel. What resulted? Why, just this—there was only one girl baby on the ship!"

The simplicity and force of this statement staggered me. There remained, of course, many questions, but I was unable for the moment to frame one.

"Let me tell you," said he, "how I first got on the track of this. It was through Mrs. Gilbert. She is interested in the Woman's Exchange, as you're aware, and thus she came to know a very beautiful and charming girl who brought embroideries to the exchange to be sold. This girl fell ill, and—well, she was pretty hard up: that's the fact about it."

The tears rushed to my eyes. Ill and destitute, my sister, and I so rich that people pointed me out in public places as the Golden Bush man!

"Mrs. Gilbert was very good to her," continued Connor, "but I guess the best thing she did for her was to tell me that the young lady was a survivor of the Delphic and had been brought up by foster parents at a place in Newfoundland. I thought I saw a story, and I telegraphed to our correspondent in Newfoundland on my own account. When I got his answer—which was a peach, as you'll see—I made some investigations here through the agents of the line to which the Delphic belonged and had the luck to tumble straight on one old fellow who knew everything and had records and all that. Then I went to Mrs. Gilbert and told her what I had learned. You may imagine her surprise in view of her acquaintance with you and the fact that she didn't know that you were the original Delphic survivor."

"I never told her," said I, "but I supposed she knew. It has been printed often enough."

"Mrs. Gilbert says she never reads the papers," replied Connor. "There was only one kink in the story, and that was the reason why the rescue of your sister was kept so extraordinarily quiet. Why didn't your uncle hear of it? I don't know yet, but that can't alter the fact. As to her being a survivor of the Delphic, my man in Newfoundland says there is no shadow of doubt whatever. You will see in his story"—

He was interrupted by a ring at my telephone. I heard the voice of Mrs. Gilbert:

"Oh, Mr. Owen, is that you? Has he told you?"

"Yes," I answered.

"Isn't it wonderful? Isn't it beautiful? I've told her! You must come up—you must come right up. Take an electric, you and Mr. Conner. I'll wait for you right here. The doctor is with her now."

This overwhelmed me, accustomed as I was to Mrs. Gilbert's exuberant style of conversation. I could only gasp, "Where are you?"

"At the drug store on the corner," she replied. "Mr. Connor will know. Hurry!"

It appeared that Mr. Connor really did know, and we obeyed instructions and hurried. We found Mrs. Gilbert, and she led us a little way along a rather poor street, but not squalid, and into a bleak hall bedroom in a lodging house.

That was the room my sister had used before Mrs. Gilbert had transferred her to a better one. It was a "hall room," somewhat larger than a prison cell, sparely but neatly furnished, unprovided with any means for heating except a wretched apparatus fitted to the gas fixture. My sister had lived there. She had lain ill in that narrow bed without care, without attendance, doubtless poorly fed. I thought of it, and I remembered that evening's extravagant dinner with nausea.

I am not ashamed to say that my knees shook under me when I was summoned to the larger room. There was a bed with its head against the wall opposite the door. I saw only a part of it, just a whiteness of piled pillows, a background for a girl's face, and with a sort of undirected vision, more like feeling than seeing, I perceived the doctor in the shadows beyond the bed, watching.

The girl's eyes were blue. They seemed very large in her pale and thin face. They spoke to me in a silent language that I knew. They reached out to my soul with a natural, deep longing.

I extended my hand to her, and she grasped it with a quick, childish clutch.

"My brother!" said she, and the tears rushed from her eyes.

I have since been informed that I acquitted myself admirably. Three witnesses have testified in my favor—four, indeed, if I include my sister, whose emotional state may be held to impair the value of her testimony.

"You were a dear," declared Mrs. Gilbert. "I could have hugged you."

But this is the way it appeared to me: That I was confronted by a situation utterly impossible and beyond mortal tact and discretion; that of two courses open to me I chose the worse and might have done much better than I did even with that. You must take my evidence against that of all the others, for I alone was competent to judge of my conduct, as you will presently see.

My sister told me that she had been known as Della Gray, the first name probably having been derived from Delphic. Gray was the name of the skipper of the fishing vessel that had rescued her. In his home she had lived until her ninth year, when a lady, a summer visitor in Newfoundland, had taken her away to the town of Chatham, N. H. Why the Grays had consented to have her go she did not know, but it was something about money. The lady from Chatham was a Mrs. Lawrence, and she lived in a good home. At her death two years ago my sister had come to New York and had been employed as a stenographer in the office of a lawyer, a cousin of her late patron. He died within a few months, and then began the days of dire poverty, the days of embroidery.

Mrs. Gilbert described her meeting with my sister and spoke with tears in her eyes of the efforts she had made to induce my sister to accept "the least little thing."

"She won't let anybody do anything for her," she declared.

"Except her brother," said I, and the thin hand that still lay in mine thrilled with happiness as it answered my clasp.

Then I told her that her real name was Hilda Owen and that if there was anything in the world that she wanted her big brother Rob would go right out and get it. To which she replied by saying "Robert" several times very softly and sweetly.

The hour was up, and we were all excluded, leaving Hilda with Dr. Hardenberg and a nurse who had just arrived. Mrs. Gilbert rode home in her car, while Connor and I walked aimlessly for a matter of half an hour, when I led him to Dr. Hardenberg's house. The doctor was at work with his microscope.

"This is the best result I've had," he said. "This is absolutely confirmatory."

He had been studying a part of a drop of blood taken from my sister's finger tip, wherein he saw the germ, the infinitesimal enemy that warred against her health, and recognized the creature by its aspect.

"Doctor," said I, "you have permitted me to hold a somewhat exciting interview with your patient. I hope she has taken no harm."

"Harm!" he cried. "I should think not. She'll get well in half the time."

"What result would follow," I asked, "if she should now be told that I am not her brother?"

Hardenberg and Connor both started back from me, staring.

"Good heavens!" cried the doctor. "What do you mean? I wouldn't have that happen for a mint of money!"

"But you know that I'm not her brother, don't you?"

"I?" he gasped. "No. You must be. There was no other female child except your sister on that ship. How can we doubt?"

"You have seen us both," said I—"you who can recognize the features of that microscopic creature which you have to magnify a thousand times, I suppose, in order to see it at all."

"I've got 1,500 on it tonight," said the doctor. "If you were magnified as much as that you could carry the Flatiron building in your pocket for a matchbox. But what of it?"

"If you mean that she doesn't look like you," said Connor, "I tell you you're dead wrong. There's a strong family resemblance."

Pomona Grange.

The regular quarterly session of Pomona Grange of Oswego County met at Oswego, Tuesday Dec. 8. The morning session was devoted to the following business: reading and adoption of officers' yearly reports and report of committee appointed at Southwest Oswego in Sept. to confer with District Attorney Baker.

A strong protest was made by the master, chairman of legislative committee, and others against the publication of any subjects discussed in the grange, for use as political capital.

The afternoon session opened with the reading and adoption of the report of the legislative committee concerning resolutions presented by subordinate granges. This was followed by the yearly report of the secretary of the Oswego Co. Fire Relief Association. Adopted. The following directors were then elected for the ensuing year; P. A. Welling, W. W. Rounds, Charles May, L. M. Moran, George W. Robinson, and James Wadsworth in place of W. W. Wadsworth, deceased.

A letter was read from Captain Calkin giving the grange a most cordial invitations to inspect the new armory during the day. Secretary ordered to reply and accept in behalf of grange. Executive committee ordered to ascertain if rooms could be secured in the armory for the March session. Moved and carried that the present executive committee be retained for another year.

Tributes to the memory of Brothers Dale and Wadsworth were offered by members.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year; Master, H. W. Kandt, Overseer, F. E. Alexander, Steward, Guy E. Frary, Assistant Steward, W. H. Carrier, Lecturer, Mrs. E. P. Farnham, Chaplain, Mrs. M. B. Bishop, Treasurer, P. B. Haydn, Secretary, Mrs. Anna B. Weed, Gatekeeper, W. I. Carrier, Ceres; Mrs. William Pollard, Pomona, Mrs. H. W. Kandt, Flora, Mrs. S. D. Arnold, Lady Assistant Steward, Miss Melva Bradt. Mr. William Pollard was recommended for county deputy.

The following delegates were elected to the State Grange: Delegate at large, H. W. Kandt, Mrs. A. Woodworth, Mr. W. Wilbur, Mrs. G. M. Coe, Mr. F. Lane, Mrs. A. J. Mathieu, Mr. H. C. Dann, Mrs. Charles Foster, Mr. George Waters, Mrs. E. Benedict, Mr. F. L. Stone, Mrs. A. Potter, Mr. Pickens.

Seventeen new members were received during the session. On motion adjourned.

Respectfully submitted,
Inez C. Coe.

The Mental Jog.

"There is a certain type of person," said the business man, "especially in New York, who seems unable to understand what is said to him—or her—unless the statement or remark is prefixed by some catchword, usually the word 'listen.'

"For instance, I have a stenographer who simply stares at me in dumb amazement if I say anything to her without first saying 'Now, listen.' If I begin to dictate a letter to her she will not write a word if I forget to give that mental jog. When I snap that at her she will scratch like mad. She is not the only one. The telephone girl cannot take a message unless it has that prefix. When I am out of the office and try to talk over the wire with her I must always begin, 'Now, listen,' or else she is hopelessly at sea and seems not to understand a word I say."—New York Press.

For Coughs and Colds

Nearly all other Cough Cures are constipating, especially those containing opiates. Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup moves the bowels. Contains no opiates.

Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup

"A Cold or a Cough nearly always produces constipation—the water all runs to the eyes, nose and throat instead of passing out of the system through the liver and kidneys. For want of moisture the bowels become dry and hard."

Kennedy's Laxative Cough Syrup relieves Colds by working them out of the system through a copious action of the bowels.

The Oswego County Independent Telephone Co has just completed the installation of an intercommunicating telephone system for the Victoria Paper Mills Co. The system is of the latest type and is the first of its class to be installed in Fulton, although very popular in Syracuse and other cities. By the use of this system many troubles of the ordinary intercommunicating systems are avoided. One telephone at each desk or office does everything that a telephone can do. The user can call any department without calling the exchange operator it being only necessary to depress the button assigned to a particular station and a bell is rung calling the party desired. The system also connects with the city exchange. In the Victoria Company's system only the main office can call the city exchange direct, if other stations desire the Central; they must first call main office. This does away with any abuses from unnecessary use of the city exchange, and keeps the control entirely in the main office of the Company. Certain stations however can get the city exchange direct by depressing the proper button. The system being very flexible will suit all conditions of service. The Victoria installation is a model and anyone desiring such a system should investigate personally its merits. For simplicity, and accuracy of service it is perfect; as a time saver there is nothing to compare with it in cost.

Conley Bros. are agents for Lowney's, Apollo, Fuller's, Green's and Stacy's Forkdipd Chocolates.

The U. S. Government

in its "Pure Food Law" does not "indorse" or "guarantee" any preparation, as some manufacturers in their advertisements would make it appear. In the case of medicines the law provides that certain drugs shall be mentioned on the labels, if they are ingredients of the preparations. Ely's Cream Balm, the well-known family remedy for cold in the head, hay fever and nasal catarrh, doesn't contain a single injurious drug, so the makers have simply to print the fact that it complies fully with all the requirements of the law.

Spider Cures.

In China spiders are highly esteemed in the treatment of croup. You get from an old wall the webs of seven black spiders—two of which must have the owners sitting in the middle—and pound them up in a mortar with a little powdered alum. The resulting mixture must then be set on fire, and the ashes, when squirted into the throat of the patient by means of a bamboo tube, are said to effect a certain and immediate cure.

Black spiders are evidently full of medicinal virtue, for they are largely employed in the treatment of ague as well. In Somersetshire, if one is afflicted with the unpleasant ailment, the way to get well is to shut up a large black spider in a box and leave it there till it dies. At the moment of its disease the ague should disappear. In Sussex the treatment is more heroic; the patient must swallow the spider.

Perhaps, after all, this remedy may not be so disagreeable as it appears, for a German lady who was in the habit of picking out spiders from their webs as she walked through the woods and eating them after first depriving them of their legs declared that they were very nice indeed and tasted like nuts.—London Chronicle.

Different In Books.

In the books this is the way they say it:

"Outside the wind moaned unceasingly, its voice now that of a child which sobs with itself in the night, now that of a woman who suffers her great pain alone, as women have suffered since life began, as women must suffer till life wears to its weary end. And mingled with the wailing of wind rain fell—fell heavily, intermittently, like tears wrung from souls of strong men."

Outside the books we say:

"It's raining."—Atchison Globe.

Vicissitudes of a Picture.

The vicissitudes of Leonardo da Vinci's picture, "Last Supper," reminds a correspondent of the strange experiences of Holbein's "Field of the Cloth of Gold," which may be seen any day at Hampton Court palace. After the downfall of Charles I., Cromwell in order to raise funds proposed the sale of certain pictures, this among the number. The bargain was already made, but when the would be purchaser came to inspect Holbein's masterpiece he discovered that the head of Henry VIII. had been cut from the canvas. He naturally withdrew his offer, and the picture was preserved to the nation. On the restoration a nobleman confessed to having committed the theft for love of art and his country, and he returned the missing head, which now occupies its original position in the canvas. The circle made by the knife is still plainly visible.—London Chronicle.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

In Use For Over 30 Years.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, 77 MURRAY STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

ONE Christmas time when old Mother Hubbard—
She of the far famed empty cupboard—
Sat by her evening fire alone,
Wishing she had for her dog a bone,
There came a knocking upon the door,
And as she hastened across the floor
It flew wide open, to her surprise,
And, oh, the vision that met her eyes!
It nearly took away her breath
And frightened her almost half to death.

There were people here; there were people there;
There were people yonder and everywhere.
All were screaming, "Dear Mrs. Hubbard,
We've brought you something to fill your cupboard!"

First came lovely Cinderella,
With her prince, a handsome fellow;
Mother Goose and Simple Simon;
In their wake the Penny Pieman;

Bluebeard, savage and defiant;
Jack, who often killed a giant;
Puss in Boots, so trim and nice,
Followed by the three blind mice;

Then the little naughty kittens,
All in pretty scarlet mittens;
Sweet Bopeep and Little Boy Blue,
Red Riding Hood and the bad wolf, too;

Jack, whose bean stalk ran so high,
And the old woman who swept the sky;
Jack Horner, with his face aglow;
The frog who did a-wooing go;

Dame Trot and all the endless crew
That lived together in a shoe,
And many another known to fame
Had I but room to give his name.

This much to tell you will suffice—
They each and all brought something nice
To fill the cupboard o'er and o'er.
In fact, their gifts bestrewed the floor.
On every chair and table stood
Some article of daily food.

Each nook and corner held a dish
Of either fowl or flesh or fish
Till Mother Hubbard scarce could find
A resting place for foot or mind,
While doggie walked on his hind legs
For fear of breaking pies or eggs.
And, as for all the company,
They had to stand outside, you see.

Yet, as they had to leave quite soon
To see the cow jump o'er the moon,
It did not matter in the least.
But what about the sumptuous feast
Inside the cottage? Must I tell
The fearful ending that befell
The hungry dog who ate and ate
And brought about the cruel fate
It is my duty to relate?
For he, who lived upon a bone,
Died when with plenty left alone,
And ere the morning stars grew dim
He stiffened out in every limb.
So Mother Hubbard buried him.

This moral to the tale I give—
Live not to eat, but eat to live.

The Frenchman Looked Innocent.

Some time since, in a Tremont street store in Boston, a nervous little Frenchman brushed against a pretty trifle of vase ware valued at about $14 and succeeded in getting several score more pieces out of it than had gone into its making. The floorwalker led the abashed Parisian aside and politely explained that the broken vase must be paid for. Monsieur fetched a handful of small silver and copper, mostly foreign, from his pocket when he was told the value of the trifle.

"Mon Dieu," cried the Parisian, "70 francs!" At this he took out his bill book and discovered a fifty dollar express draft, which the floorwalker instantly seized upon, to the unspeakable horror of its owner.

After deducting the value of the vase the former handed the man his change and dismissed him with a floorwalker's blessing. The express draft reached the bank in due time, with four others as fraudulent, but the volatile little Frenchman had departed southward with the swallows.—Bohemian Magazine.

Followed Suit.

On the day of the admission of M. Rostand to the French academy the author of "Cyrano" and "L'Aiglon" gave a breakfast to a few of his friends, the guest of honor being Mme. Bernhardt. The actress was dressed in a handsome gown, which had been made expressly for the occasion. At the end of the breakfast she arose and in an impressive manner took a glass, held it high and said, "I drink to the greatest of French dramatists, M. Rostand, and I drink after the Greek manner!" She then poured the contents of her glass over her head and gown.

Two of Rostand's small sons were sitting at a side table wearing new velvet suits, also made for the occasion. In the silence which followed Bernhard's dramatic tribute the elder of the boys arose and, imitating her manner, said, "I drink to the greatest of poets, my papa, and I also drink in the Greek fashion!" and straightway deluged himself and his small brother with the contents of his glass.

A Scene Not In a Play.

An extraordinary scene took place in the Princess' theater, London, on the night of the first production of Charles Reade's great play, "Never Too Late to Mend," Oct. 4, 1865. During the prison scene a large quantity of water was thrown over Miss Moore, who took the part of Josephs, the character done to death by the warders. One of the critics, Mr. Tomlin of the Morning Advertiser, rose from his seat and publicly protested against the unnecessary cruelty. This aroused almost a riot among the audience, and the action of the play was stopped for some considerable time. Fuel was added to the fire by George Vining, the lessee of the theater, who was playing the part of Tom Robipson and who made a most imprudent speech, in which he practically insulted every critic present, with the result that the theater was left severely alone by the press for many months. The play, however, turned out to be a popular success and had, for those days, the phenomenal run of 140 performances.

Reading in Bed.

"Boys and girls under eighteen should be strictly forbidden to read in bed," says the Lancet, on the authority of Dr. Hugo Feilchenfeld of Berlin, who declares that in the case of young persons whose eyes are not fully developed the practice is likely to induce myopia. While young people run the greatest risk, the Lancet thinks that reading in bed is undesirable for persons of any age and states that "in the case of aged, anxious, worried and bedridden people, to whom it would seem cruelty to deny what may perhaps be almost their only luxury, for fear of inducing some slight error of refraction, care should be taken that the light is sufficiently brilliant, the eyes being shaded from it, and that the patient lies on his back with head and shoulders raised."

Wellington's Tact.

There was an army of generals assembled at Paris in 1814, and when the various Austrian and Prussian generals who had been beaten by Napoleon came crowding round the Duke of Wellington and expressing lots of compliments to him for having never been beaten by the French the duke pleased them immensely by saying, "Ah, but you know I never met Bonsparte, and I have always looked on him as being as good as 40,000 men."

How Indians Catch Monkeys.

In South America the Indians take a cocoanut and cut a hole in each end just large enough for the monkey's paws. Then they fill the middle of the nut with sugar. When a monkey comes across the shell he thrusts in one paw and, finding sugar, he pushes in the other. He closes both paws on the sugar and then will not remove either for fear he shall lose the sugar. Then, while he cannot use either paw, he is easily caught.

A Chinese Story.

A Chinese barber while shaving a customer's head drew blood and put one of his fingers on the place. Again he made a cut and put down another finger, and so on until he had no more fingers free. "Ah," said he as he paused in his work, "a barber's trade is difficult. We ought to have a thousand fingers!"—Scrap Book.

Apt Pupil.

"Didn't I see the grocer's boy kiss you this morning, Martha?"

"Yes'm. But he ain't to blame, ma'am. 'Twas the iceman set him the bad example."

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The December American Boy.

The effort of the publishers to make the Christmas AMERICAN BOY worthy of its readers have certainly proven successful. The picture (in colors) of the pleased and smiling boy laden with Christmas presents and his no less delighted four-footed friend, which adorns the front cover page, is a happy index to the fine timely matter the magazine contains. The interesting serial by Houston and Tomlinson are concluded this month, as is also The Deer Trailers, while That Dillingham Boy is continued. Christmas, of course, is the theme of most of the short stories: There is also a fine illustrated page of college football teams. The regular departments are filled with just the matter which will please the boys who delight to do things. In addition there are over 90 illustrations. $1.00 a year. Gathered Him In.

"You look very much excited, dear," he said when she entered the parlor where he was waiting for her.

"Well, I should think I ought to look excited," she answered. "I've just had the most awful argument with ma." And she began to weep hysterically.

"Why, what is the matter, my darling?" he inquired as he slid an arm around her waist and endeavored to soothe her. "What was the argument?"

"Oh, how can I tell you? She said you were only trifling with me and that you would never propose, and I told her she did you a great injustice, for I believed that you would propose tonight. She said you wouldn't, and I said you would, and we had it hot and heavy. Dear George, you will not let my triumph over me, will you?"

"W-why, certainly not," answered George.

"I knew it, my darling," the dear girl exclaimed; "come, let us go to ma and tell her how much mistaken she was."

And they did, and ma didn't seem to be very much broken down over the affair, after all.

Would Let Folks Know It.

Somebody sent this to the society editor and made affidavit that it really happened.

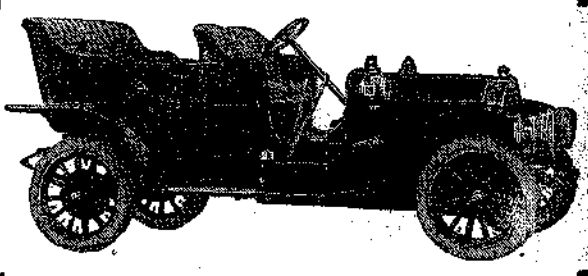
Here it is: They were out at an afternoon card party. A stout woman dropped a card to the floor. "Would you be so kind as to pick up that card for me?" she inquired of the little woman at her right.

"Certainly," said the accommodating woman at the right, picking up the card.

"You see," explained the stout woman apologetically, "I've got on a brand new fifty dollar corset, and I'm afraid I'll strain it if I lean over."

"Hum!" commented the other woman enviously. "If I had a fifty dollar corset I'd wear it on the outside. I really would."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Cold Storage Rats.



The attendant came out of the cold storage room with an awed look.

"Rats are wonderful," he said. "We thought modern plumbing would abolish them, but they live in the clean light and dryness of the best modern plumbing more comfortably than they did in the damp and filth and darkness of the past. We thought the modern ship would abolish them, but the Lusitania has as many rats as had the Columbus caravels. And here"—

He made an awed gesture.

"And here I find rats in our cold storage rooms at temperatures that freeze the breath and cause it to fall in the form of snow. To and fro they prowl. Their coats are thick and warm like fur, and, with frost on their whiskers, they feed heartily on meat and game frozen to rocklike hardness."—Exchange.

How to Make Christmas Presents For Both Sexes—Hatpin Cushion—Needlebook. Suit Case Set For a Man.

The hatpin cushion shown is made of pompadour ribbons and val lace. It is tied in the center with baby ribbon.

The needlebook is also a dainty little trinket, easily made, and appreciated either by men or women.

The design shown is a conventional primrose pattern worked in ribbons.

For the man who travels nothing will be more appreciated than what is called a suit case set. So many people use the suit case, but have never been able to overcome the difficulty of keeping the shoes and brushes from rubbing up against their clean linen. There are three different articles in this set, all of which are made of course linen. The receptacle for shirts is in the shape of a large envelope, the edges bound with braid, and should be large enough to contain two shirts.

The bag for collars is made from the same material. The bottom is circular and made from pasteboard. A good idea is to sew to this a strip of pasteboard about two inches deep. These should be covered with the linen before being fastened together. The upper part of bag should be full and gathered with a drawing string. This protects the collars from crushing as well as keeps them clean.

The third article in the set is a plain linen bag lined with oiled silk. This is intended for sponges and protects the contents of the suit case from the moisture of this toilet necessity after it has been used. The hairbrush can be put in this bag if no sponge is used. The monogram can be embroidered on the outside.

To make a slumber robe for baby take two and a half yards of plain silkoline, three bolts of No. 1 ribbon, one skein of Shetland floss and one bat of fine cotton.

Divide the silkoline into two equal parts, place in a frame and put in layers of cotton between, ready for tying.

Tie the ribbons all in tiny bows. Thread the needle with the Shetland floss, using it double. Bring the needle up from the bottom, then down again, taking a stitch through one of the bows. Tie the yarn on the wrong side, with three or four extra needles tied in the knot to make a small tuft.

Continue the knotting in this manner, beginning with two and a half inches from the edges, making the tufts four inches apart. Turn in the edges all around and buttonhole closely with the yarn used singly.

Crochet a row of shells around the quilt, each shell of five double crochet fastened with a single crochet and placed close enough together to make the work lie flat and ruffled at the corners.

On the right side, just inside the buttonholing, make a row of feather-stitching with the yarn.

This makes a light, dainty cover for the baby. It is very pretty of blue silkoline tied with white ribbons or of white silkoline tied with pink and blue.

A Beautiful Tribute.

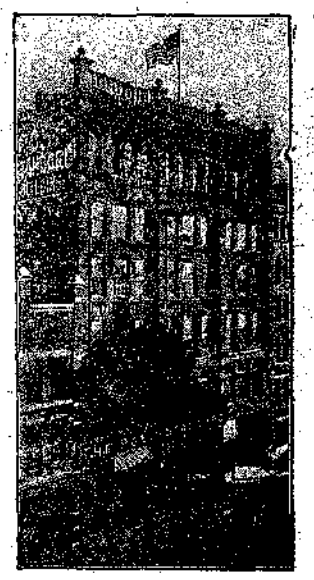
The following tribute written by Gertrude Ellis Skinner, associate Editor of the Austin Daily Herald, and an intimate friend of the late Mrs. Ayers whose early home was at Gilberts Mills, this county, will be read with interest by all who knew the deceased.

It is with deep sorrow that Austin friends learn of the death of Mrs. Oscar Ayers which occurred at Los Gatos, California, Tuesday evening, November 3, at 8 o'clock. Mr. and Mrs. Ayers had been located at Santa Cruz until a few weeks ago when they removed to Los Gatos, thinking that the climate would benefit Mrs. Ayers' health. For the past year she has been a great sufferer with heart trouble and though every care and attention was bestowed, her strength failed and she was called home.

Mary Kirkland was born in Oswego county, N. Y., in 1842. She came to Austin in 1866 as the wife of A. A. Wright who was an attorney associated with Aaron Everest in the early days. Mr. Wright was the first man killed on the C. M. & St. P. railroad. His death occurred in April, 1867, near McGregor. One son, A. A. Wright, now an osteopathic physician at San Jose, was born of this marriage. In 1869 Mrs. Wright was married to Oscar Ayers, and for a time they resided at the Kirkland home on Lansing avenue, then known as the Judge Robinson place. They lived here until the erection of the new home on Kenwood avenue which for so many years was the center of the social life in Austin. This remained their home until it was sold to the Ben King family about four years ago. For a number of years Mr. and Mrs. Ayers spent their winters in California, always coming back to Austin as home, and a year ago this past summer and fall was their last visit in our city.

Mrs. Ayers was a woman of great ability. She was possessed of a brilliant mind and a cheery, happy disposition which kept her face ever toward the sun. Kindness flowed from her hand as naturally as cheer and laughter from her lips. Those whom she helped—and their name was legion—never heard of the bounty which she bestowed. She reached out a helping hand with the same broad human reach that forgot he kindness the moment it was bestowed.

She travelled extensively in her own country, was a close observer and could describe with a minuteness of detail which made her a most interesting talker. As the ludicrous never escaped her she was exceedingly entertaining. She was a broad reader and kept herself well posted on all features of the world's work. In Austin she was identified with whatever was best in our town. She early became a member of the Floral club and never ceased to work for its interests while she lived here. She was social, alert and cheery, the life and center of the circles where she found a place. She was devoted to husband, son and friends, and will be greatly missed by all who ever knew her.



By her request her body is to be cremated. Later the ashes will be brought by Mr. Ayres to Austin and deposited in Oakwood cemetery.)

HOW TO USE UNCLE SAM'S OFFICE.

The employes in the local Post Office know right well that Christmas is near by, basing their supposition upon the increased number of foreign money orders daily sent, and upon the number of packages being registered, the volume increasing with each day.

A few hints to prospective patrons may not be taken amiss at this time as there is nothing so easily done as forgetting and mayhap the little heart-to-heart talk with you last year at this time, has been entirely forgotten in the varied experiences of the passing year.

From now until the new year dawns, the carriers and postal employes will be busier and busier until Christmas week, when they will be taxed to the point of breaking, but cheerful and willing, to do your bidding and to speed the gifts you consign to Uncle Sam's care, to the waiting and expectant ones. It will make the serving easier and more satisfactory if patrons will be careful to wrap and tie all packages securely. Times Christmas cards are not mailable unless enclosed in envelopes. The Christmas tags with pictures of Santa Claus should not be pasted over the flap because that seals the package and makes it subject to letter rates. Packages of value should be registered, as that insures a receipt from the addressee. A return card with address of the sender should be placed on all parcels. Each package should be marked as containing merchandise or printed matter, as the rates are different. The rate on merchandise unsealed is one cent an ounce and on printed matter one cent for two ounces. A Christmas card inside the package with the name of the sender is permissible at these rates if it has no other writing.

Start your packages as early as possible. The mails are so burdened during the last week that the packages run greater risk of not reaching their destination in first class condition than at any other time in the year.

Mr. Kelley is pensioned by the National grange, he receiving $1,200 a year.

Beware of Frequent Colds.

A succession of colds or a protracted cold is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh, from which few persons ever wholly recover. Give every cold the attention it deserves and you may avoid this disagreeable disease. How can you cure a cold? Why not try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy? It is highly recommended. Mrs. M. White, of Butler, Tenn., says: "Several years ago I was bothered with my throat and lungs. Someone told me of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I began using it and it relieved me at once. Now my throat and lungs are sound and well." For sale by E. A. Putnam.

A Wonderful Bird.

One day a wonderful bird tapped at the window of Mrs. Nansen's (wife of the famous arctic explorer) home at Christiania. Instantly the window was opened, and in another moment she covered the little messenger with kisses and caresses. The carrier pigeon had been away from the cottage thirty long months, but it had not forgotten the way home. It brought a note from Nansen, stating that all was going well with him and his expedition in the polar region. Nansen had fastened a message to the bird and turned it loose. The frail courier darted out into the blizzardly air. It flew like an arrow over a thousand miles of frozen waste and then sped forward over another thousand miles of ocean and plains and forests and one morning entered the window of the waiting mistress and delivered the message which she had been awaiting so anxiously.

SCHWALMER BOYS AND GIRLS

Their Quaint Costumes and Their Odd Christmas Dance.

Over in Hesse-Nassau, a district in Germany, there is a section of the Hessian people who present an interesting study, particularly in regard to their quaint Christmas customs.

These people live in the valley of the river Schwalm. The Schwalmer boys wear a peculiar round hat or cap without brim or visor. It resembles in shape a small cheese box. They wear a sort of coat with skirt reaching below the knees, something on the order of the highlander's kilt, and white socks with black bows.

SCHWALMER BOY AND GIRL.

The Schwalmer girls also wear white stockings with the black bows. Their skirts reach scarcely below the knees. It is the fashion to wear several stiff skirts, which stand out from the person much in the manner of the hoop skirts of our own grandmothers. On their heads the girls wear a funny little pill box sort of hat, to which are attached broad bands tied under the chin, completely concealing the ears.

The boys and girls have an outdoor dance at Christmas when the weather favors. Each village has a favorite dancing ground where the young people gather for the fun. The boys stand in a semicircle, while the girls line up to await their partners. Everybody maintains a dignified silence. Finally one boy steps forward to the maiden of his choice, lifts his arm and bows profoundly. Each of the boys in his turn then goes through the same ceremony of choosing his partner, who is his for the day. Then begins the dance, which is vigorous and hearty.

Price per ton, Furnace Coke, delivered, .	$5.50
Price per ton, Stove Coke, delivered, . .	$6.00

Order a ton now, then you'll always burn Coke

Directions for Using Coke.

Kindle the fire in the usual way, and when fairly burning, fill up with plenty of coke. Keep a large body of coke under a low fire rather than a little coke under a strong fire. To keep a low fire, close the draft opening in the lower part of the front of the furnace, keep the slide in the feed-door open and the damper in the chimney pipe almost entirely closed. The damper should be opened only when kindling a new fire. Keep a layer of ashes on the grate, and when shaking, stop before hot coals appear. This helps to keep the coke burning slower.

Do not allow ashes to pile up under the grate so as to touch it.

To bank a fire for the night, fill up full with coke, and if necessary, throw on coke screenings or ashes to fill up open spaces.

CHRISTMAS PIES.

A Novel Sport For a Children's Party In Holiday Time.

Have a large pan covered with brown tissue paper to look like pie crust. Inside the pie have these letters, to which are attached ribbons, the other end of which come through the pie crust. The letters, neatly cut out are: Six a's, two m's, three e's, four r's, three y's, one c, two h's, two s's, one t, two n's, one d, two p's, one w and one i.

The children sit around the pie, each holding one thread. They sing:

Sing a song of Christmas,
A pie crust full of fun.
Find the wish we wish you
When the game is done.

Then they pull the letters out and pin them on their breasts. Then begins the fun of puzzling out how the children should stand in a line so that the letters will form a sentence.

THE CHRISTMAS PIE.

When in proper position the letters will make—

A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

DICK'S DEVICE

Getting an "Old Man."

"Speaking of new men," said the boss of the skyscraper builders, with a twinkle, "comical things happen even up here, the same as in a theater. Sometimes in rush seasons there ain't enough hands to go round, and we have to take 'em green as the hills. I had one once, a kid from Vermont, a whale of a kid, with bones like a horse and eyes awful anxious to please—eyes that made you like him. He's one of the best men I've got now, but then he was green as God made him." The foreman stopped to chuckle.

"'Go up to the eighteenth floor,' I told him one day, 'and bring down an old man.' I was busy at the time, and when I saw the kid stare I said kind of sharp that if that old man wasn't here in five minutes the whole blamed building would probably go to smash. This was just my way of making him hustle, but he thought I meant it word for word. He went up on the run, and in a few minutes he came down with a sputtering, clawing old feller held like a vise in his arms.

"'He was the only old man on the floor,' said the kid, 'and he wanted to stop and argue about it, but from what you said I knew what it meant, so I just grabbed him and came.'

"You see," the foreman added kindly, noting my puzzled expression, "an old man happens to be the name of a tool we use."—Everybody's Magazine.

Fire Terms In Japan.

Fires in Japan are so common that this destructive agency has established itself as a national institution, and a whole vocabulary has grown up to express every shade of meaning in matters fiery. The Japanese language has special terms for an incendiary fire, an accidental fire, fires starting from one's own house, a fire caught from next door, a fire which one shares with others, a fire which is burning to an end, the flame of a fire, anything—for instance, a brazier, from which a fire may arise; the side from which to attack a fire in order to extinguish it; a visit of condolence after a fire

Fixed Bayonets In London.

The privilege of marching through London with fixed bayonets is enjoyed by but very few regiments, such as the Royal fusileers, who trace their origin to Cromwell's trained bands, which in later years produced so famous a captain as John Gilpin. After the Royal fusileers, or perhaps even before them in point of regimental seniority, come the East Kent "Buffs," now the third of the line, who claim a similar city ancestry, while the Royal marines for some reason or other also enjoy the same fixed bayonet rights in the city. A battalion of the grenadier guards was once impressed to serve as marines, and hence they share the privilege of the men who are "soldiers and sailors too." This also explains why that grenadier battalion has for its tattoo "Rule Britannia"—as a souvenir of the time when its combative existence was of the amphibious kind.—London Standard.

Expected Some Cussing.

A West Philadelphia husband had just comfortably seated himself for his after dinner cigar the other evening when his good wife arose and took the parrot from the room. This done, she picked up a couple of envelopes and approached the old man, all of which occasioned that gent considerable surprise.

"Mary," said he, "what in the world did you take that parrot out of the room for?"

"I was afraid that you might set him a bad example," answered wifey.

"What do you mean?" demanded the wondering husband.

"I mean," answered wifey, handing father the envelope, "that I have just received my dressmaking and millinery bills."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

The great thing in big game rifles is sureness to work under all conditions. Marlin rifles are built with this idea foremost.

The mechanism is simple, strong, perfectly adjusted, quick and easy in operation.

The Marlin solid top and side ejector keep a protecting wall of metal between your head and the cartridge, prevent powder and gases blowing back, throw the shells away from you and allow instant, accurate, effective repeat shots.

The Special Smokeless Steel barrels are head and strong, specially made for high power cartridges and so resist the wear of jacketed bullets. They are rifled deep on the Ballard system for greatest accuracy and killing power.

Made in Models '20 and '93, calibres .25 to .45, and fully described and illustrated (with all other Marlin repeaters) in our 136-page catalog. Free for 3 stamps postage.

Fulton Friends Greet Each Other in the Land of Sunshine and Flowers.

Editor Times: Your welcome paper that has followed me each week all over our glorious country for many months, has been such a pleasure to me and given me news of so many friends not only in Fulton but the surrounding country, that I would like to tell some of them of a few of the home people that it has been my good luck to see. In Chicago I met Mr. Edward H. Baldwin and his wife, formerly Miss Grace Lamson of South Granby. They looked as if the world was doing well by them, as did every one I have seen from New York State They have since moved to Racine, Wis., where Mr. Baldwin is interested in the cabinet business. I also met his sister, Miss Ida Baldwin, now Mrs. Morris, as well as her two young daughters.

In Riverside, Cal., I met R. E. Turner and family. All were well and Mr. Turner's mother was well enough to go out and pick oranges and lemons for any "tenderfoot" that came, and yet she has just celebrated her 88th birthday. Mr. Turner and George have a fine shoe store in the heart of the town. George has just built him a new house, and he also picked a lemon off his trees that was 3 1-2 inches shortest diameter.

Mrs. C. E. Denton of Plainville, whom many Fulton people know, as she has spent much of her time there lately, is also there. Miss Carrie Denton is teaching in one of the city schools. Mr. Earl Denton is one of the instructors in the Sherman Indian school at that place.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Denick are keeping house in Riverside and life seems to agree with them both.

At Corona we found Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Pentelow with a beautiful home, and more roses, oranges and other fruits and flowers than one could enumerate in a day. There the trees were filled with canary birds and linnets. Only think of their being wild in one's town! There I heard that Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Lamson had been in the state but had returned.

At Pasadena we found Mr. and Mrs. Fred Petrie, who will need no introduction to most of you. They were both looking well, and why shouldn't they? One of the prettiest bungalows I have seen—plenty of fruits and vegetables of all kinds in one of the beauty spots of the state right at the foot of Mount Lowe. Miss Anna Petrie is with them too. One think I must tell you: Mr. Petrie started out last Spring to raise enough of everything that grew to have all he wanted; he had time and he had land—all that is wanted in California for a crop of anything. Things grew and he soon began to supply his neighbors' tables on all four sides of him. Still the garden grew and flourished. At last accounts Mr. P——was furnishing some of his neighbor's hen yards with all their green feed. Perhaps by this time he has found another outlet necessary. Mr. Rob. Petrie is a typical ranch man and he and his new wife are very popular in their home town.

We heard of the Hannis boys in Denver, but were unable to find them in the time we had.

Mrs. Flora King, who seems remarkably well, and her son Carl are in Los Angeles. There are also Fred Warner, who still has a warm heart for all Fultonians and is in the grocery business; George Bunn who has become one of the known mountain climbers, making as high as 50 miles in a day and a half, is doing insurance business in Los Angeles.

At Chula Vista we found Mrs. Luther Barnes, who is a relative of Mrs. G. F. Hallock and has other friends here in town. Their pretty home sets in a grove of ten acres of as nice lemons as were seen anywhere. She has three nice children and is very fortunate in her home.

In San Diego we found John W. Payne some heavier but not one bit changed from the boy who lived in Fulton. Also his cousin, Worden A. VanBuren. Both are in the mechanical business and have homes near each other. Mrs. F. T. Payne was with her son and says she is delighted with the place. We also expect to meet Mr. and Mrs. Willard Palmer while in San Diego, but they seem to enjoy the trip so well that they have not hurried any.

With a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to the Times and its readers I must close. I came near forgetting two new acquaintances: Mrs. VanAuken, formerly Miss Mary Cook of Volney and daughter of Mrs. Hutton of Highland street of Fulton. She looks like her mother; has a pretty home on a pleasant corner of Irving Avenue, and her son lives just across the way. She is very much interested in the local New York society which is very large there and of which she is one of the officers. Here too we found Cortez Eddy, who spent his early days attending Falley Seminary in its palmy days and lived here till he went West. He is now over eighty years of age—a hale, well preserved man. He asked about all the older people of Fulton and where every new building had been put up and any changes had been made I enjoyed the visit I think as well as he did.

Tinselled Postal Cards Unmailable

Despite the fact that the postal rule forbidding the mailing of postal cards with tinsel decorations, unless they are enclosed in envelopes, is a year old, a large number have been received at the local office that will never reach their destination unless the senders see this notice and call for them. The Postmaster has no alternative; he must send them to the dead letter office.

The rule that the tinselled cards must be placed in envelopes, developed as the result of several carriers and clerks suffering blood poisoning from handling the glittering miseves, the tinsel cutting the flesh and leaving very dangerous wounds

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB.

The presentation of President Roosevelt's recent message to Congress and a few pertinent comments relative thereto, was the main topic presented by the Hon. S. B. Mead at the fortnightly session of the Current Events Club, held last Monday evening at the home of Mrs. Mary Emerick. A lucid explanation of the necessity for the existence of the Secret Service Bureau, along with its personnel, etc., was also furnished by the speaker, and the clause in the President's message to which the august Representatives objected was also set forth. The convening of the River and Harbor Congress at Washington; Russia's wise decision not to be drawn into war over the Balkan situation; the assembling of the new parliament in Turkey and the adoption of a constitution for the Ottoman empire; the investigation of Wall street business methods by a commission appointed by Governor Hughes, and increase of monetary value of farm crops, were some of the events discussed

Mr. A. W. Wiltsie, who was second on the program, delivered an interesting t estise on the topography of Northern New York, the existence in prehistoric times of Lake Iroquois, from which was formed the St. Lawrence, the Oswego, the Genesee, the Black rivers and the smaller lakes now known in this section. It was an excellent word-picture, and was especially interesting in view of the commercial importance to this community of the Oswego River.

Mr L. W. Emerick called attention to the important decision reached by the Attorney-General of the State to the effect that owing to the appropriations made by the State for the improvement of the waterways, the State held a priori claim on the water-power privileges of the rivers. That decision would now be presented for adjudication to the higher courts; also, the litigation between the Great Bear Spring Company and the Great Bear Lythia Company, over the use of the "bear" as a trade-mark; confidence expressed by reputable trade papers on the business outlook and restoration of commercial prosperity and the action of Congress in the matter of the restoration of the United States soldiers who had been dismissed from the service because of the Brownsville tragedy.

A summary of the life-work of Mrs. Ballington Booth in its relation to the unfortunates of humanity who compose the "under-world," was given by Prof. Fairgrieve. Statistics furnished conclusive evidence that Mrs. Booth was rendering the greatest service to mankind where it was most needed.

The citizens of Fulton will be permitted to hear Mrs. Booth's interesting and instructive lecture on her work, Wednesday, Jan. 13, in the First Methodist Church. This is included in the series of entertainments given for the benefit of the public library, and promises to be one of the best.

The holidays intervening, the next meeting of the club will be held on Monday evening, Jan. 11—three weeks from last Monday—at the home of Prof. J. R. Fairgrieve. The leaders will be Messrs. Thomas Hunter and M. S. Powell.

NEW PROHIBITION COMMITTEE.

The Prohibition County convention was held in Oswego on Monday and Mr. G. R. Blount of Sandy Creek was made Chairman of the County committee to succeed G D. Harger. J W. Stevenson of Hannibal was elected vice-chairman and E B Pitts, brother of C. E. Pitts, secretary. A very laughable incident connected with the reorganization of the committee was the adoption of a resolution making the office of county chairman an honorary one and then placing Mr. Blount, who is a heavy contributor to the munition of political welfare, in the chair Neither C. E. Pitts nor G. D. Harger cared for the honor without the compensation. Another funny feature was the election of C. E. Pitts' brother to the office of secretary, the only salaried office on the committee.

As a manipulator of men as pawns upon a board and to his liking and financial advantage, the doughty Clarence Elwyn Pitts has all other political bosses, past and present, in the history of Oswego county, stopped four ways.

DIED.

The death of Matha Ostrander, aged 20, occurred at the Fulton City Hospital, yesterday morning.

The remains of the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Randall were brought to this city from New York city on Monday for interment.

Miss Kate Halloran, a teacher in the local schools, was called to Syracuse last week by the illness of her mother, who died on Friday. The funeral services were held on Monday and the body was taken to Cortland for interment.

Frank F. Holton, age 57, died on Saturday at his home near Granby Center. The funeral services were held on Monday from the home of Mr. Henry Wilson in Emory street and burial was made in Mt Adnah. Beside the widow, one daughter, Alta of Syracuse, and one son, Earl, of this city, survive.

The death of Mrs. Nellie Jennings, a former resident of this city, occurred on Friday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ezra Corwin, in Cortland from heart failure following a two weeks' illness. The funeral services were held from the late home on Monday and interment was made in Cortland Rural Cemetery. Beside the daughter, Mrs. Corwin, with whom the deceased made her home, she is survived by another daughter, Mrs. Fred Rogers of Syracuse.

Miss Jennie Culkin died on Tuesday morning at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Culkin, in West Fourth street, following an illness of more than a year. She is survived by five sisters, Mrs. A. J. O'Grady, Mrs. Rebecca McDonald and the Misses Nellie, Elizabeth and Anabel Culkin, and three brothers, Frank, Martin and David Culkin. The funeral will be held at nine o'clock Thursday morning from the house, and at 9:30 o'clock at the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Burial will be made in St. Mary's Cemetery.

LeRoy Robert, the 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Lamson, died on Wednesday afternoon at the family home in Fifth street after a two weeks' painful illness. He was an unusually bright, winsome child and that he had made many friends in his few years was attested by the many beautiful floral offerings which covered the little casket. The Rev. Charles Olmstead was the officiating clergyman and the body was taken to Jacksonville for interment in the family burial plot.

The many friends of Mrs. Page, wife of Mr. Archie Page, a former manager of the Union Pacific Tea Company's store in this city, will learn with regret of her death which occurred at her home in Athens on Friday after an illness which had lasted since September, the latter part of which time she had suffered intensely, medical skill and loving care being powerless to assuage the agony. The funeral services were held from the late home on Monday. Mrs. Page was a true woman in every interpretation of the word and she was possessed of a beautiful Christian character. To those who knew her well her death brings sadness and to the afflicted parents and the bereaved husband the deepest sympathy is extended.

The Christmas Sister

...By HOWARD FIELDING...

Copyright, 1908, by C. N. Lurie

"And you're the man," said I, "who saw a horse for a few minutes two years ago and spotted a photograph of him tonight at a glance. Do you suppose I could go to the nearest stable and buy a horse—and a good one, too—and pass him off on you as a son of Bertram and Humble?"

"But your sister isn't a horse," protested Connor. "She's a human being. There's a thundering sight of difference."

"There's this difference," said I—"that it's easy to find a man who knows something about a horse. And now let me tell you what this young lady is whom I have had the peculiar pleasure of meeting tonight. She is a thoroughbred Saxon, the last one left alive, I should suppose; certainly the most beautiful example. But what am I?"

"English," said Connor promptly. "Just as English as she is."

"Both my father and my mother were born in Wales," said I. "Both had what you would call Norman ancestry on one side and Cymric on the other. I am colored like a Norman, but no person who has made even the most cursory study of the subject could fail to recognize my Cymric blood at a glance. On the other hand, there is not the faintest shadow of a possibility that this young lady has one drop of that blood in her veins."

There was a moment's silence, then Connor said, almost with a sob:

"You don't like her."

It was the word of a warm hearted Irishman. That good fellow had earnestly rejoiced in the idea that he was working to make two people happy, and now he was disappointed. I took his hand, which he was not overwilling to give me.

"I will speak to you," said I, "as to a friend and to you, doctor, whom I have not the pleasure of knowing so well, as to a man of honor and discretion. I am very deeply and strongly attracted toward this young lady. It would be a strange and hard service that I would not render her, a bitter sacrifice that I should hesitate to make for her advantage. Do I wish she were my sister? God knows. The question already begins to press upon my heart. In the very first instant I knew that she was not, but when I looked into her eyes and saw the loneliness and the longing I would have died rather than grieve her. So I sat there and lied."

"Great!" said the doctor. "You're the man for my money. You lied like a gentleman. Nobody could have done it better. I don't know what would have happened if you hadn't."

"Give me a week," cried Connor, "and I'll prove she's your sister, no matter if you're an Eskimo. Why, man, it's a positive certainty."

"And meanwhile what?" said I.

"Go right ahead," said the doctor.

"Accept her affection upon false pretenses," said I. "Cheat her into taking gifts from a stranger; sit by her bed and help her to build air castles with the very solid foundation of my money. And you have been so kind as to call me a gentleman!"

"If you do the other thing," said the doctor with fervor, "I give you my professional word that the result won't look to you very much like the work of a gentleman. If you value her safety you'll play brotl r."

"That's talking," said Connor. "And, anyhow, she is your sister, so what harm can there be?"

When I returned to my apartments I received word that Mrs. Gilbert had requested me to call her up by telephone whatever the hour might be. It was then midnight, but I obeyed instructions.

"I happened to think," said the lady, "that you'd want some help tomorrow."

"It's very kind of you," I replied. "About what?"

"Why, your presents; the things you'll buy for Hilda. Of course she needs everything, just simply everything, but don't you buy necessities for Christmas. No woman wants them. We want trinkets, luxuries, useless things. It took me five years to beat that into my husband's head, and even now he doesn't know it as he ought to. Just give me the money for the needful, and I'll manage all that. Hilda will enjoy it as coming from you, but not as gifts. Do you understand?"

"I thought I was her brother," said I. "Aren't you proceeding on the theory that I'm her husband?"

"It wouldn't make any difference if you were her father," she declared. "We don't want clothes from our fathers. We want the money for them. But we'll take diamonds. Oh, you must buy Hilda lots of pretty things! Isn't it lovely that you can do it? And isn't she a dear?"

"I surely never dreamed of having a sister like her," said I, and was surprised to find that I had told the truth.

So Mrs. Gilbert and I went shopping next day at the earliest possible hour.

I had not supposed that it was possible for a man to tell so many lies in one day. I spent the forenoon with Mrs. Gilbert, and we talked of nothing but "my sister"—every word of mine a lie, of course. I spent the afternoon or most of it with Hilda, whom I called by that new name, though I knew it was not hers, and, to make matters worse, she had fallen into a dubious state of mind: and I must rehearse to her all Connor's proofs with an air of serene and blissful conviction, for if a mere shadow of doubt could so affect her spirits what would the plain truth do?

HARDENBERG AND CONNOR BOTH STARTED BACK FROM ME, STARING.

On Christmas day Hilda woke to find the plain room from which we dared not yet remove her bright with many flowers which the nurse had softly set in their places. This was the best day that Hilda had had since the beginning of her illness. The tide of returning health had begun to run strong, and so we were able to make it something like a real Christmas without risk of harm. But the climax was reserved for the evening, after Hilda had had her supper. Then the lights were extinguished, the door was opened and in there walked a Christmas tree, apparently upon its own legs, but really propelled by the serviceable Connor. It blazed with candles and glittered with tinsel, and its boughs were well laden—better, indeed, than I was aware—for the wise Mrs. Gilbert had bought some gifts for me from Hilda that the dear girl might not lack the pleasure of giving.

I have never seen upon the face of any grown person such an expression of entrancement in pure joy as glowed on Hilda's in the light of the shining tree. At the sight of it I lost my sense of shame and deception, and a childlike faith took hold upon me that this would all come right and that I should find a way to make her happy all her life.

By the next day, however, I had recovered some part of my common sense, and the difficulties of the situation were clear to me again, but the path of escape from them was not clear at all. I spent that day chiefly in meditation and the next as well. Then a voice seemed to tell me that I needed the counsel of a woman, and whom could I appeal to but Mrs. Gilbert? By this time Hilda had been transferred to the Gilbert residence, a favor not too great to be accepted by a young lady whose brother owns half of a very productive gold mine. I secured a private interview with Mrs. Gilbert and disclosed to her the truth.

"Oh, impossible, impossible!" she cried. "Why, you seemed to know each other at the very first glance!"

"As I was five years old when I last saw my sister and she was barely one," said I, "a recognition would not amount to very much, even if it had occurred."

"Ah, but there's instinct."

"Mrs. Gilbert," said I gently, "there is no more chance that I am this young lady's brother than if I were the bearded goudad in the Central park zoo."

"But what shall we do?" she exclaimed. "Indeed, this is a very delicate matter. We cannot tell her now. She would not remain in this house. I know her. She has the strictest ideas about incurring obligations. She would rather die in the street."

At this I went into a panic and vowed that I would keep up the deception to my last hour on earth though it should sink my soul beneath the reach of mercy.

A few days later Connor came to my rooms with a very long face.

"There really is a snag in our story," said he. "Why in blazes did those Newfoundland Grays keep this thing so quiet? Why didn't your uncle find his little niece? It is inconceivable that the Grays did not get a list of the Delphic's passengers. That would have told them plainly who their foundling was. She couldn't be anybody else, and surely they must have known that your uncle (whose name, with yours, was in every account of the wreck) would pay them handsomely for bringing the little girl to him. Didn't your uncle leave any papers, diaries or records of any kind which might throw some light on this matter?"

"All my uncle's private papers," said I, "were taken in charge by Judge Mahlon of the supreme court. He's dead, but I'll write to his son Jim to have the house looked over."

I did so and received next day this telegram:

Sent volume your uncle's diary, 1887, containing full explanation of this affair to Mrs. Gilbert, Dec. 26. I didn't tell you this. Understand? J. M.

Naturally I called upon Mrs. Gilbert, but the lady was from home. I would have gone away, but a beloved voice floated down to me as I stood in the hall.

"Go into the drawing room," it said. "I will come to you."

So I must meet Hilda without knowing what Mrs. Gilbert knew. A cold chill struck upon me. Dec. 28! That was days and days ago, and all this time Mrs. Gilbert had been urging me to treat Hilda as a sister. Was it possible that I could be mistaken? No: surely not. Whatever Mrs. Gilbert might have learned, it couldn't have altered the laws of nature or undone the divine handiwork. And yet I would have given much for a few words with Mrs. Gilbert. It was Hilda, however, who appeared.

This was the first time to my knowledge that she had ventured so far as the drawing room, yet she walked without a sign of weakness and with a noble carriage. And, oh, she was beautiful beyond dreams.

She wore a sort of tea gown, I suppose it might be called, of green fabric, and she carried a small black book. I think my mouth must have fallen open like a dead man's when I saw the figures 1887 in gilt upon the book's cover. My uncle's diary!

"Hilda," said I, without pause or preface, "I know what that book is. Tell me what you have found in it. Please tell me straight away."

Her blue eyes opened a bit wider. She looked at me, then down at the book and then at me again.

"Why, I haven't found anything," she said. "I just got it this minute. A maid gave it to me. I haven't even opened it."

Mrs. Gilbert's maid, under orders, had been waiting for my arrival, of course. What did it mean?

IN WALKED A CHRISTMAS TREE.

"That is a volume of my uncle's diary," said I. "Beyond question we shall find here the answer to our riddle, the solution of all our doubts."

I took it from her hand.

"The early June dates should be the ones," said I and would have opened the book, but Hilda's hands closed suddenly upon it.

"Oh, not yet," she said faintly. "Somehow I—I dread it."

The palms of my hands were wet, and I was swallowing air, but I managed to summon up the appearance of calmness.

"What do you expect to find here?" I asked.

"Oh, you will think very meanly of me," she cried, "but, indeed, I have been overpersuaded and silenced since the very first hour. Then for just that earliest hour I believed, but never afterward. And I have drifted on and on, not knowing what to do. I could see no escape from the evidence, and you were so sure!"

"Did Mrs. Gilbert tell you that?"

"Why, yes, but I'd have known that you believed without a word from her. You were such a good brother!" And she smiled through her tears. "But I knew in my own heart"—

"Listen," said I. "Answer me. Did you wish to believe? This may be our very last minute. I think this book can never convince either of us, surely not me, unless it tells me who you really are. But, remember, it may part us forever. I have known from the first instant, and I know now, and I always shall know, that we are no more to each other than cousins through Adam, and so I ask you, do you wish to believe?"

"I think not," she whispered, with white lips. "The book!"

It opened under my hand at the pages headed June 4 and June 5, and under the first of these dates I read the following in my uncle's hand:

"Captain Enos Gray and his wife came today, bringing the child. It has blue eyes and bright golden hair. It could hardly be more unlike poor little Hilda, who had my dear sister's coloring, brown eyes and dark hair. Description had quite prepared me for this, yet I would take no risk of error and therefore had the child brought to me. If this waif really came from the Delphic I think it is the supposed son of First Officer Alston, whose body was found with it upon the raft. According to the list, there were on the Delphic Charles Alston (infant) and nurse. I think that Charlie stood for Charlotte, as is common in England, and not for Charles. I shall institute inquiries." Then, evidently written later:

"I SEE IT'S AS SHE SAW WE LOVED EACH OTHER."

"Lieutenant Alston seems to have had not a relative in the world. The child is undoubtedly his, but it will not be claimed by any one. I have decided to send $20 a month to the Grays for its support. This will give its life an added value to them, and they will rear it more carefully."

Here were all mysteries explained. The child was kept carefully and somewhat secretly because it was a source of revenue. At my uncle's death the income ceased, and a stranger was permitted to take the child away.

"I have a name for you at last," said I. "Not my sister's, Charlotte"—

"I would like Hilda better," said she softly. "You called me that first."

"Mrs. Gilbert has had this book since the day after Christmas," said I, "or the next at the latest. Why did she hold it?"

"Perhaps she wanted us to wait a little."

"Perhaps," said I, "she saw just the very truth, that we loved each other."

"We must always be very kind and sweet to her," said Hilda.

XMAS BIRDS AND BEASTS.

Picturesque Method of Celebrating Yuletide by the Poles.

The legend that the birds and beasts came to worship the infant Jesus has brought about a peculiar and picturesque method of celebrating Christmas among the Poles and other kindred peoples of eastern Europe.

Here men mask in the guise of storks, bears and other animals or birds and go about from house to house singing carols. To carry out the idea these wild birds and savage beasts are led about by keepers.

IN THE GUISE OF STORKS, BEARS AND OTHER ANIMALS.

After the traditional carols are sung the inmates of the house thus honored reward the singers by gifts of cakes, sausages and other dainties. The procession then moves to another house, where the performance is repeated.

A Coin Trick.

Rub a coin against a smooth, upright surface for a little while then press it hard and take your hand away from it. You will be surprised perhaps to see this coin stick to the wood. The reason is that in rubbing the coin over the wood and then pressing it hard, you drive out all the air between the two objects, and the pressure of the atmosphere keeps the coin in its place.

Legal Fiction.

Says Sir Henry Maine in his "Ancient Law:" "A legal fiction is the assumption which conceals or affects to conceal the fact that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged while its operation has been modified. The fact is that the law has been changed; the fiction is that it remains what it always was."

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Supervisor Lockwood presented the report of the Committee to Settle Foreign Claims. These claims amount to $2,476.

Supervisor Gray presented the report of the Committee to Settle with Judicial Officers. The amount to be raised for salaries is $7,500.

Supervisor Skillen presented the report of the committee to work prisoners at the jail. The report showed that an income had been derived from working the prisoners. The prisoners at Pulaski had done work for the village and the Oswego prisoners besides breaking stone had worked on the new jail.

Supervisor Whitney moved that the Supply Committee be authorized to expend a sum not to exceed $200 for improvements at the Mexico Aims House, including two rooms for hospital accommodations, two new bath tubs and new floors as recommended by the State Board of Charities.

Supervisor Rogers of Hannibal said he favored the improvements and he believed the Board should include in the improvements suitable fire escapes. He declared that the institution was without fire protection and it would be impossible for the inmates to escape from the building on account of the new stairs. He said that in case of fire, under existing circumstances, Oswego would have a crime to answer for. He urged that fire escapes be provided for. The Rogers amendment and the Whitney resolution were both adopted.

Supervisor Kellogg moved a levy of $900 on Volney for machinery and miscellaneous.

Supervisor Sweetland invited the Supervisors to inspect the new jail but the Supervisors said they were extremely busy to-day on committee work and Supervisor Rogers moved that the invitation be accepted for next week.

Chairman Hydorn announced the appointment of Supervisor Hamer to succeed Mr. David on the committee to work prisoners.

Clerk Spencer invited the Board to a military smoker at the Armory next Wednesday evening.

Edward Cole, of Fulton, and John Dain, Sr., appeared before the Board of Supervisors and asked the Board to take some action permitting the payment of soldiers' burial orders, the same as in Jefferson and Cayuga counties. The matter will be given consideration by the Board.

Chairman Hydorn said to-day that County Attorney Coville has not concluded looking up the law on the question of the right of the Supervisors to name a man for County Superintendent of Highways at the present session, but he was inclined to believe that the report would be favorable and that the appointment would be made some day next week, he thought.

Mr. Beardsley presented the report of the Committee to Settle Sheriff and Jailors' Accounts. Amount asked, $16,349.61. Amount allowed, $15,829.49.

Mr. Howard presented the report of the Committee on Constable and Justices' Accounts. Amount claimed, $985.73; allowed, $947.04.

Mr. Cullivan presented the report of W. B. Baker on moneys collected on the bond of William Mullen. He recovered $1,150. Received and filed.

At a caucus of all the Republican members of the Board of Supervisors held yesterday afternoon at the Hotel Redstone it was voted to support E. A. Howard of Palermo, for County Superintendent of Roads W. M. Barker of New Haven was Mr. Howard's opponent in the caucus. The vote is not officially announced, but is said ten favored Mr. Howard and seven Mr. Barker. Mr. Howard has been a Supervisor for several years and for twelve years he has been a Road Commissioner. He has made a good Supervisor and his friends predict that he will make a good County Commissioner. The salary and expenses will be about $1,200, $800 for salary and $400 for expenses.

Supervisor Wilson, Chairman of the Committee to Settle with the County Clerk, presented the annual report of the Clerk to the Board; showing the amount of receipts and disbursements. The total receipts amounted to $10,047.05; total disbursements, $8,565.26, leaving a net income to the county of $1,481.79. This, Mr. Wilson said, is the best showing in dollars and cents that has been made since the office was placed under a salary system and proves that the movement in real estate, not only in the city, but throughout the county, is active.

The report of the District Attorney for the past year was presented by Mr. Hunt. There were three sessions of the Grand Jury during the year, four terms of County Court, sixty-eight indictments found, forty-seven convictions had and three acquittals. The other cases are either not disposed of or arrests have not been made.

Scraps' Christmas

By FRANK H. SWEET.

Copyright, 1907, by F. H. Sweet.

IT was in the Old Ladies' home.

One day Miss Virginia went to her sister with a stern face.

"Adelaide" she said, "where's my gold pin?"

"Have you looked in your best dress, Virginia? You might have left it there."

"I never did such a thing," answered her sister, "but I'll look."

She went to the closet just as Mrs. Slocum and Mrs. Perkins entered the room. With her head among the dresses she did not hear them.

"No, it ain't here, Adelaide!" she called.

"What ain't? What's the matter?" cried Mrs. Perkins, looking from Miss Adelaide's frightened face to Miss Virginia's grim one. "Have you lost something?"

"I can't find my pin," she said coldly. "I suppose I've mislaid it, that's all."

"Miss Virginia, you don't mean you can't find that gold pin! Here comes Miss Pratt. Miss Pratt, poor Miss Virginia has lost her gold pin. Leastways she says she's lost it, but there's other things besides losings."

Miss Virginia looked quickly at her sister. Miss Adelaide's eyes were round and frightened.

"What do you mean?" she faltered.

Mrs. Perkins gave a quick glance around the circle and lowered her voice.

"I mean," she said, "ain't you often showed that pin to Scraps?"

"Yes."

"And ain't she admired it?"

"Yes," admitted Miss Adelaide in a low voice.

"NO, IT AIN'T HERE."

Mrs. Perkins nodded triumphantly.

"Then," she said impressively, "it must either be in the room or have been taken out.

"Of course," she added softly, "there ain't but one person would touch it. I think the best thing would be to settle the matter now. Suppose we—just we five—go to Scraps' room and look. I always did suspect the girl."

"I don't believe she took it!" wailed Miss Adelaide. Mrs. Perkins paid no attention to her, but waited watchfully for the next opinion.

"It don't seem right to do that way. I'd rather ask the girl," said Miss Pratt.

"But if she's honest you'd hurt her feelings for nothing," insinuated Mrs. Perkins.

"And if we waited it might go on," she said, "or others might hear of it, and then 'twould be hard on the girl. Now, if just we five go no one need know. What do you say, Miss Virginia?"

"I'll go," she said briefly.

"Then we'd better go right off," said Mrs. Perkins. "She'll be back from school pretty soon. Come on, all," and she led the way. But Miss Adelaide held back.

"What are you waiting for?" said her sister sharply. "Come along."

So Miss Adelaide miserably joined the procession. They went softly down the corridor till they came to the door of Scraps' room. It was closed. Then for the first time they realized what they were doing. Miss Adelaide put a trembling hand on her sister's arm.

"IT—IT'S LOCKED!"

"Come away, Virginia. 'Tain't very much. Let the poor child have it. It—it seems as if we're housebreakers."

"Perhaps 'twould be better to tell Miss Baker and let her look," answered Miss Virginia irresolutely. Her usual pride had quite deserted her, and she wavered visibly. Mrs. Perkins suddenly darted ahead.

"Goodness me! I never see such a pack o' cowards! 'Tain't as if she was one of us. She's nothing but a servant. Ain't we got a right to examine our servants' rooms for stolen goods, I'd like to know?" She opened the door violently.

"'Twouldn't take us long to look, at any rate," she said. "The room ain't bigger than a twopenny bit. Now, Miss Pratt, you feel in those clothes, Mis' Slocum, you take the bed, and if Miss Virginia will take one drawer I'll take the other. And there's Adelaide"—

"There don't seem to be any room for me, and I'm only in the way. My head aches too. I guess I'd better go back."

"Adelaide!" said her sister.

"There's that bag under the bed, Miss Adelaide," said Mrs. Perkins sweetly, "if you'd jest as soon take that." Miss Adelaide submitted meekly.

The room had space only for a cot bed, a small bureau, a chair and a corner washstand. There was a row of hooks behind the door, and on these hung Scraps' meager wardrobe, each article drooping forlornly, as if inspired with the pitiful loneliness of the girl. Miss Pratt's ample figure as she stood before the garments searching in the pockets and hems made them seem by contrast only dejected shadows. Mrs. Slocum was poking around the mattress, her spectacles pushed high on her anxious forehead. Miss Adelaide dropped down by the other side of the bed and rested her head against the pillow.

Her thick snuff colored wig had slipped and showed a few thin gray hairs, but her misery was so real as quite to overshadow any humor in the situation. She put out her hand and touched the old bag and then drew it back as if it had burnt her. Her sister looked at her and frowned.

"DEER MIS ADLAIDE MERY CHRISMUS."

"It—it's locked!" pleaded Miss Adelaide.

"I was wondering how long 'twould be before you'd discover that!" retorted Miss Virginia. Her conscience was troubling her, but she would not yield. She tossed a key to her sister and then put the drawer back.

"'Tain't in my drawer either," said Mrs. Perkins. "I guess it must be in that bag. You'd better hurry, Miss Adelaide. She'll be home pretty soon."

Miss Adelaide pulled the bag out and fitted the key. The four old ladies peered eagerly down at her. Suddenly she drew her hand back again.

"I can't," she said. "One of you must do it."

Mrs. Perkins stooped down and pulled open the bag, which seemed full of bits of silk and ribbon.

"Where'd she get so many?" she asked. "It looks as if we're on the track now, don't it? And see here!"

She pulled from under the rags three little packages carefully tied up in bright colored bits of tissue paper. She distributed them rapidly, passing one to Miss Adelaide, who made no effort to take it, but let it roll under the bed. Mrs. Perkins dived after it and came up flushed just as Mrs. Slocum gave an exclamation of dismay.

"What's the matter?" asked Mrs. Perkins impatiently. Mrs. Slocum laid something on the bed. The others crowded round; only Miss Adelaide never moved. They saw a red pincushion in the shape of a rude heart, and on it in crooked letters the pins formed the words, "Deer Mis Adlaide Mery Chrismus."

The silence made Miss Adelaide turn, and she caught up the ugly cushion with a little cry.

"That's what it meant!" she cried. "That's her 'meerkin' ways! She was making us Christmas presents—us who'd never done a thing for her, not a thing to make her lonely life less lonely, not a thing to make Christmas a happy time for her, and she feeding her poor starved life on the scraps of kindness we flung her!"

A tear rolled down and splashed on the red cushion. Miss Virginia snatched the cushion away.

"There!" she cried. "Make things better by spotting this!"

Miss Adelaide left the room, and her sister did not oppose her. The rest worked in silence until everything was in order. Then they filed silently out and shut the door.

That night Miss Adelaide had a sick headache. Scraps came up at supper time to bring her some toast. Her thin little face looked sharply through the gloom of the room.

"Here's your toast," she said. "It's dark in here. Shan't I get you a light?"

"No, no," answered Miss Adelaide quickly. It seemed to her she could not meet the child's eyes. Scraps stood a moment, full of sympathy.

"I'm sorry you're sick, Miss Adelaide," she said awkwardly. "I guess you'll feel better in the morning, won't you?"

"Yes," answered Miss Adelaide, burying her face in the pillow. "Run downstairs and get your supper, Scraps. It will be all cold."

Scraps obeyed, as she always did, and Miss Adelaide heard her shuffling down the stairs in her loose old shoes. When Miss Virginia came in she found her sister sitting up in bed, with a flushed, excited face.

"Virginia," she cried, "how much money have I in my purse?"

"Three dollars and five cents," answered Miss Virginia.

"I am going to get Scraps a pair of shoes for Christmas!" Miss Adelaide was frightened when she had said it, for it was understood between them that Miss Virginia should say what was to be bought.

"I'M SORRY YOU'RE SICK, MISS ADELAIDE."

But no explosion came.

"You—you ain't angry, are you?" asked Miss Adelaide pleadingly.

"I haven't said I was, have I?" returned her sister. "I was thinking."

"Oh!" answered Miss Adelaide humbly. She felt conscious of her inferiority. She never "thought." There was a knock at the door, and Miss Pratt entered.

"How's your head, Miss Adelaide?" she asked.

"It's some better, thank you."

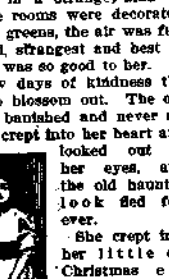
"Was your toast hot?"

"I guess 'twas. I didn't notice."

There was silence a moment. Suddenly Miss Pratt burst out: "I don't know how to say it, but I feel downright ashamed of this afternoon. The idea of that child, poorer than any church mouse, trying to be giving us something! I—I jest can't stand it. I've got an old brown merino I sh'd fix up. I guess I can afford some trimmings."

"I've been a-knocking, and no one heard me," said Mrs. Slocum, putting in her head. "I couldn't help hearing, and I'm glad! I was so worried I couldn't rest easy in my mind till I'd said I'd do suthin. I don't know what but I've got to make up some way."

"That's real good of you, Mis' Slocum," answered Miss Pratt, "and as I was saying"—



A knock at the door interrupted them.

"There's the last one," said Miss Virginia grimly. A flash of surprise passed over Mrs. Perkins' face as she entered upon seeing the others.

"I wonder if I don't know what you're talking about," she said gayly. "About Scraps? I thought so. Now, I've got a plan. Suppose we make up a scrap bag for her and fill it and hang it on the door so she can find it Christmas morning. A good many of the others will help."

Miss Adelaide sat up in great excitement.

"Oh, Mrs. Perkins," she cried, "how do you think of such things? She will be so pleased!" Miss Adelaide's simple old face, wrinkled as it was, looked like that of a happy child.

"BUT I FEEL DOWNRIGHT ASHAMED."

Mrs. Perkins flattered consciously. "I thought you'd like it," she said. "But you must be tired, dear Miss Adelaide, so we won't stay. I jest put my head in to tell you."

She rose, and Miss Pratt and Mrs. Slocum followed the hint.

Miss Virginia looked after her frigidly, but Miss Adelaide's joy was not to be quenched.

"She will be so happy!" she kept saying.

Suddenly her sister rose and went to the medicine box.

"I'm going to give you some niter, Adelaide," she said. "I don't want to be kept awake all hours, if she will be 'so happy.'"

Miss Adelaide sank back quietly, but her eyes were like two dim stars among the pillows. Suddenly she heard an exclamation.

"Did you cut yourself, Virginia? I always said that broken glass was dangerous!"

Miss Virginia dropped white and speechless into the nearest chair.

"Oh, what is the matter?" cried Miss Adelaide, pushing away the clothes to get down to her sister.

"You lie still!" came in a stern voice from the chair.

Miss Adelaide crawled back and lay there trembling. In a minute Miss Virginia came over to her.

"It's the pin," she said quickly. "I must have dropped it there Sunday night when I went to the box for your cough drops."

"Oh, Virginia!" gasped her sister. "I'm so glad! I'm so sorry—that poor child"—

Miss Virginia interrupted her.

"I guess I know that as well as you. I'm going to give her this pin for Christmas!"

As Christmas day drew near Scraps found herself in a strange, kind of fairyland. The rooms were decorated with holly and greens, the air was full of secrets, and, strangest and best of all, everybody was so good to her.

In those few days of kindness the girl seemed to blossom out. The old restraint was banished and never returned. Love crept into her heart and looked out of her eyes, and the old haunted look died forever.

"I SHALL ALWAYS KEEP IT."

She crept into her little cot Christmas eve with a happy heart. She had left her little gift at each door.

She felt that she, too, would not be quite forgotten.

"Just some little thing to show it's Christmas," she prayed, and a bright star shone down, like one of God's beautiful promises, and she lay there content.

She never heard the five smiling old ladies creep softly up to her door; she did not see until morning the immense bag labeled "A Christmas Scrape-bag." Then she was almost overpowered.

"I don't know what to say," she cried, "only I'm so happy."

She dressed in her new clothes and visited each room, where she was received with admiring looks. The old ladies saw no more the awkward girl with her peaked face and rough, short hair. They had worked for her, they loved her, and—it was Christmas day!

She went to the room of Miss Virginia and Miss Adelaide last, because her visit there was to be the most important and most thrilling of all.

"Miss Virginia, how can I thank you?" she faltered, touching the brooch. "You felt so bad when you thought you had lost it."

Miss Virginia kissed her stiffly, but there was a strange quiver in her voice.

"It wasn't lost; it was only put aside for you," she said.

"And, Miss Adelaide," said Scraps, "these shoes are so nice. And your cushion had a spot on it. I'm sorry. I don't know how it got there."

Miss Virginia glanced warningly at her sister, but there was no need.

"I like it, spot and all," she said simply. "I shall always keep it."

Christmas Tree For Cat.

Christmas is the great religious festival when the kind heart finds many ways of ministering to the joy and pleasure of others. The good women of Boston who originated and sustain the Animal Rescue league have hit upon the unique idea of a Christmas tree for the cats that are waiting for homes at that institution. A bush is provided and trimmed with meat and other suitable eatables for such animals, and just before they are turned into the room the members of the Kindness club are admitted to enjoy the antics of the cats.

This club is composed of boys whose ages range from eight to thirteen years and is the outcome of the league's work in a poor section of Boston. They are pledged to do some kind act each day and to protect animals from cruelty. After the cats have demolished the tree and gone to sleep the boys are given refreshments and sent home truly filled with the spirit of Christmas.—New York Mail and Express.

Equally Guilty.

The proprietor of a certain hotel in Maine is not only one of the kindest and best hearted of men, but also one of the most profane. He swears without knowing it and means no offense. He spends but little time in the office and is practically unknown to many of the guests. One day, however, he was in conversation with the manager when a lady interrupted them.

"I want my room changed," she said. "It is on the side overlooking the kitchen, and I am annoyed by the swearing of some man down there every morning. I am a church woman and will not stand it another day."

The remarks were addressed to the manager, for she did not know the proprietor or that the one who did the swearing was he.

"Do you happen to know who that man is?" he asked, before the manager could reply.

"No, I do not," she answered.

"Well, I do," the proprietor continued; "and he doesn't mean any more when he swears than you do when you get down on your knees to pray."

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 23, 1908

SECRETARY ROOT, the man who reorganized the War Department and the Army and who has been invited by the President to the same work for the Navy Department, has recently told the Committee on Appropriations that reorganization will soon be indispensable in the State Department. This Department has always been looked upon in Washington as the smuggest and most refined of all the Departments and the clerical force there has piqued itself on being a little better than its brothers and sisters of the clerical force in the Postoffice Department, the Interior Department, or even the War and Navy Departments. They occasionally touch elbows with the clerks of ambassadors and foreign ministers and imagine that their desks are diplomatic centers and that they have something to do with international politics. Secretary Root does not share in all these illusions of his clerical force, but since the United States has risen to eminence and preeminence among the nations of the world in finance, in manufactures and in agriculture, and since Secretary Root has shown the world that he can make an agreement, if not a treaty, that the Senators from Texas and Georgia cannot puncture, there is necessity for an improvement and reorganization in the Department over which Mason, Fish and Olney once presided.

THE report of Mr. Wilson, the Nestor of the cabinet and the Secretary of Agriculture, is before Congress and is a summary of staggering figures. The value of the combined crops for 1908 is estimated at eight billions of dollars. What do these figures mean? The Secretary has doubtless been careful in his addition, and the farmers scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land, if they make an economical and judicious use of this remarkable bounty of nature, may possibly profit to the extent of eight billions, and it is perhaps fortunate that the wealth remains at the source of production and is not in the Treasury of the United States, at Washington. But it is diverting to imagine what a lot of things this eight billions might buy. The Secretary diverts himself by the observation that it is enough to cancel the interest-bearing debt of the United States and to pay for the Panama Canal and fifty biggest battleships.

FOR its second term the sixtieth Congress is in session at Washington Since its last adjournment, many notable events have occurred. Their meanings and their leanings are discussed by members and senators in cloak rooms, hotel lobbies, in clubs and at other places where statesmen, politicians and journalists are gathered together The session will continue until the fourth of March and terminate with the remarkable administration of Theodore Roosevelt.

THE Ways and Means Committee of Congress is proposing a higher duty on millinery as a means of making women support the home hat. As the Ways and Means Committee is made up of married men it is wilful ignorance to presume that making imported hats more expensive will prevent women from buying them.

Past Grands Organize.

The Past Grands of the eighteen lodges of Odd Fellows of the county held a meeting Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Oswegatchie Lodge rooms in Oswego, for the purpose of perfecting a county organization of these officers.

The purpose of this organization will be to obtain uniformity in the administration of the lodges of the county as well as for general social purposes. A constitution and by-laws were adopted and the following officers were elected for this coming year; President, A. W. Wright of Springbrook Lodge, Richland; Vice President, George E. Parsons, Oswegatchie Lodge; Secretary, H. M. Tracy, Beacon Light, New Haven; Treasurer, A. J. Rose Arbelt, Mexico.

Sameon of Welcome, Orwell; Charles Waits of Oneida River, Caughdenoy; Otis Fuller of Central Square; Walter Simons of Redfield; W. B. Harter of Parish.

Hon. W. P. Cullinan Appointed.

Hon. P. W. Cullinan received notice a few days ago of his appointment as representative of the New York State Waterways' Association in the national organization. The notification came from S. C. O'Neil, Secretary of the New York Waterways Association and also Secretary of the Merchants' Association of New York city.

Mr. Cullinan, in replying to Mr. O'Neil, expressed his appreciation of the honor and suggested that the Association take steps to have Governor Hughes make some reference to the subject of waterways in his annual message to be submitted to the Legislature early in January. The importance to New York State of the improvement of the waterways of the State is pointed out in Mr. Cullinan's letter.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CORRESPONDENCE

EDITOR FULTON TIMES:—Replying to the statement of Mr. Stoneburgh, Commissioner of Charities, and taxpayer, published in the Syracuse Herald, in which he protests against the payment of bills by the Commander, or Relief Committee, in the case of Alpheus Sparks, an ex-soldier; also, against the payment of bills for "Wm. H. Bishop, who proves to be an imposter." Mr. Stoneburgh admits having helped this "imposter" to the amount of $7.13, and would probably have helped him more if he had not been turned over to the G. A. R. He called for help from time to time until he had used the $25.00 as stated by the Commissioner of Charities. (This was given him in the shape of grocery and coal orders); when the Committee thought the cheapest way would be to get him to leave town, and $10 was used for that purpose.

The law in this case tells us "No poor or indigent soldier, sailor or marine, who served in the military or naval service of the U. S., nor his family, nor the families of any who may be deceased shall be sent to any alms house, but shall be relieved and provided for at their homes in the city and town where they reside." It also gives direction as to G. A. R. Post's undertaking the care of such persons.

The commander and committees of D. F. Schenck Post having complied with the law in every respect, notifying the city authorities and filing a bond, have thereby obligated themselves to take care of their poor. But Mr. Stoneburgh wants more—he wants itemized accounts with affidavits attached in order that he may criticize those relieved and the amount of provisions they consume and of coal they burn. The object in making this law, to our understanding, was for the express purpose of preventing as far as possible this very thing for which Mr. Stoneburgh so loudly calls; to make the relief of the indigent soldier known to as few as possible aside from his comrades.

There is no doubt but that Mr. Stoneburgh, in his zeal for the welfare of the taxpayers, has in both cases above mentioned, exceeded his authority.

In the case of Alpheus Sparks he notified Mr. Guthrie of the case, carefully concealing the fact that the man was an ex-soldier, and in care of the local Post. Had Mr. Guthrie been informed fully he never would have sent the county physician to attend him. Dr. Wells knew nothing whatever of his being an ex-soldier and in care of the G. A. R.

While the saving of money to the taxpayers—of which Mr. Stoneburgh is not the only one—may be commendable, deception is not to be countenanced under such or any circumstances.

In regard to residence the law is very indefinite; while it tells us "in the city or town where they reside." it does not tell us how long they must have resided there, and is entirely silent regarding floaters like Bishop, who, by the way, has a good military record, and in that sense was not an impostor. We find in the report of the Adjutant General of the State of New York as follows: "William W. Bishop, aged 18 years, enlisted at Poughkeepsie to serve three years, Co. A, 80th N. Y. Inf., March 14, 1862; discharged March 14, 1865." It is thus seen that, while this man may at present be not all that could be wished, he served three years in the army.

Alpheus Sparks enlisted at Oswego in the 81st regiment, served three years and returned to Oswego county where he lived in its various towns, cities and villages for 30 years, when he drifted west and was absent ten years. He returned last spring and was soon after taken sick with the complaint of which he died. His application was made to the Commander and not the Commissioner of Charities, and Mr. Stoneburgh exceeded his authority in interferring with the case.

Mr. Stoneburgh has also taken upon himself to impugn the honor and honesty of all resident physicians, insinuating that for the sake of making large bills they make unnecessary calls.

Regarding the implied charges of dishonesty against the Commander and committees of Schenck Post, we have only to say that the vouchers submitted at each annual settlement of the Commander with a committee from the Council, are regarded as sufficient proof of where all monies went to, and no oath is required by law.

Now, Mrs. Editor, the public having been appealed to, a committee from the G. A. R. deem it but just and proper that both sides should be heard. We have done according to our best interpretation of the law on this subject and submit to the arbitration of public opinion as to who is right.

Very respectfully,
COMMITTEE FROM D. F. SCHENCK POST, G. A. R.

A Prohibited Weapon.

Every traveler knows that there are certain restrictions upon the introduction of arms into foreign countries. Among the weapons which it is forbidden to take into France is the "trombion," which is expressly mentioned in the Bengal code as a weapon the carrying and sale of which are not allowed. And yet the "trombion" is not a firearm which is commonly used nowadays, for it is nothing else than the blunderbuss, a weapon which old caricatures show to have been carried by the guards of coaches as a protection against highwaymen and to have been hung over his fireplace by John Bull at the time of the scare of a Napoleonic invasion a hundred years ago. The blunderbuss had a flintlock, a short barrel and a muzzle like a trumpet, the bell mouth being designed to scatter the slugs with which the primitive piece was charged. Any one who buys one at an old curiosity shop had better take care how he introduces it into France, for the penalty for doing so is a fine of 200 francs.—London Chronicle.

Took His Joke Seriously.

A funny incident occurred aboard one of our big battleships. While at anchor off some large city a delegation of ladies representing the W. C. T. U. came aboard and were much interested in all they saw. One of the visitors, spying the chit box for the wine mess, which was fastened up in the ward room, inquired what it was. A young officer, being facetiously inclined and not for one moment supposing that his joke would be taken seriously, told her it was a box for foreign missions and that the officers were always glad to have all those who came aboard contribute. Nothing more was thought of the matter till the end of the month, when the box was opened and, to the astonishment of all, found to contain $12.30. The rifle was overcome by sending a check for the amount, together with a letter of explanation, to the secretary of the navy requesting that he have it forwarded through the proper channel to the cause for which it was contributed.—Army and Navy Life.

OUTDID UNCLE SAM.

How an Old Lady Found a Person the National Postoffice Couldn't.

"The fates call and mortals obey." The speaker was a small, precise and elegant old lady whose diminutive stature was quite forgotten by her hearers in the realization of her force and dignity. She had gone to the dead letter sale under protest and was narrating an experience which grew out of the purchase she had made. "I went to that sale not because I wanted to or was interested or expected to buy anything, but because I've an impertinent grandniece who hinted I was too old to be in such a crowd.

"After awhile the auctioneer offered a package as big as a sack of flour, and I bought it for 85 cents. Then when I brought it home I found it contained nothing but a lot of worn, threadbare clothing mended almost to death. I was just about to toss it on that grandniece of mine and make her distribute it to some poor families when I found a letter in the pocket of the coat. I've kept that letter. The writer was a young girl from down east in Massachusetts. She was sending that clothing as the only Christmas gift she could make for her brother Ben, who lived in a city in Wisconsin.

"Well, when I read that letter I just sat down and cried to think that poor girl's sewing had all gone astray. I made up my mind that if the postal authorities could not find that girl's brother I could. So I did up the bundle again, put a letter outside asking the postman to return the package to me if he couldn't deliver it and then addressed the whole thing to 'Mary Burgess' Brother Ben, —, Wis.' Would you believe that that postman in that Wisconsin town really found that poor boy and gave him the bundle? And now I've a letter from the girl in which she tells me both she and her brother are in much improved circumstances, that Ben has a fine position in a furniture factory and that they are soon to be together for good." —Washington Star.

A DOG'S CHRISTMAS GIFT.

How a Friend Remembered Roy, the Collie.

Last Christmas a neatly ribboned box arrived by express in a New England town addressed to Roy, a collie. A fine large bone, with plenty of good red meat still adhering, was found within. Roy put the bone where it would do him the most good after one of his friends had removed the paraffin paper and holly berry garnishment which the donor had sent along. The bone was a Christmas gift from a little girl in the south, who had spent the summer in Roy's town and had become very fond of the dog. Roy's next friend dictated and sent the following telegram to the little girl:

Many thanks for the bone. You are the only one who remembered me today Many happy returns. ROY.

A Christmas Eve Sentence.

THERE were four little stockings of four little sizes,
According to common report,
That couldn't escape being (spite of disguises)
Arrested and called into court.

"Now, what have you taken?" With brows that were knitted
This question the magistrate put,
And each little stocking quite boldly admitted,
"Why, I ran away with a foot."

Then the voice of the court, shaking window and rafter,
In accents quite tragical rang,
While the children in bed also shook, though with laughter,
"I sentence each stocking to hang!"

A DUTCH NEW YEAR.

Old Time Hospitality In the Mohawk Valley.

CAKES BY BUSHEL BASKET.

Honest Graft For the Maturinal Milkman—Rum Toddy the Official Drink. Festive Day For the Faithful Farm Hand—Open House Everywhere.

There was no day of the year so generally, particularly and joyously celebrated in the Mohawk valley by the early Dutch settlers and by their descendants as New Year's, and when Jan and Barent met Bjbertje and Engletje early on a bright, frosty New Year's morning the religious and somewhat formal greeting was when put into English:

"I wish you a happy New Year. Long may you live. Much may you give and happy may you die and inherit the kingdom of heaven by and by."

The preparations for the New Year's hospitalities were begun by the mothers and their daughters frequently as soon as the first frost and snow made their appearance, for there was much to be done to be ready on the joyous day. New Year's cakes, rich and delicious (some of the descendants of the early Dutch housekeepers make them now, using the same recipe and the same ancient dies and stamps that their great-grandmothers used) and about the size and shape of a man's hand and less than half as thick, were made by the bushel basketful—literally. It was not unusual for the hospitable Dutch housewife to give from five to six hundred cakes to the children who called before the noon hour. The early rising by the boys and girls, which a proper observance of the day demanded, is equaled in our day by the early rising on the Fourth of July.

There was one old mansion in the Mohawk valley that was particularly notable for its hospitality (not only on New Year's day, but upon all occasions) and good times. It stood and is still standing on the estate of Alexander Lindsey Glen and was named by him in 1659 Scotia in memory of the land of his birth. The children started on their rounds at sunrise and went from house to house lustily pounding with the great iron or brass knockers. The littlest ones shouted, "Happy New Year for a cake!" but the older ones refrained from so far giving themselves away by leaving off the last three words. It was not at all an unusual occurrence for three or four hundred cakes to be given to the boys and girls before breakfast from the Glen mansion.

Coming down to more recent days in the Mohawk valley, the custom of giving cakes was extended to the milkmen. Each milkman always purchased a new bushel basket to carry about on New Year's morning in his wagon for holding the supply of cakes and the other dainties which were sometimes added. Each house where milk was left helped fill the bushel basket.

At about 10 o'clock in the morning the men began to make their calls after making the most elaborate toilet of the year. A previous acquaintance was not necessary for one to make calls. It was the one day of the year when every home was open to everybody without regard to birth or position. The last day of the old year was spent by the women of the family in preparing dainty confections, solid, rich cake, and in the morning the choicest old wine was brought up from the cellar, and hot rum toddy was made, rum toddy being the official New Year's drink in the Mohawk valley.

The Dutch partook sparingly of the wine and toddy at each house, and, although nearly all the men were "mellow" by the time the festivities ended at midnight, no one was drunk. There was one exception to this rule. The farm hands were usually dead to the world by noon and so out of the way of their betters.

But all this charming hospitality and the delightful customs were made impossible a generation or more ago by the outsiders of other nationalities than Dutch, who flocked to the larger towns of the valley and turned the day of hospitality into a day of drunkenness. —New York Times.

WHEN SANTA WENT ASTRAY.

Miracle of the Loaves Repeated For Washington's Poor.

The day of miracles has not passed, according to the firm belief of a hundred or more poor people in Washington. Last Christmas day Almas temple of the Shriners gave its annual dinner to the poor. It was a well planned affair, generously contributed to, and turned out a big success. But the most notable thing about it was not on the programme and made the hit of the occasion.

While the Shriners were feeding their guests there came to their hall 150 loaves of bread. The huge six foot Santa Claus was busy cracking jokes as he waddled about and took down the gifts from the Christmas tree. In the middle of one of his stories there entered another big, fat Santa Claus, carrying a colossal basket full of bread, and behind him were three or four negroes, also carrying baskets of bread. One of the Shriner committeemen at once inferred that some one had sent a gift of bread to be distributed and signed a receipt for the 150 loaves. In a few minutes they were handed around to the heads of families, and an additional smile of Christmas joy went around with them.

When the festivities were nearly over and the crowd had begun to disperse a man came running in and asked:

"Did you get 150 loaves of bread?"

"We did," was the reply.

"What did you do with it?"

"Gave it away."

"Well, that was an order from the Carroll institute. It came here by mistake. But it is all right. We are glad you gave it away, and if you need more let us know," and the man went away, evidently fully satisfied with the incident.—New York Times.

A Ghost Story.

Floors castle, home of the Duke of Roxburghe, was the scene of a curious psychical mystery over a century ago. Sir Walter Scott relates the incident. John, third duke of Roxburghe, who died in 1804, the celebrated book collector, when arranging his library employed neither a secretary nor a librarian, but a footman called Archie, who knew every book as a shepherd does each sheep of his flock. There was a bell hung in the duke's room at Floors which was used on no occasion except to call Archie to his study. The duke died in St. James' square at a time when Archie was himself sinking under a mortal complaint. On the day of the funeral the library bell suddenly rang violently. The dying Archie sat up in bed and faltered, "Yes, my lord duke, yes, I will wait on your grace instantly." And with these words on his lips he fell back in bed and died.—St. James' Gazette.

AIRSHIP AHOY! WHAT IS YOUR CARGO?

When first the New Year came to town
Appeared a baby boy
In nothing but a pair of wings
And smiles of dimpled joy.

But, growing fast, the next decade
He wore a wig with curls
And rode a fiery prancing steed
And courted all the girls.

He next arrived in coach and four,
A squire in coat of blue
And snowy stock and buckled shoes
And neatly ribboned cue.

BEHOLD HIS AEROPLANE IN FLIGHT.

Still making progress with the times,
A dandy with a cane,
Tall hat, tight waist and ruffled shirt,
He made his bow again.

'Twas only one short year ago
We heard a rush and jar,
In dust and smoke before us stopped
A scarlet motor car.

Forth stepped a chauffeur clad in furs
And, mid the mingled din
Of horns and bells, invited us
To take a twelvemonth's spin.

But now above the chimes, behold,
We listen in the night
To hear the whirling fans that bear
His aeroplane in flight!
—Minna Irving in New York Times.

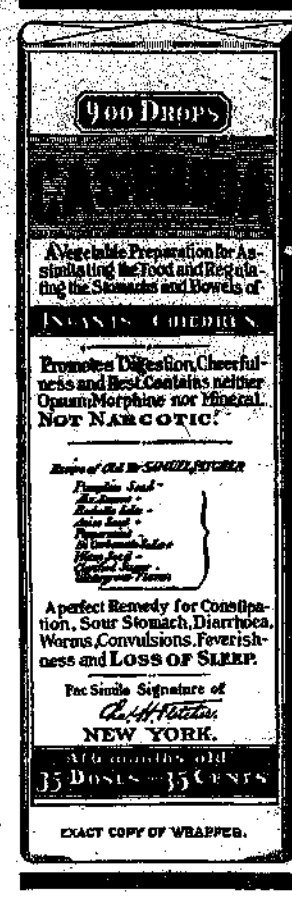
Watching the Year Out.

Throughout the world the practice of watching the old year out and the new come in has been a common observance for many centuries. In the monasteries and convents of various religious orders it has always prevailed, and several Protestant denominations observe it as a beneficial institution, promoting, as it does, piety and the formation of good resolutions. Resolves for the future are not limited to our own time, for nearly 1,900 years ago Pliny, the scrapbook maker, noted in his quaint fashion the return of the Saturnalia; made a memorandum that during the coming year he must make sacrifices to certain gods whom he had neglected and that in other ways he must amend his life. There is no record that he did, so his New Year resolutions were probably forgotten as quickly as those made nowadays.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"Ducking the Drunkard."

In Herzegovina "ducking the drunkard" is a New Year's practice by the common people, and if no drunken man can be found a prisoner from the nearest jail is borrowed, then ducked, soundly kicked and set at liberty. In Oman it was until lately the custom to celebrate all marriages on the first day; hence during the last month of the year business was good with the go-betweens. In Dalmatia any man whose conduct had not been what it should was expected to go before the priest of the neighborhood and put good resolutions in writing, a certified copy being given to his wife, or, if unmarried, to his mother.—Boston Herald.

Why We Call It January.



The Romans called the first month of the year January in honor of the god Janus. At dawn of the year the people, robed in white, sacrificed elaborate offerings to their gods, especially to Janus. Fraternal greetings, benevolent gifts and exchanges of costly presents marked the day. All evil speaking, quarrels or excesses were for one day laid aside, and the ideals of a nobler future were brought to mind by parables enacted in public places. The soldiers renewed their vows of loyalty to Caesar and put on new uniforms.

New Year's In the Alps.

Among the many time honored customs of the Alps none is more interesting than that of New Year. The village pastor delivers his sermon, which is listened to by people who have come a distance of many miles over snow frequently thirty feet deep. When midnight comes the bells ring out upon the frosty Alpine air, and as they re-echo far and wide over the hills and valleys there are mountain villages where the melody of other village church bells chords in harmony, producing a concert no city could afford.

Scotch Kisses.

A highly popular custom of the young Scots of past years was for young men to go about the streets ringing door bells, and theirs was the right to kiss the girl who answered the ring. In case the girl proved elderly or unattractive there was no evading the expected salute, however much it might go against the grain of the bell ringer.

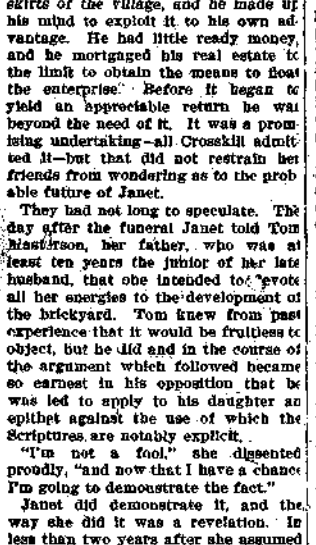
John Rossiter's Christmas Present.

By GEORGE H. PICARD.

Copyright, 1906, by G. H. Picard.

WHEN Allen Armitage died, which he did, suddenly, on his sixtieth birthday everybody wondered what would become of Janet—pretty, irresponsible Janet, his young wife. She had been Armitage's wife since her eighteenth birthday. He had not made up his mind to marry until he was past fifty.



Although he was sufficiently alert as to the main chance in business dealings, Armitage had not been markedly successful in his ventures. The year before his death he discovered a promising bed of fire clay on a piece of land which he owned on the outskirts of the village, and he made up his mind to exploit it to his own advantage. He had little ready money, and he mortgaged his real estate to the limit to obtain the means to float the enterprise. Before it began to yield an appreciable return he was beyond the need of it. It was a promising undertaking—all Crosskill admitted it—but that did not restrain her friends from wondering as to the probable future of Janet.

They had not long to speculate. The day after the funeral Janet told Tom Masterson, her father, who was at least ten years the junior of her late husband, that she intended to devote all her energies to the development of the brickyard. Tom knew from past experience that it would be fruitless to object, but he did and in the course of the argument which followed became so earnest in his opposition that he was led to apply to his daughter an epithet against the use of which the Scriptures are notably explicit.

"I'm not a fool," she dissented proudly, "and now that I have a chance I'm going to demonstrate the fact."

Janet did demonstrate it, and the way she did it was a revelation. In less than two years after she assumed control of the brickmaking business it became so profitable that she was able to pay off all the indebtedness. Then she proceeded to enlarge the plant and to improve the quality of her product. Almost before she realized it she had a most gratifying credit at the village bank. Owing to the superior nature of her product the demand for Janet's wares became greater than she could supply. The man whom she employed as superintendent turned out to be a veritable treasure, and under his honest and clever management there existed the most perfect harmony between the small army of Italian brickmakers and their capable employer.

Before she was thirty-five Janet had become the village magnate. Prosperity and the outdoor life had done great things for her. She had developed into a noble woman, freed from the trivialities which had been a part of her girlhood and endowed with that completed comeliness which is never within the grasp of the very young. So she seemed to everybody who knew her and more especially to John Rossiter, the cashier of the village bank, who had loved her since the very day on which he might do so legitimately and who had told her so as quickly thereafter as decency would permit.

"WHY DID YOU, THEN?" SHE DEMANDED ILLOGICALLY.

At the time Rossiter's declaration had not impressed Janet profoundly, nor had she at any subsequent period found her persistent admirer more engrossing than the business of brickmaking. Until she should, she assured herself, and everybody else who broached the subject, it would be folly to make any change in her way of living. She admitted, to herself only, that John was a man among a thousand, and it was not at all disagreeable to have him fond of her. She had demonstrated, however, that she was abundantly able to look after her own interests, and that fact alone should entitle her to immunity from such a sentimental position as that which John seemed anxious to have her occupy. She liked him well enough, but—

The time came when Janet believed that she hated him. It was the day when she learned that he had given up his position at the bank and had organized a company for the purpose of converting the traprock of Duke mountain into gravel for commercial uses. At first she refused to credit the story. It seemed incredible that any one who had been born within the shadow of Duke mountain, the historic landmark which made Crosskill distinguished for something nobler than the quality of its fire clay, could be guilty of such vandalism.

It was true, however, and when Janet realized fully that John Rossiter and his company had actually obtained possession of the river side of the mountain and were preparing to erect a stone crushing plant and to install an army of Sicilian diggers at the foot of the beetling height she was shocked and indignant. There was justification sufficient for her wrath. Less than two years previously she had bought a piece of land abutting on the mountain and had built thereon a handsome house in which she had settled herself comfortably with the assurance that no uncongenial neighbor could ever harass her from the mountain side. That the unforeseen was actually imminent and, above all, that John Rossiter should be its agent made her desperate. She resolved that it should not be.

So she went to him with her avalanche of protests and reproaches. To her surprise and infinite chagrin she was unable to lodge them effectively. He listened with admirable gallantry, but Janet Armitage realized before she had launched a tithe of her argument that John Rossiter had made up his mind.

"I couldn't—nobody could—have believed you capable of such—such an awful desecration!" she declared, with a manifest intention to put him on the defensive.

"I hated to do it," he confessed soberly. "I really did."

"Why did you, then?" she demanded illogically.

"I must have money," he replied simply.

"One needs very little in Crosskill," she said. "You certainly must need it very much to be tempted to do what you expect. It must be another case of life or death."

"Oh, hardly as bad as that!" He laughed rather uneasily. Then his face sobered and his voice became lower and somewhat unsteady. "It might not seem necessary to another man, but it does to me. Shall I tell you all about it, Janet?"

"No," she returned hastily. "I must decline to have anything to do with such a detestable thing."

"Then we must let it go at that," he said, with a quick resumption of his business manner. "Let it stand that I want money for precisely the same reasons that influence the average man—for a steam yacht, a house in Fifth avenue, a castle in—in Killarney, a"—

Janet did not remain to hear further. At bay, but still unvanquished, she retired and from that day gave herself up unreservedly to the task of frustrating the design of the traprock company. The weight of public sentiment was with her, and she manipulated it in every possible manner that her ingenuity could suggest.

Nothing was of the slightest avail. The big crushing machinery came up the river in sections, was unloaded at the foot of the mountain and put together and began at once its merciless reduction of the picturesque outcrop which had been loosened by the mighty fulminations and sharp pickaxes of the gang of dwarfed and noisy Palermitans that had camped just without Janet's inclosure.

It was a trying period for Janet Armitage. She was the most wretched woman in Crosskill when she knew that she should have been the happiest. She was the prey of contending emotions. It almost crushed her to be brought face to face with the knowledge that the power to make her supremely unhappy had been delegated to any one, and it grieved and humiliated her inexpressibly that the person delegated should have been John Rossiter. Most exasperating of all was the tardy conviction—unwelcome, yet unmistakable—that the man who had brought her to this extremity of discomfort was dearer to her than life itself.

All this came home to her with tremendous significance as she sat alone at her dinner on Christmas day. Everything seemed strangely unreal. The season itself was as unlike the typical holiday time as it well could be. Thus far there had not lodged a single snowflake on the hemlocks to herald the approach of winter. The air was soft and balmy, and there was a hazy lull in it that suggested a belated Indian summer. The unseasonableness of the weather was positively disquieting. It was impossible to fit the Christmas essentials into the scene.

"Open the windows, Beppo—wide open!" she called out to a half grown boy who stood looking in on her from the veranda outside. "It's positively stifling." Beppo was a swarthy Sicilian lad whom she had rescued from the mountain gang and befriended and who was repaying her for her protection with a devotion that was almost tragic in its earnestness.

Beppo threw open the unlatched door windows and stood in one of them in an attitude of rapt admiration. There was nothing at all reserved about Beppo. His effusiveness was a thing to be dreaded and repressed. Standing framed in the tall window, he seemed to Janet to be especially out of place and melodramatic. It irritated her to see him standing there, so suggestive of an opera chorus or a trumpery Neapolitan figurine. It was all very well, she told herself, to have him about when he was a starved and helpless waif left to shift for himself, but now—really she must send him down to the yards to see if anything could be made of him.

Then she saw John Rossiter coming along the river road on his way up the mountain. If it had annoyed her to see how strong and handsome Beppo was growing it was even more disturbing to discover that her arch enemy had lost something of his old time erectness of figure and lightness of step. She even fancied that he was looking worn and that he was less particular in his personal appearance than usual. As he passed the house he saw Janet and raised his hat politely. She bowed frigidly in return and called out sharply to Beppo:

"Close those windows! It's frightfully chilly in here!"

Beppo closed them, himself on the inside. He advanced slowly, with the most theatric and unnatural progression, now and then half turning to shake his clinched fist in the direction of the fast receding figure of the man who was beginning to ascend the mountain.

"I HAVE COME TO OFFER YOU A CHRISTMAS GIFT."

"No more! Nevair more!" he hissed mysteriously.

Janet was speechless with astonishment. She was familiar with the lad's heroics, but really this was something out of the ordinary.

"Dis night-a," continued Beppo in a sibillant whisper, "he mus'-a die!"

"Now, what do you mean?" Janet demanded sternly, with the evident intention of getting at the bottom of the matter. "Sit right down in that chair and tell me without any more nonsense."

For a reply Beppo drew his hand across his throat and gurgled suggestively.

Janet was beginning to be seriously alarmed. She knew that the youngster was emotional to the verge of absurdity and that he was not to be depended upon in an emergency. She had discovered that he had a passion for exaggeration, but it seemed to her that there must be something real about this.

"Beppo," she commanded in a tone that left no alternative, "do as I tell you!"

Thus brought to terms, the young Sicilian whispered a tale of contemplated assassination and robbery that would have been a veritable boon to one of the operatic maestri of the last generation. Three men of the mountain gang, he declared, had plotted to murder and rob John Rossiter on that very Christmas night, knowing that he would be alone in his office on the mountain. Beppo gave all the details of the dastardly business with the most ingenuous explicitness and seemed to expect Janet to share his enthusiasm over the removal of her enemy.

Janet did not stop to sift the matter. It was sufficient for her that the man she loved was threatened by a danger which she might avert. She did not hesitate a moment. Distrusting Beppo, she feigned satisfaction at the prospect of so soon being rid of her enemy and sent the boy to the village on an errand. As soon as he was out of sight she left her house and began to ascend the mountain as quickly as she could.

Half an hour later she stood at the open door of Rossiter's cabin and face to face with its occupant.

"Janet," he asked her doubtingly, "are you actually here?"

"Yes," she returned breathlessly and without looking at him at all. "I have come to offer you a Christmas gift."

He looked at her amazedly, but did not speak.

"I have come to offer you your life."

"I don't understand; really I do not, Janet," he said helplessly.

Then she told him Beppo's story.

He heard it to the end without a word of comment. When she had finished he sighed long and deeply.

"I am disappointed," he said, with a curious little quaver in his voice. "I am disappointed in my Christmas present. I hoped—I thought perhaps it might be something better."

"What is better than life?"

"You are—far better," he declared audaciously.

Janet knew that the long conflict was ended, and the knowledge lifted the weight from her heart.

"If you really believe anything of that sort, John"— she began.

* * * * * * *

"I forgot to tell you that there isn't a word of truth in your precious Beppo's story," John said as they were descending the mountain. "Why, the very men he named are in the village lockup at the present moment—too much holiday, you know. I saw them as I came up from the train. They are all good workmen, and in the morning I shall go down and pay their fines and get them out of limbo."

Where Greek Met Greek.

The marble clock in the dining room had just announced in mellow tones the hour of 3 a. m., when the wife of the plumber nudged him and whispered nervously:

"Horace, there's a burglar in the house!"

"There is, hey?" answered the husband, now thoroughly awake. "I'll see about him."

With cunning stealth he got out of bed and tiptoed out of the room. For ten minutes no sound broke the awful stillness. Then the house shook with a crash. There was a century of silents. Then a chair fell, the front door slammed and a heavy bundle thumped down the front stairs and into the street.

The terrified wife fainted, to be brought back to consciousness by the voice of her husband.

"It's all right, dear. I threw him out," he chuckled as he turned on the light. "But the scoundrel had only $4.30 in his clothes."—Judge.

For That Dull Feeling After Eating.

I have used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets for some time, and can testify that they have done me more good than any tablets I have ever used. My trouble was a heavy dull feeling after eating.—David Freeman, Kempt, Nova Scotia. These tablets strengthen the stomach and improve the digestion. They also regulate the liver and bowels. They are far superior to pills but cost no more. Get a free sample at E. A. Putnam's drug store and see what a splendid medicine it is.

The Wise Eskimos.

Everything in the Eskimo dress has a reason for its existence, writes Captain Roald Amundsen in "The Northwest Passage." The members of Captain Amundsen's expeditions had become accustomed to the Eskimo dress and had adopted it, but many of them thought it ridiculous for grown up men to go about wearing fringe to their clothes, so they cut it off. I had my scruples about this, says the author, as I had already learned that most things in the Eskimo's clothing and other arrangements had their distinct meaning and purpose, so I kept my fringe and put up with the ridicule. He laughs best who laughs last. One fine day the anoraks, a sort of tunic reaching below the knee, made of deerskin, from which the fringes had been cut off, commenced to curl up, and if the fringe had not been put on again quickly they would soon have looked like neckties.

Christmas on Taft's Ranch.

SECRETARY OF WAR TAFT is part owner of one of the largest ranches in Texas, the Coleman-Fulton ranch, so called, a 175,000 acre "farm" eleven miles from Corpus Christi on the San Antonio and Aransas Pass railroad. One hundred men are always and 250 men sometimes employed on it.

"I was so fortunate as to have the pleasure of seeing a unique Christmas tree on this ranch," writes Mary Elise Muncey in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "Christmas morning, though warm, was foggy, and a slow rain fell, but by 12 o'clock the sun came out, and the people at the ranch house began to make their preparations. Ever since early morning the employees from the different farms had been coming in. All kinds of vehicles were pressed into service. Some came on horseback and some on foot. There were many children.

"I saw what I had never seen before, a growing Christmas tree. Just in front of the house was a large mulberry tree. The ladies of the house came out about 2 o'clock and decorated the tree, with the assistance of some of the men. Even the men required stepladders to reach the topmost boughs. First, the ladies gave them some artificial icicles, which they hung on the branches in great profusion. As the sun was shining brightly by this time, it gave the icicles a very glittering appearance, and the wind, commencing to blow, shook them gently, making the illusion more perfect. Then long bright ribbons of many colors were suspended from the topmost limbs and fruit and candies tied on with ribbons of the same color—oranges with orange ribbon, apples with red ribbon, limes with green ribbon, etc. Small toys were suspended from the tree; large ones were at the base. It presented a very gorgeous spectacle, and the sight of the happy children that surrounded it made one wish to be a child again to enjoy it to the uttermost. But the best was yet to come.

"I SAW WHAT I HAD NEVER SEEN BEFORE, A GROWING CHRISTMAS TREE."

"In the front yard were the presents intended for the grown people, and each man received one. One was a fine surrey. Five were each given fifty and seventy-five dollar saddles. Several married men got handsome metal bedsteads, with springs and mattresses. Twenty or thirty fine hats, costing $7 apiece, were distributed and many other articles, all the best of their kind. I saw a young man who received an all leather suit case. This last item may seem strange on a ranch, but there are many polished gentlemen among the employees who would consider suit cases very necessary should they have occasion to visit the city.

"All this while music was to be heard from a band stationed on the front porch, where many of the visitors were seated. After the Santa Claus of the Christmas tree had retired and the presents to the grownups had been distributed all repaired to the porch and front yard to see again the gleeful children and the tree, and surely it was a thing of beauty and, with its fruits and flowers, looked as though it had been transplanted from fairyland.

"The people that came from a distance departed before nightfall, but those that lived near by remained for an evening of music and good cheer, and thus ended a happy Christmas day."

"The Queen's Christmas Card."

Queen Alexandra has not given up her interest in behalf of the unemployed. Last Christmas she sanctioned a unique plan to raise more funds for them. This was in the shape of the issue of a Christmas book, consisting of poems, stories, sketches, drawings and music, which was entitled "The Queen's Christmas Card." Algernon Charles Swinburne, Alfred Austin, the poet laureate; Thomas Hardy, Marie Corelli, Hall Caine, George Meredith, Arthur Wing Pinero, Sir Laurence Alma-Tadema, Edwin A. Abbey, William Holman Hunt, Sir Edward John Poynter and Sir Edward Elgar are among the host of those who contributed. The production of the book was practically gratuitous. It sold for half a crown, and the proceeds were devoted to the queen's unemployed fund.

The Desert Tortoise.

One of the most interesting reptiles of California's great desert is the desert tortoise. A writer in Suburban Life says: "I have found as many as twenty of these hard shelled fellows that we usually associate in our minds with the thought of water in the very heart of the desert, where the water was exceedingly scarce. Yet when you pick them up they generally void two or three large spoonfuls of liquid. Dissection shows that they each have two large water sacks on the back, and these afford them their water supply. They are great travelers and can walk faster than we should imagine. They are also good climbers. I have watched one for hours climbing up and down the rocky sides of a desert mountain. He could wriggle himself up to a rock almost as high as he was long. Raising himself on his tail end, he would use his head as a hook, then claw with his right leg until it had secured a good hold, then, with what seemed to me extraordinary strength, he would lift himself up and wiggle his body into a secure position."

Beware of Frequent Colds.

A succession of colds or a protracted cold is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh, from which few persons ever wholly recover. Give every cold the attention it deserves and you may avoid this disagreeable disease. How can you cure a cold? Why not try Chamberlains Cough Remedy? It is highly recommended. Mrs M. White of Butler Tenn., says: "Several years ago I was bothered with my throat and lungs. Some one told me of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I began using it and it relieved me at once. Now my throat and lungs are sound and well." For Sale by E. A. Putnam.

The Shillalah.

The shillalah owes its name to the fact that the finest specimens thereof used to be grown in the pleasant groves of trees that formerly flourished in the barony of Shillalagh, in County Wicklow. The best shillalah must be a root sprung sapling, for one taken from the branches of a full grown tree would lack the necessary toughness. Being trimmed and "brought to hand," the young stick undergoes preparatory discipline by being placed in the chimney to season, thus becoming early acclimatized to the hot work in store for it. This part of the curriculum finished, it is rubbed until completely saturated with oil, after which it is securely wrapped in a stout sheet of brown paper and buried in a convenient hotbed. At this stage of its development it is an object of unceasing watchfulness on the part of its proprietor, who to forestall any detrimental warp in the object of his care visits it daily, correcting any youthful tendency to depart from a straight line and [illegible] curing as straight a bit [illegible] of timber as heart could desire.—New York Tribune.

Good Cough Medicine f[illegible]r Children.

The season for coughs [illegible] and colds is now at hand and too much [illegible] care cannot be used to protect the chi[illegible]ldren. A child is more likely to contrac[illegible] diptheria or scarlet fever when he has [illegible] a cold. The quicker you cure his cold [illegible] the less risk. Chamberlain's Cough Re[illegible]medy is the sole reliance of many mothe[illegible]rs, and few of those who have tried [illegible] it are willing to use any other. Mr[illegible] F. F. Starcher of Ripley, W. Va., says: [illegible] I have never used anything other th[illegible]n Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my [illegible] children and it has always given g[illegible] satisfaction." This remedy contains [illegible] opium or other narcotic and may be [illegible]ven as confidently to a child as to an [illegible]dult. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

The Cheerful [illegible]dertaker.

A most amusing [illegible] occurred one evening upon our [illegible]val at a small town in New Z[illegible]nd. We found awaiting us at the station the local carriage and pair with the local undertaker as footman. He was garbed in his usual funeral suit of black, but he had substituted a white tie in order to relieve the situation somewhat, and, evidently with a desire to dispel any morbid impressions he might otherwise have created, he commenced to whistle a selection of the most cheerful tunes he knew, while he held the door open for us and helped us into the carriage.—Clara Butt in Musical Home Journal.

It Is a Wonder.

Chamberlain's Liniment is one of the most remarkable preparations yet produced for the relief of rheumatic pains, and for lame back, sprains and bruises. The quick relief from pain which it affords in case of rheumatism is alone worth many times its cost. Price, 25 cents. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Jerome's Mistake.

One of the early vicissitudes of Jerome K. Jerome as an actor was to be offered his choice of playing the part of either a soldier or a donkey in a pantomime, a real donkey with four legs. After careful consideration he thought the red coat the more becoming disguise and chose the part of the soldier. Apparently he made a mistake from the point of view of success at all events, for a few days afterward the manager came to him and said: "You made a great mistake, Jerome, in not taking the part of the donkey. It would just suit you, and there's a shilling a week more in it."

FOSTER THEATRE, THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 24.

Annual Meeting of the New York State Fruit Growers' Association.

The next annual meeting of the State Fruit Growers' Association will be held at Medina, N. Y., January 6th and 7th, 1909.

In addition to the excellent program given below, there will be a large display of fruit. The New York State Department Station will have an exhibit of about 500 plates, and the fine premiums that the Association will offer will doubtless draw out a large display from individual growers. There will also be a display of spraying machinery, baskets, ladders and other matter pertaining to the growing and harvesting of fruit. A complete program will be issued about December 23d, and will be mailed to all our members, and to any others who may apply to the Secretary.

The first session will open on Wednesday at 10 A. M. and will be devoted to business, such as reports of officers and standing committees. The report on Entomology by Prof. Parrott will be devoted largely to the blister mite, which is a very important matter, so do not think there will be nothing of interest at this session.

The afternoon session will be a conference on "Spraying Methods, Materials and Machinery." It is planned to bring out in this conference the quality and price of the different spraying materials purchased for the members by the Association, the effectiveness of some of the newer sprays and any items of experience that have been learned during the season. While this is an open conference for everyone, a dozen members will be named on the program to lead the discussion.

The evening session will be free—a very entertaining and instructive one. "Michigan Orchard Methods" will be given by the Secretary of the Michigan Horticultural Society, and "Observation on European Horticulture," by Prof. John Craig, of Cornell University. Both lectures are to be illustrated with lantern slides.

Thursday there will first be 90 minutes for questions, of which nearly a hundred have been sent to the Secretary, and they will appear in the program. Then Mr. C. E. Bassett, of Michigan, will speak on "Practical Principles for Profitable Peach Production." Mr. S. P. Hollister, of Cornell University, will give a fifteen-minute talk on "Judging Fruit and How to Select Fruit for Exhibition Purposes."

The closing session will include Prof. U. P. Hedrick on "Orchard Management" and Prof. C. S. Wilson, of Cornell University, on "The Control of the Black Rot on the Grape."

FOSTER THEATRE.

"Graustark" or "A Love Behind a Throne" to be presented at the Foster Theatre on Thursday, December 24th, is a dramatization of George Barr McCutcheon's most popular and best selling novel of the same title. Mr. McCutcheon is also the author of "Brewster's Millions," which was successfully produced last season. However it is the consensus of opinion that "Graustark" possesses far greater dramatic possibilities and is a much more interesting play.

The locale of the story lends itself readily to picturesque scenic settings and gorgeous costuming to regal gowns and military uniforms. The producers have spared no expense in this respect, and the production is said to be one of the most extravagant and elaborate ever given a romantic play.

"Graustark" should and probably will prove a dramatic treat.

Something Wrong With Bud's Merry Christmas

'Twas merry Christmas till des now, an' I was feelin' dandy.
But I don't feel so merry now. Say, what did ail dat candy?

Vain Pride.

"Well, how do you think this looks?" asks Mr. Binderby, coming into his wife's boudoir while she is arranging her coiffure.

"How does what look?" she inquires in tones that are muffled by some hairpins she has between her lips.

"I got this toupee to cover my bald spot. I'm always catching cold and—"

"Why, John James Binderby! The very idea!" she exclaims. "I thought you were a man who was above such petty vanity. When a man becomes so self conscious of his looks it has really a suspicious appearance."

Whereupon Mr. Binderby takes off the toupee and combs the four long locks of hair over his bald spot, and his wife continues to pin on the perfectly lovely puffs that so enhance her beauty.—Chicago Post.

The Romans Invented Horsepower.

The Romans, among whom agriculture was a highly favored occupation, were an inventive race, especially in the matter of labor saving machines. Recognizing the drudgery of hand mills, they invented those whose motive power was imparted by asses, mules and oxen and introduced them into all the countries conquered by their victorious armies. There is no positive record of the name of the originator of this improvement in milling.

Just Suited Her.

"Please, ma'am, I haven't a friend or a relative in the world," said the tramp.

Interpreting a Gift.

A Philadelphia man sent as a present to his son and daughter-in-law a gold eagle and with it the following letter:

"The woman on the face of this coin is for you, Clarence, because men usually like good looking women. The eagle on the reverse, with the feathers on its legs, is for Lottie, because women are supposed to like birds and feathers.

"The 'E Pluribus Unum,' which you know is translated 'One of Many,' means that of the many of them you would like to have this is the only one you get.

"The thirteen stars, being an unlucky number, indicate the hard luck many of us have in our efforts to gather in the quantity of these coins we really have need for, but, then, the forty-six stars around the rim tell you that by working like 'forty' six days in the week you can probably accumulate enough to see you through."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Dates and Her Birth.

Officer (investigating old age pension claims)—Well, Mrs. Brady, and how old might you be? Mrs. Brady—Sorra wan of me knows, indeed, sor. Officer—Think, now. Don't you know the date of your birth? Mrs. Brady—The date of my birth, is it? Sure, there was no such things as dates when I was born!—London Punch.

Shiftless.

Mrs. Borrow—Our neighbors are very shiftless people. Mr. Borrow—How do you know? Mrs. Borrow—When I go over to borrow anything they never have it.

TAX RATIOS.

The announcement of the county tax rate and the highway tax rate for the various towns of the county was made at the meeting of the Board of Supervisors Thursday morning.

The reason that some of the rates in the various towns run so high this year is because of the new highway law which compels the towns to pay for the roads outright and to raise a cash fund instead of allowing the residents of the town to work out the tax on the road.

HOLIDAY RUSH AT POSTOFFICE

Larger Business Transacted Than Any Preceding Season.

Business at the Fulton post office during the past Christmas week far exceeded that of any holiday season in the history of the local office. On Monday morning of the week named packages began to arrive and an additional package window was opened for the accommodation of the local patrons. Every mail train brought sacks loaded to the extreme limit with tokens from appreciative friends in neighboring cities. By Tuesday morning every available experienced clerk and carrier was enlisted in the service and heroic efforts made to keep pace with the extraordinary demand. A horse and conveyance was busily employed for four days and even during all of Christmas day in a vain effort to relieve the "white man's burden," and the employes did their full duty uncomplainingly. The receipts from the sale of stamps alone, from Dec. 21 to 27, this year, was $889.07; for the same time in 1907 it was $615 98, showing a very substantial increase.

ITALY'S STUPENDOUS LOSS.

Cities by earthquake, threatened by fire, drenched with rain and huge areas of the country submerged, Italy is indeed a country paralyzed with fear. The estimates on the loss of life are vague but point to a fatality list of not less than 25,000 people with loss of property too stupendous to estimate. The tidal wave did almost as much damage as the earthquake and at this hour the ruined cities and towns are enveloped in flames and the living residents are in danger of both starvation and incineration.

THE TROLLEY IS COMING.

This week, weather permitting, the trolley line between Fulton and Syracuse will open for traffic. Several dates have been decided upon prior to this, but conditions were such that the promised start could not be made.

The ticket office and waiting room for the company will be in the J. L. Jones store, next to Savings Bank, perhaps the most central location that could have been secured, and Mr. Jones will be ticket agent and express agent in charge. The arrangement meets with the approval of all to whom the plan has been presented and Mr. Jones will commence his duties on Thursday.

At first Fulton will have a 30-minute service to Syracuse and the rate will be 45 cents single ticket; 85 cents for a round trip ticket. Express matter will be carefully looked after and patronage solicited, but it is not thought probable that much will be done with freight before early Spring when a freight house will be constructed near the city.

To Repeat Lecture.

At the meeting of the Brotherhood Bible Class of the First Methodist Episcopal church last Sabbath a resolution was unanimously passed requesting the pastor, Dr. Cornwell, to deliver to the church on Easter morning his lecture on "The Historic Evidence of the Resurrection," which he had delivered to the class on the preceding Sabbath in connection with the lesson on the Resurrection, and which was considered by the class to be the most complete and convincing line of evidence on the subject ever presented to the church.

FOSTER THEATRE.

"Married For Money."

Manager W. H. Hickey of the Foster Theatre has what he believes a surprise in store for the patrons of his popular play-house, in the presentation next Thursday, December 31st, of Lem B. Parker's powerful drama of a phase of present day American life, entitled "Married for Money." The play is said to be one of the most absorbing and startling stories dealing with one of the greatest evils our social life is afflicted with, written in recent years.

John Stowe, president of the United Iron Company, at the opening of the story has risen to the presidency of the great corporation after a long apprenticeship served as foreman, superintendent and finally general-manager of one of the mills of the combine. The president of the trust died suddenly and Stowe was elevated to the presidency by a section of the directors who recognized his worth. This was not accomplished, however, until his wife, who had shared all the troubles and privations of his early struggles, humiliated herself and almost became the victim of one of the board of directors, Thomas Barr, who, as a reward for the votes controlled by himself and friends, demanded the sacrifice of her wifely honor. Urged by a desire to aid her husband whose one ambition in life was about to be realized, she was happily relieved by the timely appearance of a young man friend of the family, Ned Newell, the son of a bankrupt mine owner, who threatened to expose the unprincipled Barr to his fellow directors of the company.

The second act, three years later, shows John Stowe in the zenith of his power as one of the highest salaried officials in the United States, and now ranked as one of the iron magnates of the country. The wife of his youth, and the mother of his daughter, did not take kindly to the artificial life of the gilded society set in which they were supposed to move, and the husband, ambitious to shine not only in the financial world, but in the social world as well, sought to cast her off and became enamored with a beautiful and reigning operatic star, who he believed could fill the social requirements of the wife of a man of his prominence.

The third act, two years later, finds Stowe the husband of the actress, and through a manipulation of the stock market by a clique of dissatisfied directors of the corporation led by Thomas Barr, his bitterest enemy, he is financially ruined, and indicted by the United States court under the anti-trust law, and the United Iron Company goes out of existence. In the midst of these troubles, his actress wife deserts him upon learning that he is penniless, and the last act shows him a prisoner with fines aggregating $100,000 hanging over his head, and deserted by all his erstwhile fair weather friends.

How he is ultimately saved by the wife and daughter whom he forsook is graphically told in this act. The play abounds in thrilling situations and startling climaxes and the interest never lags from the rise to the fall of the curtain. It has been pronounced by many to be the equal in intensity of human interest and emotion as "The Man of the Hour," or "The Lion and the Mouse."

The production is given under the direction of Clay T. Vance, the well known manager and producer, who has provided a presenting company of unusual merit; headed by W. A. Whitecar, late star of "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," whose excellent work in this play is well remembered by local theatregoers. Seats are now on sale at Watson's and Sullivan's drug store.

MARRIED

Miss Bessie May Filkins and Mr. George H. Barto, both of Schroeppel, were united in marriage on Monday by the Rev. F. A. Miller.

Last Wednesday at South Hannibal at the residence of John Rowlee, Harry Stebbins of Lysander and Emma Rowlee were united in marriage.

On Thursday evening at 5 o'clock at the family home in Emory street, Mrs. Ellen Harding was united in marriage with Mr. Anson Salsbury of Breckenridge, Minn., by the Rev. John G York, pastor of the Baptist church. The ceremony was witnessed by the immediate members of the brides family. After a bridal tea Mr. and Mrs. Salsbury left for a short trip. In the early Spring they will go to Breckenridge for a time to look after Mr. Salsbury's business interests. Their many friends in this vicinity extend congratulations.

Post Standard, Dec. 22: Smylax and bride's roses were used for the background at the wedding of Miss Lucile Oliva Bacon when she became she the bride of George Gernsh Bailey of St. John's Military Academy. The marriage occurred at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Bacon in Walnut place. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Frederick T. Rainey, the pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church. The bridal party consisted of Miss Bacon, Mr. Bailey, Mrs. William A. Grant, the bride's sister, as matron of honor, and over their heads was suspended a canopy made of smylax, bride's roses and asparagus plumosa, a horseshoe of electric lights gleaming through this bower. The roses and smylax carried out the white and green color scheme throughout the rooms. The bride's table was placed beneath a gilded umbrella trimmed with roses and asparagus fern. White roses and silver candelabra holding white candles were used on the table. Pink roses in clusters were used in the dining-room, where the guests were served. Preceding the bridal party were Miss Roberta Hill, Miss Mabel Lowther, Miss Hazel Andrews and Miss Norma Ackerman, who formed an aisle with white ribbons attached to arm bouquets of white carnations and ferns. The best man was Orma Marsh of St. John's Military Academy. The bride was robed in white satin empire gown, duchess lace trimmed. She wore a veil and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses. Mrs. Grant wore a pink messaline satin dress and carried pink roses. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey will be "at home" after February 15 at Manlius.

Mrs. La Plain's Accidental Death.

Journal, Wednesday: Mrs. Samantha La Plain, wife of John La Plain of 723 East Washington street, was found dead in bed at 9 a. m. to-day by her husband, when he awoke beside her.

Mr. La Plain called in some neighbors, who notified the police. Detective John Donavan was sent to make an investigation. He learned that Mrs. La Plain on Monday night had purchased a bottle of alcohol at an East Washington street drug store. Later the empty bottle was found in the street, and it is thought the woman drank the contents. On Tuesday Mrs. LaPlain complained of feeling dizzy, and said her eyesight was failing her.

Coroner A. M. Willer was notified by the police and will investigate. The body was removed to John McCarthy's Sons' undertaking rooms.

Mrs. La Plain was about 50 years old, and came here from Fulton. Her husband is a laborer. She has a son in Fulton and a daughter in this city.

CIVIL WAR INCIDENT

How a Watch Sent to a Soldier Boy was Recovered After Many Years.

In 1864 Captain Tom's Company was under marching orders, the coast of Florida being their destination. We were aboard the transport Nightingale. A steamer was in sight for New York. I wrote home for my people to send me some necessary articles and a watch. A few weeks after Sant "Bill" and a squad joined us on coast from New Orleans and told me the following story:

He said when home on a furlough, he met my father and I asked him if he would take a watch and some articles to me, and he said yes. Father bought of Charles Nichols of Fulton a good solid silver, hunting case American Waltham watch with silver neck chain for forty-three dollars, and some other articles, and gave them to Sergeant "Bill." He stated that when he reached New Orleans he was ordered from the transport to a large cotton press with three or four hundred other soldiers to await transportation to their regiments. He at once fell in with an old home acquaintance, a member of the 25th Battery, which was up in red Red River country. Of course they were social and bunked in together "Bill" said he had two watches besides mine in a pocket inside of his shirt, fastened around his neck; mine with the silver chain and the others by cords. At night when he had them on exhibition. In the morning when he awoke he discovered that his comrade and my watch were gone, the swivel having been unscrewed and the chain and other watches remained. He felt bad and at once went to the captain in charge of the cotton press and related the circumstances. But he said he could not do anything, as there were so many soldiers going and coming constantly.

When he joined the company he gave me the other articles and offered to pay for the watch. Knowing his circumstances to be limited and that he couldn't afford it, I said no, telling him he took the watch in a friendly accomodating spirit, and as it had proved to be an unlucky venture, we would let it go. Shortly after this "Bill" and the drummer, were having some words and the latter accused him of stealing my watch, which made him feel worse than ever.

A year after the Civil War I was at a camp meeting and met one of my army comrades and he said, "Sam, I think I know where your watch is." He stated that a prominent citizen in the place where he lived carried an American Waltham watch which answered to the description of mine. They were of new make and there were not many people around who carried them, and when a man pulled one of those watches out of his pocket it attracted attention. My comrade said this man claimed that he traded watches with his brother before he went West and he told him that he won it from a soldier in New Orleans, playing poker. I reached home at 11 o'clock, finding that father had retired, but was awake. I related the above circumstances and he quickly straightened up in bed and said, "Hand me my diary from my coat pocket." He turned to the middle of the book and said, "There is the number of your watch." I looked at it and it read 82799. He said "Bill" being a stranger might possible let me have a cheaper watch, so he wrote it down. We were confident that it was my watch, as this man's brother was the one who slept with "Bill" in the cotton press in New Orleans.

Monday we drove to the village where the man lived and watched out for him in one of the stores. He finally came in and father stepped up in front of him and said, "I understand that you carry a Waltham watch. Won't you please let me look at it?" He did so, then father said, "I don't know but I shall have to claim this watch as it looks just like the one I sent to my son two years ago last May when he was in the army.

We have the number of our watch. You lay yours down on the counter and we will see how the number of your watch compares with the number in my diary." They both read alike—82799.

The man then turned on father and said, "Now see here, Gordon, you have got somebody to look at my watch and get the number of it so as to claim it." Father's reply was, "There is Squire B— at hand. I will go before him and make an affidavit that I set that number down in my diary two years ago last May." The man then said, "No, Gordon, I know you and won't require that. Here is the watch. I got it of my brother who said he got it of a soldier in New Orleans, playing poker." The cases were plain, with the exception of a monogram in the center of the front case on which the initials of this man's brother had been engraved.

We often hear that "the cat came back," but don't often learn of a watch coming back some three thousand miles. It has been said that foresight is far superior to hindsight.

COUNTY ATTORNEY COVILLE'S REPORT

TO THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF OSWEGO COUNTY:

As required by resolution of this Board, I herewith respectfully submit my report in relation to the recovery by the county of moneys illegally paid to, or retained by, the Coroners, Sheriffs, and County Treasurer, as follows:

A brief statement of the law on this subject will enable you to understand the exact situation. The Board of Supervisors is vested with power to audit and determine all claims presented against the county. This power is subjected to one limitation. The Board cannot allow any claim which is fundamentally illegal as a charge against the county. If it attempts to do so, its act is without jurisdiction and void, and the money paid pursuant to such an audit may be recovered by the county.

"Whether a claim is a proper county charge where it is doubtful and rests upon disputed evidence, or what amounts shall be allowed when not fixed by statute, are questions which the statute commits to the determination of the Board of Audit, and however much it may err in its judgment upon the facts, so long as it keeps within its jurisdiction, and acts in good faith, its audit cannot be overhauled, and is final and conclusive as well to the taxpayers as to the claimant." Likewise, where the board has the right to allow disbursements, its decision as to the amount, necessity and reasonableness of the expenses incurred, is final and cannot be set aside.

The only cases, therefore, in which an action can be successfully maintained by the county to recover back moneys paid by authority of the audits of former Boards of Supervisors, are those in which the charges were of such an illegal nature that the board acted without jurisdiction in allowing them.

Coroners.

The coroners are allowed twenty-five cents per folio for copying their decisions for record. This item in their bills has usually been for an excessive amount, due apparently to the fact that they considered the evidence taken by them as part of their decisions. These items, and a few others, should not have been allowed to their full amount; and while it is possible, but not probable, that some relief might be afforded by a taxpayer's action, I do not think the board has acted without jurisdiction in any of these cases, and I advise that no action could be successfully maintained by the county against any of the Coroners to recover back any moneys paid.

Sheriffs.

The laws in regard to the fees and compensation of sheriffs are vague and incomplete, and it is often difficult to apply the law to specific cases. I have been unable to find the sheriff's bills audited in 1902 and 1904; and my report covers the bills audited in the years 1903, 1905, 1906 and 1907. I submit the following statement of the amounts which, in my opinion, have been illegally audited and allowed by the Boards of Supervisors. Schedules are annexed, showing the items of the several amounts:

Elden H. Cook, Ex-Sheriff.

Audit of 1903, Schedule "A"	$331.62
Audit of 1905, Schedule "B"	441.60
Audit of 1906, Schedule "B" (2), one month
Total	$

Henry Hilton, Sheriff.

Audit of 1906, Schedule "C"	$326.75
Audit of 1907, Schedule "D"	313.24
Total	$639.99

Frank W. White, Deputy Sheriff at Pulaski.

Audit of 1903, Schedule "E"	$216.00
Audit of 1905, Schedule "F"	181.11
Audit of 1906, Schedule "G"	307.30
Audit of 1907, Schedule "H"	211.88
Total	$916.29

In my opinion an action could be maintained by the county to recover these respective amounts, with a reasonable probability of success.

In order that the full facts may be laid before you, I report that, in addition to the amounts contained in the foregoing statement, Mr. Cook has received from $800 to $900 each year, which, in my opinion, the board should not have allowed him. Mr. Hilton has received a like amount excepting in the year 1907, when he received about $200 of this class of items. Mr. White has also received an average of approximately $300 each year, which, I think, should not have been allowed. These were all cases in which the board has jurisdiction of the matter contained in each charge, and while the amounts were probably excessive, the decision of the board under the law, as above stated, was binding and conclusive upon all parties; and I am of the opinion no action can now be maintained by the county. Possibly some what greater relief could be afforded by a taxpayer's action, but that is, to say the least, questionable. I also find that, during this period of time, the Sheriffs have failed to charge for items to which they were justly entitled, nearly equalling in amount the sums last mentioned. The principal item of this character consists of salaries paid to keepers of the jails, which are plainly county charges and are so considered in other counties, and by the examiners from the Comptroller's office. Such items are now contained in the Sheriff's bills for the current year.

Under all the circumstances, I recommend as follows:

(1). As to Mr. Hilton, I recommend that this board, before approving the bills now reported to it by the Committee on Sheriffs' and Jailers' Accounts, deduct from the amount, which would otherwise be due Mr. Hilton, the said sum of $639.99.

(2). As to Mr. White, I recommend that, in a similar manner, the said sum of $916.29 be deducted from the amount otherwise due to him.

The right of the board to do this under the circumstances may, perhaps, be questionable, and in event of an unfavorable decision by the courts, this procedure might result in an extra session of the board. However, it puts the burden of any litigation where it belongs, and seems to me to be the prompt and businesslike way of getting at the matter.

(3). As to Mr. Cook, I feel justified in leaving the matter to the judgment of the board. I believe that a small recovery could be had; at the same time I desire to suggest the possibility of his establishing a counter-claim for keeper's salaries paid by him; and that I cannot positively assure you of a successful termination.

County Treasurer.

From the examinations made by the committee appointed by this board, and from the examination made by examiners from the State Comptroller's office, it appears that the former County Treasurer, Thomas Moore, has retained for his own personal use certain fees received by him, in addition to his salary of $1,000 per year.

The following is a statement of these fees:

SCHEDULE A.
Court Funds.

1902	$101.04

1906	93.44
1907	95.08
1907	21.44
1907	71.33
Total		$ 624.14
Total		$1,458.89

SCHEDULE B.
Fees on Liquor Tax Fund.

1902	$1,238.20
1903	1,645.47
1904	1,678.64
1905	1,641.57
1906	1,650.36
1907	1,617.55
Total		$9,471.79

By chapter 436 of the laws of 1877, it was provided that "Every County Treasurer hereafter elected or appointed shall receive as compensation for his services an annual salary to be fixed by the Board of Supervisors. He shall not receive to his own use any interest, fees or other compensation for his services, excepting in proceedings for unpaid taxes." The present county law repeals this law, and merely provides that the board shall fix the salary and compensation of County Treasurers.

In 1883 the Board of Supervisors, pursuant to chapter 436 of the laws of 1877, fixed the salary of the County Treasurer at $1,000.

There can be little question that fees of the character mentioned in schedule "A" thereupon became the property of the county; and the matter was apparently settled by the case of People ex rel. Conine vs. County of Steuben, 183 N. Y. 114. This case was decided after the county law took effect, but is largely based upon the laws of 1877 above mentioned. In the report made by the Comptroller's office, it is stated that fees of this character belonged to the county, and that they could be recovered from the County Treasurer. The committee of this board, of which I was a member, followed the opinion of the Comptroller and this decision, and adopted the same view.

As applied to the fees in question, I differ somewhat from this opinion, for two reasons: first, upon examination of the Session Laws subsequent to the year 1877, I find that by chapter 673 of the laws of 1886 the County of Oswego was excepted from the provisions of chapter 436 of the laws of 1877. The effect of this is to greatly diminish the value of the Conine case as applied to the present situation in this county.

Second, it has been very recently decided in the Supreme Court of this State, that, inasmuch as the Board of Supervisors has power to fix the salary of a County Treasurer, their audit of his accounts which showed that he had retained fees for his own use, was equivalent to increasing his salary to the extent of the fees allowed.

As regards the fees derived from liquor tax moneys, mentioned in schedule "B", the question is still more doubtful.

Under all circumstances, I advise you that the right of the county to recover the fees mentioned from the County Treasurer involves questions which have never been settled by the courts; and while I am of the opinion that the county would stand a reasonable chance of recovering at least part of them, I cannot assure you of the outcome of the action.

In case the board desires to direct the commencement of an action, the present County Treasurer should be required to forthwith demand of Thomas Moore an account of fees as above stated.

County Attorney.

We do believe that physical culture in the public schools of Syracuse, however, has been overdone. Big Figures In Politics

The Controversy Between the President and an Indiana Editor and Those Who Are Concerned in the Incident.

William Dudley Foulke and Delavan Smith — Senator Stephen B. Elkins and His Escape From an Italian Title.

DELAVAN SMITH.

THE letter which President Roosevelt recently addressed to William Dudley Foulke of Indiana regarding alleged false statements as to the purchase of the Panama canal by the government of the United States from that of France has placed in the limelight the editor of the Indianapolis News, Delavan Smith. Mr. Foulke wrote to the president making inquiry as to the facts in the matter in question, Mr. Smith's paper having charged that the president's brother-in-law, Douglas Robinson of New York, and Charles P. Taft, editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star, brother of the president elect and candidate for Mr. Foraker's seat in the senate, were concerned in alleged suspicious dealings connected with the transfer of the canal from French to American ownership. The president, in replying to Mr. Foulke's letter of inquiry, said:

"Delavan Smith and the other people who repeated this falsehood lied about the president's brother-in-law, but why the fact that Mr. Smith lied should be held to involve Mr. Robinson in a 'scandal' is difficult to understand. The scandal affects no one but Mr. Smith, and his conduct has been not merely scandalous, but infamous. Mr. Robinson had not the slightest connection of any kind, sort or description at any time or under any circumstances with the Panama matter. Neither did Mr. Charles Taft."

Editor Taft of Cincinnati has threatened to take steps to call Editor Smith to account in the courts for the insinuations his paper made against the former's character. Editor William M. Laffan of the New York Sun is also brought into the controversy by a reference to him in the president's letter to Mr. Foulke, and another New York paper, the World, which gave publicity to the charges during the recent campaign, now asks for a congressional investigation of the matter.

WILLIAM D. FOULKE.

Mr. Foulke, to whom the president's much discussed letter was addressed and by whom it was given out for publication, has been a civil service commissioner of the United States and is widely known as scholar, reformer and author. Mr. Roosevelt's friendship for Mr. Foulke dates from the time when the latter served under President George William Curtis as a member of the executive committee of the National Civil Service Reform league in 1885-6. Mr. Foulke was chairman of the special commission appointed by the league to investigate the conditions of the civil service under President Harrison. He was born in New York city in 1848 and was graduated from Columbia university in the class ahead of Seth Low, with whom he has since been much associated in civil service reform work. He is also a graduate of the Columbia School of Law and for some time practiced law successfully in Indiana. He was once president of Swarthmore college. It was during his service in the Indiana legislature that he became interested in civil service reform, and it was in 1902 that President Roosevelt made him a member of the national civil service commission. Since 1890 Mr. Foulke has been engaged largely in literary pursuits and is the author of "Slav and Saxon," a biography of Oliver P. Morton, war governor of Indiana, and a romance of Yucatan at the time of the Spanish invasion called "Maya."

There were a great many pleasant greetings between fellow lawmakers on the reassembling of the Sixty-first congress, and many a joke or bit of persiflage was exchanged between old friends. On such occasions party lines seem to be forgotten. The sight of a Republican leader like Senator Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia going to the capitol in friendly converse with a Democratic opponent like Senator Isidor Rayner of Maryland is nothing unusual. Senator Elkins got a boisterous greeting on his appearance among

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

In Different Sets.

It is but seldom, one imagines, that a good joke is made about an oyster. Edmund Yates, however, in his "Recollections and Experiences," relates one. "I was walking with Thackeray one evening from the club," writes Yates, "and, passing a fish shop in New street, he noticed two different tubs of oysters, one marked 'I shilling a dozen' and the other 'Is. 3d. a dozen.' "'How they must hate each other!' said Thackeray."

London's Bridges.

Few people are aware of the extent to which the city of London is bridged over. In all, it seems, there are no fewer than seventy-five bridges. Of these nineteen are railway bridges, three are bridges over roads (such as Holborn viaduct), and fifty-three are bridges which connect private premises.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Costly Brier Pipe.

"People don't understand brier pipe making," said a dealer. "If they did they wouldn't consider a five or six dollar brier extravagant. Did you know, for instance, that a brier pipe after its completion is put away to season for nine or ten years? French brier is the best material for these pipes. It isn't, though, brier, and it doesn't come from France. It comes from—etymologically speaking—the word 'bruyere,' which means 'furze.' French brier is really Italian furze root, a growth of the Tuscan Alps. The plant is as carefully cultivated as tobacco itself. All the sprouts and leaves are kept well pruned; thus all the sap goes to the root's nourishment. The root is cut when fully developed and boiled and dried before shipment. Afterward the pipemaker boils and dries it again. And when the pipe is finished he stores it away for further drying—a matter of eight years or so. The best brier pipe is one cut crosswise of the grain, and the grain should be birdseye. Such a pipe lasts a lifetime—can be handed down from father to son. Of course it is dear."

A "Lady" In Pepys' Time.

There were worse terrors than the matinee hat for the man who sat behind a lady in the seventeenth century theater, as recalled by the London Chronicle. At least, we may suppose so from Mr. Pepys' experience on Jan. 29, 1661, when he saw "The Lost Lady" for the second time. Nine days earlier that play had not pleased him much, partly perhaps because he was "troubled to be seen by four of our office clerks, which sat in the half crown box and I in the 1s. 6d." But on the second occasion the play did "please me better than before, and here, I sitting behind in a dark place, a lady spit backward upon me by a mistake, not seeing me." However, it was all right, for, "after seeing her to be a very pretty lady, I was not troubled at it at all."

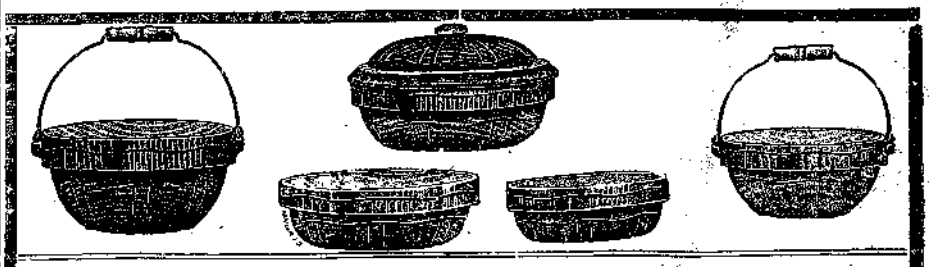
A Famous Story.

Every section has its famous story. A famous story that is being told in Oregon is about a very rich banker who got his start by doing work for the government. His bill was $5,000, and it had to be submitted to congress. Congress has a habit of cutting its bills in two. To make allowance for this he jumped his bill to $10,000. He sent the bill to the governor for his approval. The governor, having also heard that congress generally appropriated only half as much as was asked, jumped it to $20,000. The bill was then sent to one of the congressmen. Being friendly to the contractor, he jumped it to $40,000 and sent it to another Oregon congressman for his approval. The second congressman jumped it to $80,000. Congress allowed the whole $80,000, although the contractor was entitled to only $5,000. This is told as a fact in Oregon. The man who got the $80,000 got his start on it and is now a millionaire.—Atchison Globe.

Only the Truth.



A virtue carried to excess may become ridiculous. To such action one may well preach, "Be temperate in all things," even in virtue. Amelia Opie, the English authoress, was not content with any half measures, as is shown in a letter from her quoted in "Quaker Pictures," by Wilfred Whitten. Mrs. Opie's course of conduct is to be respected as proceeding from her conscientious nature, but fiction readers may congratulate themselves that her opinions are not universal.

Before she became a Quaker she wrote fiction. After her conversion she was asked to contribute a story to a magazine. Her answer to the editor ran as follows:

"Thou knowest or ought to know that since I became a Friend I am not free to what is called to make a story. I will write a fact for thy perusal or any little matter of history or truth or a poem if thou wishest, but I must not lie and say such and such a thing took place when it did not. Dost thou understand?"

Considerate.

'Cooked" and "Well Cooked" Food

Good food and a good cook are not enough to produce a good meal. Much depends on the vessels in which the food is prepared. Unless these are scrupulously clean, there will be a disagreeable odor or a taste of tin or iron, not to mention the danger of ptomaine poisoning. Many stomach troubles and other ailments can be traced back to this source. These dangers are overcome by the use of our

SANITO COOKING UTENSILS

These are specially made to reproduce the old German cooking utensils so universally used abroad. SANITO ware has a special lining which cannot crack or scale off. This lining is absolutely acid proof, and the vessels are always sweet, clean and wholesome. SANITO ware should be used for all ordinary culinary purposes. It will prove particularly valuable in preparing food for the sick or for infants.

s that its readers istmas and that the e spirit left them ulfilled. For 1909 ht promises of in- , the Times ex- d wishes to its pa readers, correspondents dvertisers—for the very best of the new year's offerings. And this paper also extends thanks for many favors received at the hands of its friends, for liberal patronage accorded and kindly expressions of good will and confidence. Nor are we unmindful of the beneficial results of honest criticism which has been met oft times. Newspapers, like people, are not infallible, nor is a continuous diet of honey either nourished nor desirable.

Here's to Fulton: May she live long and rightly.

THE EDITOR WISHES.

That when you know any good news you would tell it to the editor. It would go any farther than the Fulton Times and it goes from Maine to Manila.

That our printing competitors would learn how to figure actual cost of producing a job and then how to add an honest percentage of profit so that they might continue to do business, and the real "square deal" be vouchsafed all.

That the various societies throughout the city would contemplate seriously the proposition of taking their cash printing where they take their free advertising and know that one 25 cent supper ticket (without thanks) is small compensation for $5 to $10 worth of free advertising notices.

That all subscriptions now due would be paid once before a bill is presented. There is not sufficient profit on a year's subscription to warrant the expenditure of time and postage to collect it.

THINGS POLITICAL.

With the exchanging of Xmas gifts and wishes and the smell of the national bird arousing everywhere in the land, the political cauldron still seethed merrily and to date it is announced that "Tad" Sweet of Phoenix has announced his candidacy for Member of Assembly to succeed Assemblyman F. L. Smith, whose term of office has hardly begun. Mr. Sweet has been very prominent in his home town politics and is a present County Committeeman from Schroeppel.

Attorney Elisha B. Powell, one of the best known attorneys in this district, last week publicly announced his candidacy for the Supreme Court Justiceship to succeed Justice Scripture. In response to questions asked Mr. Powell by the Times, regarding his announced candidacy the following replies were received

Mr. Powell, what are your views upon the question of a Supreme Court Judge for the County of Oswego?

I believe that Oswego County should have a resident Supreme Court Judge. The extensive and varied business interests of the county require this, both as a matter of economy and convenience to those who are or may be involved in litigation, and this means everybody. It is only fair and equitable that, in choosing the Judges for this Judicial District, the large and important county of Oswego should have one of them.

Do you believe that Oswego County can secure a Supreme Court Judge at the coming election?

I am firmly convinced that the other counties of this district will recognize our rights and treat us fairly in this matter. If the electors of this county will agree upon a suitable candidate for this office, the prospects of our securing this Judge are bright.

Are you a candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court?

I fully appreciate the great importance of this office and what it means to aspire to be a Justice of the Supreme Court. I have been requested by many persons from various parts of this Judicial District to be a candidate for this office. In response to these suggestions, I have concluded to be a candidate, and I respectfully ask the electors of the county to give me their cordial support.

COUNTY ATTORNEY COVILLE'S REPORT

The report of County Attorney Henry Coville to the Board of Supervisors, regarding the conditions found in the report of State Comptroller Glynn on the affairs of this county, was a complete vindication of the Board and the honest manner in which the Supervisors have tried to conduct the affairs of this county.

Mr. Coville is an honest, painstaking and efficient official. He spent several months going over the Comptroller's report and examining the law as to the possibilities of sustaining an action at law to recover any of the money the Comptroller had declared had been illegally paid out by the Board of Supervisors or received by county officials The result of Mr. Coville's investigations is that while he found that the Board of Supervisors had made some mistakes, through ignorance of the law, which is most complicated and hard for even a lawyer to understand, and through the following of precedents which have been handed down from one Board of Supervisors to another for many years, he could not find where the Board of Supervisors had in a single instance knowingly and wilfully performed an unlawful act.

It will be remembered that during the campaign just closed that David P. Morehouse and others who were opposing the election of the candidates nominated on the Republican ticket, charged that the Board of Supervisors was honeycombed with rottenness; that bills were paid without warrant of law, and that the taxpayers were at the mercy of the men who were sent to look after their interests; that the county was being robbed right and left, especially in the manner in which the county jails were conducted. True, some items had been presented to the Board of Supervisors and ordered paid, which should not have been paid under a strict interpretation of the law, but these same items had been presented by sheriffs for years and allowed. Mr. Coville found that while the county could undoubtedly collect these amounts that the sheriffs had failed to charge the county for things which they had a perfect right to charge for, and that these amounts will nearly offset the amounts which they were paid unlawfully by the Board of Supervisors, and such excess has been repaid to the county. In not a single instance was Mr. Coville able to find any of the corrupt practices which Mr. Morehouse and others had charged.

Mr. Coville's report covered the ground he was authorized to cover by the resolution of the Board of Supervisors passed at the special session last summer. The Board of Supervisors did not go far enough, however. It should have instructed the County Attorney to have examined into the right of the County Treasurer to pay bills without the proper audit of the Board of Supervisors, and whether or not money so paid could not be collected through an action of some kind from the County Treasurer who paid the bills. The fact of the matter is that the bills and the extravagances complained of in the last election was not because of the bills audited by the Board of Supervisors, but the bills which had been paid by the County Treasurer without the audit of the Board of Supervisors. Mr. Coville's report will do more than anything else to set at right the conditions which really exist in this county, and to explain to the people that the men who represent the several towns and wards in the Board of Supervisors are not the gang of thieves and robbers that certain persons have tried to make out they were.

Statistics show that Great Britain is the only country that sends out to the world more leather footwear than the United States. England exports about nine millions of pairs of boots and shoes against six millions from this country, but it appears from the same statistics that our shoes profit the exporters eleven and a half millions, while the British exporters get but ten millions. This would seem to indicate that the American manufacturer with his machinery is the more skillful of the two, and of course the most skillful in the world. The American shoe is made by machinery, and the cost is the least in the world, although the wage of the operator is the highest. The manufacturers of Massachusetts declare that if the tariff is taken off leather and hides they can outsell the rest of the world, and the biggest manufacturers say that they are willing to forego the tariff on shoes if the tariff on leather and hides is removed. This is the question that is up to Congress. The shoe men claim that the duty on hides is for the benefit of the meat trust and that the tariff on leather only adds to the riches of the leather trust. But the meat trust has something to say on the subject. They declare that the tariff adds $3 to the price of every animal that the trust buys from the farmer. It is said that figures do not lie, but it is also said that liars figure. The tariff on hides is only 15 per cent., and if that adds $3 to the cost of the bullock, the entire hide should fetch $20. From this it would appear that in some instances the skin is worth more than the beef The shoe manufacturer is firmly established in the West. St. Louis manufactures an enormous output of boots and shoes, as does Nashville and other cities; while Massachusetts and New England are feeling this western competition and realize that if their shops are to continue in business they must conquer foreign markets, and this is why they are clamoring for cheaper raw materials. The special session of Congress, to be called to revise the tariff, will have much to do with making or marring the prosperity of many interests.

Two members, at least, of the cabinet of President-elect Taft have been finally decided upon—Philander Knox, Senator from Pennsylvania as the head of the cabinet and Mr. Hitchcock for Postmaster General. Mr. Knox is a wealthy man and owns a fine house in Washington. He can sustain the inevitable expense of entertainment expected of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, for this is the relation which the portfolio of the Secretary of State involves. It is said that Representative Burton's reason for declining a cabinet position was because of the expensive social necessities that attached to it. The salaries of cabinet officers have been recently raised to $12,000 a year, and this to many would seem ample to support a person of American tastes in Washington, where living is not necessarily high. But it is well known that wealth is a necessary accessory to high official position. A regime of millionaire senators has set the pace and the Rooseveltian era has been one of brilliant hospitality It is given out that President-elect Taft is expected to introduce a simple-life in his administration at home and abroad. He disapproves, for example, the lavish entertainment of the American ambassador to Great Britain. No successor to Mr. Reid that he can appoint will be able to keep the pace set by the ambassador; and it has been said that other governments are displeased, because none of them have been able even to approach Mr. Reid in the prodigality and brilliancy of his entertainments. Mr. Reid, as is well known, is something more than a mere money-spender. He has been a candidate for vice-president of the United States; he was for four years American minister to France; he has been a writer and an editor for forty years, and has made a special study of foreign affairs Where would it be possible to find another man with such equipment and accomplishments in the multi-millionaire class?

First Giraffe in Europe.

Dr. Johnson, as is well known, refused for many months to believe in the Lisbon earthquake, and Parisians formerly were just as skeptical as to the existence of the giraffe, a new specimen of which has just been added to the Jardin des Plantes. The earliest specimen of these gentle creatures was seen in Paris in the reign of Louis XVI. We learn from a French contemporary that the giraffe was first heard of in 1787, when it was described by a Frenchman named Levaillant, who had journeyed in the lands of the Hottentots and Kaffirs. When the explorer referred to the animals with the long necks he was looked upon as a Munchausen and told that he was such in not the politest language. It was only when some living specimens arrived in the French capital that Levaillant's reputation for veracity was re-established, and then the animals for a long time formed the sensation of Paris, not only among the multitude, but in all scientific circles.—London Globe.

Declining.

"Miss Frocks has reached her declining years," said Jones.

"Nonsense," replied Brown. "She's not more than twenty-five."

"But she has declined half a dozen men."

SUPERVISOR BEARDSLEY'S BILL.

The town of Granby may well be proud of her representative in the county legislature, Mr. L. D. Beardsley. He neither slumbers nor sleeps when his town's interests are endangered and he also keeps an ever watchful eye open for the best interests of Oswego County as a whole. His latest effort on the Board was to present a bill providing that the office of Sheriff be placed on the salaried list, which was unanimously adopted by the Board. Its provisions are practically as follows: that the Sheriff of the County of Oswego next elected and thereafter to be elected shall receive an annual salary of $3,000, payable quarterly by the County Treasurer. Such compensation shall not be increased or diminished during the term of office of any incumbent. It shall be the Sheriff's duty to perform all the services required by law, including the care and management of the jails and prisoners.

Section three provides that all fees shall belong to Oswego county and any service rendered by the Sheriff, his Under Sheriff or Deputies must be paid for in advance.

Section four provides for the keeping of proper books, giving an accurate account of all official services performed by employes of the Sheriff.

Section five provides for a full and true statement of all moneys received, to be filed with the County Treasurer within ten days from the expiration of the quarter and also that all moneys be turned over. A summary of quarterly reports shall be presented to the Board of Supervisors at its annual meeting. A bond in the sum of $20,000 is required of the Sheriff.

Section eight provides for one Under Sheriff, who shall be appointed by the Sheriff and may be removed by him at any time, at an annual salary of $1,000; and a keeper of the Oswego Jail at a salary of $500. The Sheriff shall also have the power to appoint as many deputies, keepers, clerks and other assistants as he may deem necessary, all of whom shall be paid by the Sheriff out of the $3,000 allowed him; provided, however, that the salary of any foreman or superintendent of the county farm shall be a county charge; and guards for guarding prisoners may be provided by the Board of Supervisors at the expense of the county. The sheriff can require bonds of the officials under him.

Section nine relates to the forfeiture of office through neglect of duty.

Section ten provides that the Board shall audit all bills of the Sheriff for the supervision and maintenance of prisoners confined in the jails, where care and maintenance shall be a county charge at such rate per week for each prisoner as may be determined by the board. The board shall also contract with the Sheriff for the board, washing, service, food and care of prisoners.

Section eleven provides that the Sheriff shall be entitled to the use of the jail annex and the board may allow the Sheriff the proceeds of the jail farm for the support of prisoners.

The resolution providing for the presentation of the act to the Legislature was adopted unanimously.

Electricity and Magnetism.

As to what electricity and magnetism are "in themselves"—that is to say, as to their real nature—nothing is known. They are absolute mysteries, baffling the acutest research into their innermost secrets. But about their modes of action it is possible to say something definite. For example, electricity appears to depend for its action upon a medium, while magnetism, like gravity, acts at a distance and by means of no visible go-between. Place two magnets in vacuo or even place a solid plate of glass or metal or wood between the magnets and we still find that their mutual action depends solely on their relative position and is not perceptibly modified by placing any substance between them unless that substance happens to be one of the magnetic metals.—New York American.

YOUR GAS RANGE

Heat your kitchen with our little Kitchen Heater, which is attached to any gas range. It will burn coke, coal, wood or refuse It takes up very little room and has two top rings so it can be used for cooking also.
In some houses it is necessary in order to heat the kitchen properly to substitute a coal or wood range for the gas range, which is used in th summer.
Now, it is not necessary, as this invention solves the problem and enables anyone to keep their gas range all the year round.
This little heater furnishes the necessary heat for the kitchen and at a very small expense.

Poor Air and Poor Living.

When Jim Bridger, the one time famous scout of the plains, grew old he thought he would like to retire from the somewhat arduous life of a plainsman and settle down to the ease of "the east," which to him meant Missouri. So he used his best endeavor to find a competent man to fill his place and went back to Missouri.

A year or two passed, and one day Captain Russell, the commandant of the post which Bridger had left, was surprised to see the old scout heave in sight. When he came in the captain asked:

"Well, Bridger, what brings you back here?"

"Captain," said Bridger, "I want to go back to scouting again."

"Indeed? Why, I thought you had settled down in the east for the rest of your life!"

"Well, cap'n, I'll tell you how it is. I went back to old Missouri, and if you'll believe it they've got a railroad station within ten mile o' the old place—yes, sir, a railroad station! And, what's more, they've got a ranch now in every four mile. I tell you what, cap'n, the air ain't pure down there no more!"

"Is that possible? But I thought you'd like the good things to eat they have down there. You like good things to eat, I remember."

"Good things to eat! Why, cap'n, I didn't have a broiled beaver tail the whole time I was there!"

An Order Not Obeyed.

An exasperated Irish sergeant, drilling a squad of recruits, called to them at last:

THE LINCOLN FARM.

Plans For Memorial Building on Site of Martyr President's Birthplace.

The birthplace of Abraham Lincoln is rapidly being transformed into a national shrine. The plans for a memorial building inclosing the cabin have finally been adopted, and the program for its dedication, which will take place on the centenary, Feb. 12, has been tentatively made out. The writer recently interviewed Richard Lloyd Jones, the secretary of the Lincoln Farm association, and can therefore give the latest definite information. The final drawing by the architect has been made and accepted. Practically the sole exhibit in the memorial building is the birthplace cabin, which stands in the exact spot it occupied when Lincoln was born. For a little space about the cabin the memorial building is without a floor, leaving the ground as nearly as possible in its original state.

The edifice, with its classic columns, stands on a low hill, being approached by a broad sweep of steps, at the bottom of which is an extensive plaza. From this plaza runs down the old path to the famous rock spring. Two turnpikes and the spur of a railroad lead to the farm, but outside of these improvements, which are designedly plain and simple, in keeping with Lincoln's own life and character, everything is left as before. The farm will still be used as a farm, the trees will be undisturbed, even to one old, half dead apple tree, believed to be the last of the orchard of Thomas Lincoln, the father of the president. Despite its simplicity, however, the memorial building will be an imposing sight amid its humble surroundings.

The program for its dedication includes addresses by Governor Joseph W. Folk of Missouri, president of the Lincoln Farm association; Governor Augustus E. Willson of Kentucky, Secretary of War Luke E. Wright, speaking on behalf of the Confederate veterans, and probably Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes of the United States supreme court in behalf of the Union veterans. Cardinal Gibbons will give it his blessing, and President Roosevelt will there say about his last official word and, it is believed, will make it the supreme effort of his life, delivering a short oration modeled after Lincoln's Gettysburg address. On this final utterance Mr. Roosevelt will rest his best claim to literary immortality.

Few Buried Alive.

"It might be incidentally mentioned for the relief of anxious souls," says Dr. Woods Hutchinson in the American Magazine, "that the risk of any individual passing into a trance and remaining in it long enough to be buried alive is exceedingly slight. There is no authentic instance of this having ever occurred. I took occasion to investigate this question some years ago and communicated with a number of leading undertakers, and they all unanimously denounced it as one of the myths of the times. One of them, at the time president of the National Funeral Directors' association, informed me that he had carefully investigated every instance of 'burial alive' reported in the newspapers for fifteen years past and found every one of them to be, in his own language, 'a pure fake.'"

Legs and the Alps.

In the visitors' book of one of the Swiss hotels an observing traveler has inscribed the following lines:

Some dashing young tourists, I see,
Wear trousers which end at the knee.
'Twere better by half
Just to cover the calf—
At least where the calf ought to be.

Only those who have seen the scrawny legs, incased in mountain climbing costume, of some of those tourists who "do" the Alps can fully appreciate the humor of the "limerick."

Nuts as Food.

One very great advantage which nuts possess over most foods is their absolute freedom from adulteration. When you buy nuts you always know what you are getting. Of course those bought in the shell are also absolutely clean.—Good Health.

Light and Hope.

Even in evil, that dark cloud which hangs over the creation, we discern rays of light and hope and gradually come to see in suffering and temptation proofs and instruments of the sublimest purposes of wisdom and love.—Channing.

At His Expense.

She—Jack told me that that hospital was built entirely at his expense. Is it possible? He—Well, Jack's uncle cut him off with a hundred dollars and left the rest of his money to build the hospital.

Verdict for Dr. Pierce

AGAINST THE

Ladies' Home Journal.

Sending truth after a lie. It is an old maxim that "a lie will travel seven leagues while truth is getting its boots on," and no doubt hundreds of thousands of good people read the unwarranted and malicious attack upon Dr. R. V. Pierce and his "Favorite Prescription" published in the May (1904) number of the Ladies' Home Journal, with its great black display headings, who never saw the humble, groveling retraction, with its inconspicuous heading, published two months later. It was boldly charged in the slanderous and libelous article that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for the cure of woman's weaknesses and ailments, contained alcohol and other harmful ingredients. Dr. Pierce promptly brought suit against the publishers of the Ladies' Home Journal, for $300,000.00 damages.

Dr. Pierce alleged that Mr. Bok, the editor, maliciously published the article containing such false and defamatory matter with the intent of injuring his business; furthermore, that no alcohol, or other injurious, or habit-forming, drugs are, or ever were, contained in his "Favorite Prescription"; that said medicine is made from native medicinal roots and contains no harmful ingredients whatever; and that Mr. Bok's malicious statements were wholly and absolutely false.

In the retraction printed by said Journal they were forced to acknowledge that they had obtained analyses of "Favorite Prescription," from eminent chemists, all of whom certified that it did not contain alcohol or any of the alleged harmful drugs.

These facts were also proven in the trial of the action in the Supreme Court. But the business of Dr. Pierce was greatly injured by the publication of the libelous article with its great display headings, while hundreds of thousands who read the wickedly defamatory article never saw the humble groveling retraction, set in small type and made as inconspicuous as possible. The matter was, however brought before a jury in the Supreme Court of New York State which promptly rendered a verdict in the Doctor's favor. Thus his traducers came to grief and their base slanders were refuted.

Slim Women of Hungary.

The women of Hungary regard a small waist as the greatest possible beauty, and they will endure anything in order to put on an appearance of being small waisted. Tight lacing is carried on to an extraordinary extent, and the waist is compressed by force until one would think that the owner could hardly breathe. Yet in this confined state the women will plunge into the wildest of Hungarian dances, known as the czardas, and prance frantically like ballet dancers until at the end they sink, gasping, exhausted and well nigh suffocated, on a sofa. As they grow older most of these slim beauties become enormously stout, and then they are regarded as quite old. The Hungarians, though they resemble the Turks in many ways, have not the Turkish admiration for fat women or the English admiration for elderly made up belles. Hungary is a land of slim young women, and when they lose their figure they lose their attractiveness and their power.—Modern Society.

Beware of Frequent Colds

A succession of colds or a protracted cold is almost certain to end in chronic catarrh, from which few persons ever wholly recover. Give every cold the attention it deserves and you may avoid this disagreeable disease. How can you cure a cold? Why not try Chamberlains Cough Remedy? It is highly recommended. Mrs. M. White of Butler Tenn., says: "Several years ago I was bothered with my throat and lungs. Some one told me of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I began using it and it relieved me at once. Now my throat and lungs are sound and well." For Sale by E. A. Putnam.

The Innocent Young Thing.

The manufacturer of a moving picture machine was explaining to a group of acquaintances how he had obtained a series of pictures showing a celebrated massacre that had once taken place at a western army post in the days when Indian warfare was a horrible reality instead of an exhibit on a Broadway stage.

"The commander of the post," he said, "had a detachment of soldiers and another of Indians re-enact the scene for us, dressed exactly as in the old days, so our machines could secure every detail—the onslaught of the Indians, the defense by the white soldiers, their massacre and the destruction of the fort."

"It may be very interesting," said the kindly citizen, "but I should not care to see it in even a picture."

The sweet young thing listened with wide eyes.

"And did they really kill the white soldiers for you?" she asked, breathless.—New York Press.

It Is a Wonder.

Chamberlain's Liniment is one of the most remarkable preparations yet produced for the relief of rheumatic pains, and for lame back, sprains and bruises. The quick relief from pain which it affords in case of rheumatism is alone worth many times its cost. Price, 25 cents. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

Three of Them Knew.

According to the Philadelphia Record, a boy of eight said to his mother:

"Well, there were only three boys in school today who could answer one question that the teacher asked us."

"And I hope my boy was one of the three," said the proud mother.

"You bet I was," answered the young hopeful, "and Sam Harris and Harry Stone were the other two."

"I am very glad you proved yourself so good a scholar, my son; it makes your mother proud of you. What question did the teacher ask, Johnny?"

"Who broke that glass in the back window?"

Catching a Tartar.

A Pennsylvania trout fisherman had an adventure which is a warning to thoughtless persons. He was in his boat, casting his flies, when he saw something swimming across the creek several rods up stream. He thought it was a mink, but when it got within a couple of yards he saw it was a wildcat. Without stopping to think he cast his line toward the animal and the next instant regretted his hasty action. The hook caught in the cat's ears, and it promptly turned and swam toward the boat. He paddled away, but the cat overtook the boat and proceeded to climb in. The fisherman knocked the animal on the head with the paddle, and the movement capsized the boat. Then there was a fight in the water, and the fisherman defended himself so well with the paddle that he was able to reach the shore. The wildcat followed, but a few well directed blows finished it. There was a two dollar bounty on the animal, but as the fisherman lost all his fishing tackle and had his clothing badly torn he thinks he had the worst of the bargain. At any rate, he will never again fish for a wildcat.

Philadelphia Flier of 1737.

In these days of fast trains we can hardly conceive how the newspaper announcement made March 10, 1737, that a "flier would begin flying on 3d April to perform the journey between New York and Philadelphia in one day" could have created a great sensation—even in Philadelphia. Eighty miles in fourteen hours does not seem to us such breathless speed, but when we read in the same paper that in order to accomplish this feat "John Butler, with his waggon, must needs set out from the sign of the Death of the Fox at daybreak and drive at top speed (the horses being changed at each stage ere the coach stops rocking) to meet the ferry of Rubin Fitzrandolph, which delivers passengers in New York by night."

We can understand that for those leisurely times this was indeed "going some." This, at least, was the opinion of a traveler who performed this journey in 1737, for he writes home, "And if any one wishes to travel more quickly let him go to Kentucky and charter a streak of lightning."

The Dazzling Searchlight.

On a dark night no warship would be safe from torpedo attack but for the searchlight. The full moon lights up a torpedo boat so that it can be fired at when nearly a mile away. To produce the same illumination with the most powerful artificial light an electric arc of 100,000 candle power placed three-quarters of a mile high would be needed if the aid of mirrors were not available. But with this light and an ingenious arrangement of mirrors it is possible to surpass the moon. Searchlights are now made which throw light a distance of sixty-three miles, but objects can be seen only a few miles from the source of the light. The effect on the enemy is most demoralizing. When the bright beam is suddenly thrown on the eye the pupil contracts violently; when the beam is removed the eye can see nothing. If this be repeated a few times it takes all the nerve out of a man, so that only the best trained and most courageous can continue the attack.—London Answers.

Not That Color.

Willie lost his pet dog and was much distressed. He spent his time searching for it, and so often did he run into the house crying, "Come, quick; there's Fido; I saw him!" the family grew somewhat dubious.

One day Willie rushed in more excited than usual. "Mamma, mamma!" he cried. "I've seen Fido! I've seen Fido!"

"Oh, no; I guess not," replied the patient mother. "It must have been your imagination."

Willie looked at her much aggrieved. "Well," he said indignantly, "I guess my 'magination isn't white behind."—Delineator.

Too Suggestive.

Wimbleton—Hello, Simpelton! How did you enjoy your visit to the insane asylum the other day? Simpelton—Oh, so-so. It was all right enough, I guess. Wimbleton—Well, you don't talk as though you were impressed with it. Did you give the superintendent my note of introduction? Simpelton—Yes, I gave it to him. Wimbleton—Well, what did he say? Simpelton—Oh, he just looked at me and said, "Make yourself at home."—Lippincott's.

Wedding Present Problem.

What people ought to do when they send out invitations to a wedding is to add after the R. S. V. P. the letters P. S. L., which stand for "Please send list." The would be donor would then send a selection of, say, four articles from 1 shilling to £1,000 in value, and the bride would pick out what she wished—London World.

"Smart" Manners.

A well dressed crowd is always the worst behaved crowd. If any one doubts this truism let him ask any London policeman who has had to grapple with a crowd of fashionable ladies.—Nottingham Guardian.

Two Arctic Enemies.

Since the beginning of time there probably has been enmity between the polar bear and the walrus. Except for the walrus, bruin's reign over the arctic regions has been almost unchallenged since the race of mammoths passed. All the hardy flesh eaters that inhabit the bleak, unfertile northland are his natural prey. But most of all he depends upon the seals and sea lions for his food. There is only one animal that is powerful enough to defend itself and offspring against the polar bear's attack, the huge and cumbrous walrus, but its movements are so slow and awkward when out of the water that often it is impossible for the bulky animal to retard the swift attack and retreat of its smaller opponent.—Frank Stick in St. Nicholas.

"Times Is Changed."

"Yes, siree, Bill; times is changed since you an' me was doin' our courtin'," said Adoniram Clover, with a note of sadness in his voice, to old Andy Clover, who had come over to "set a spell."

"When we was doin' our courtin', Andy, a gal thought she was bein' treated right barnsom if a feller bought her 10 cents' worth o' pep'mints once in a while, an' if he tuk her to any doin's in town she didn't expect him to go down into his jeans to the tune of a dollar or two for ice cream an' soda water an' candy at fo'ty cents a pacund. My son Si tuk his ducksy-daddle to the band concert in town yistiday, an' there wa'n't a quarter left of a dollar bill he struck me for time he got home. Beats all the way young folks throw the money away nowadays. I tell ye times is changed mightily since we was boys, an' the Lawd only knows what the end will be with a feller layin' out 75 cents on a gal in one day!"—St. Louis Republic.

Good Cough Medicine for Children.

The season for coughs and colds is now at hand and too much care cannot be used to protect the children. A child is more likely to contract diptheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quicker you cure his cold the less risk. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the sole reliance of many mothers, and few of those who have tried it are willing to use any other. Mrs. F. F. Starcher of Ripley, W. Va., says; "I have never used anything other than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children and it has always given good satisfaction." This remedy contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

A Christmas Race.

Here is a new sort of three legged race which does not require all the trouble of tying your racers together and is very much better than the old way. In fact, girls may go in this kind as well as boys, with no fear of hurting themselves, and two nimble girls stand a very good chance of beating two boys too.

All you have to do is to grasp the raised left foot of a companion, who hops along in front of you. It is really a race of hops, and the best hopper will surely win a Christmas gift as a prize, for it is no trick at all for the one behind to run as fast as the front one can hop.

For Eczema, Tetter and Salt Rheum.

The intense itching characteristic of these ailments is almost instantly allayed by Chamberlain's Salve. Many severe cases have been cured by it. For sale by E. A. Putnam.

A Real Romance.

Sometimes there are instances in life like those in the story books: An Atchison girl engaged herself to a carpenter, thinking he was poog, and discovered on the eve of her wedding day that he had $150 in the bank. He had not told her, wishing her to love him for himself alone.—Atchison Globe.

A Big Bathtub.

The tides run out swiftly in the bay of Fundy.

Supervisor Skillen presented a resolution for the cancellation of the County Treasurer's bond of $11,000 growing out of a bond issue.

Supervisor Scoville introduced a resolution prohibiting the purchase of supplies by any county officer for office use or in buildings, without the authority of the Supply Committee. The resolution requires that every person selling supplies to the county must have an order issued by the Supply Committee, and this order must be attached to the bill when presented to the Board for payment. The members of the Supply Committee are required to keep a duplicate record of every order, which must be filed with the clerk at the beginning of every session. The resolution also provided that when the supply to be purchased amounts to $100 or more that bids be solicited. These bids must be advertised for at least three days.

Supervisor Rounds amended that the amount requiring bids be $25 instead of $100. The amendment was lost by a vote of 12 ayes and 17 nays.

The Supply Committee resolution was then voted on and it was adopted by a vote of 27 to 3.

Supervisor Sweetland presented a communication from the Jail Committee asking that not more than $1,600 be authorized for a gasoline engine and dynamo to light the new county jail.

Supervisor Kellogg moved that the tax on dogs in Volney be $1, $2 and $5. Adopted.

Supervisor Gregg moved that the chairman and clerk look after all matters in which the county is interested.

J. A. Perkins, County Sealer of Weights and Measures, moved that the office be made a salaried one instead of fees. He urged a testing outfit for each town. He said the cost would be $360 for each town. He left a petition to be signed.

Provision was made for taking care of the Robinson Memorial law library whenever Colonel Robinson is disposed to have action taken regarding it. The resolution was as follows: "Resolved, That the Supply Committee of the Board of Supervisors be authorized and directed whenever application by the Oswego Bar Association is made to said committee to furnish in the Oswego County Court House at Oswego, N. Y., any suitable room or rooms for the placing of the W. G. Robinson Memorial Library; said room or rooms to be furnished with sufficient shelving for the purpose of placing said library."

By Mr. Hunt: Placing the rooms in the County building, now the offices of the District Attorney, in charge of the Supply Committee and designating that they be the offices of District Attorney, County Attorney and Superintendent of Highways. Adopted.

By Mr. Beardsley: That a committee of three be appointed to purchase stock, hire a superintendent and buy equipment for the jail farm and have charge of the same, and that $2,000 be set apart for that purpose.

The Chair appointed the following committees: Highways—W. M. Barker and Scoville.

County Clerk—Whitney, Kellogg and Scoville.

To Make Purchases for Farm—Beardsley, Lockwood and Gregg.

The report of the Committee on Ways and Means shows that it will cost to run the county next year $143,449.10. That amount must be raised by taxation.

The announcement was made that Mr Howard had resigned as Supervisor of Palermo and that the Town Board had appointed George Jackson in his place. Mr. Jackson was present at the session.

Mr. Howard was appointed County Superintendent of Highways at a salary of $1,000 per annum and necessary expenses, the same to be audited and allowed by the Board of Supervisors. Mr. Rounds wanted to know if the county could pay under the law as it exists anything for expenses. W. M. Barker said that the County Attorney reported that they could.

The West River road in the town of Granby was ordered improved at a cost of $36,850, the State to pay the entire cost and the County to reimburse the State. A road from Richland to Orwell Four Corners, to cost $61,450, was also ordered under the same conditions.

A new gasoline engine and electric generator for the new jail, to cost $1,600, was ordered purchased. It will be used to light the jail and grounds.

Supervisor Taylor moved that the expense of School Commissioners be limited to $250 each. Adopted.

Supervisor Barker of Orwell moved that the clerk certify to the County Treasurer all resolutions providing for appropriations.

A handsome easy rocker was presented to Chairman Hydorn and an umbrella and picture to Clerk Spencer.

A bill was presented by Supervisor Beardsley of Granby and approved, which provides that the next sheriff elected in Oswego county shall receive a salary of $8,000 a year; that he shall have the use of the residence at the Jail; water, light and heat; all the products of the farm; that the salary of the under-sheriff shall be $1,000 a year, and of keeper of Jail at Oswego $500. The resolution providing for the presentation of the act to the Legislature was unanimously adopted.

Growing Mint.

"Fresh mint for cooking purposes may be had at any time by growing it in a glass jar of water," says Woman's Home Companion for January. "It will root in less than a week and grow rapidly. It is much stronger and bushier, if kept short. Don't change the water. All that is necessary is to add a little fresh water every day or so and to see that the jar is kept well filled up."

Sour Milk Cow.

The woman was new to the country, and her host took great pains to explain to her whatever she didn't understand about the farm. He had little regard for the truth, this farmer; he delighted to test her gullibility to the utmost.

The cows seemed to interest her more than any other domestic animal. One of the cows had lost her tail somehow, and this fact led the woman to ask why it was.

"That's the sour milk cow," the farmer explained, with a straight face. "We always cut the tail off one cow in the herd so as to get sour milk fresh every day."

The woman looked her doubt.

"It's perfectly true," the farmer insisted. "You see, when the cow's tail is gone the sun shines continually on the cow's udder, and the constant heat sours the milk."

But the woman still doubted.—New York Sun.

The New Commandant at West Point. The Special Chinese Commissioner, Tang Shao Yi, and Prince Tsai Fu.

MAJOR SIBLEY.

MAJOR FREDERICK W. SIBLEY, who has just been appointed commandant of the United States Military academy at West Point, relieves Colonel Robert L. Howze, who is detailed as lieutenant colonel of the Porto Rico regiment of infantry. He is one of the best disciplinarians in the regular army and is considered an authority in matters respecting military training generally. The head of the academy is the superintendent, but the post of commandant is one of much responsibility, and it is considered especially important at an institution of this kind that it be held by an officer of discretion.

Tang Shao Yi, high commissioner of the Chinese empire to the United States, who was recently received by President Roosevelt, is a Chinaman who is pretty well Americanized. It was because of his familiarity with American institutions that he was charged by the Chinese government with bearing to the head of the United States government the message of gratitude from China at the remission of the sum which the oriental power had expected to pay by way of indemnity for injuries to American interests in the course of the Boxer insurrection of 1900. In the suit of the high commissioner are several interesting personages, among them Prince Tsai Fu and Chung Mun Yew. Commissioner Tang Shao Yi is at present director general of railways of the Chinese empire, high commissioner of customs and a member of the grand council, the body which really governs the great nation known as the Chinese people. He was educated chiefly in the United States, having been sent to this country by his government in 1874 as a boy of twelve. He attended school in Hartford, Conn., and later studied at Columbia university, where he was in attendance when recalled by his government. He has served as ambassador to Tibet, minister to England and mandarin of a Manchurian province.

Chung Mun Yew was once a member of the Yale class of '93 and coxswain of its crew. The Yale Alumni Weekly says he was a very competent coxswain. The graduate coach of the crew, it seems, had a theory that for oarsmen, as for mules, forcible exhortation was indispensable. "Munny," he said, "you'll have to swear at those men." The Alumni Weekly tells the rest:

Now, Chung Mun Yew abjured profanity. After further commands from the coach, however, he did get out a formula like this: "Ope, give way—tam! Two, head up, pull—tam!" No crew could hear that and not roll overboard with laughter, so "Munny" was left to his own way, because he was otherwise the most promising coxswain that ever had held the ropes for Yale. And his own way was a revelation. He made a scientific study of steering a shell, and it was said that he could demonstrate mathematically the effect of every extra pound pull on either larboard or starboard side of the boat.

PRINCE TSAI FU AND TANG SHAO YI.

In the News

Two Eminent Divines Who Figured Conspicuously in the Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The observance of a recent Sunday as a day in the interest of Christian unity by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, in session in Philadelphia, directs attention to the progress made toward unity, or at least friendly co-operation, between the churches. Co-operation and combination and substantial unity in the work of uplifting humanity are gradually taking the place of the old time rivalry between the denominations. The executive committee of the Federal council issued a call to the several Christian bodies affiliated in the movement in behalf of the observance of the day in the interest of unity among Christians, and the appeal was widely heeded. One of the features of the observance of the day in Philadelphia was an interdenominational meeting in the interest of labor and the church, which indicated a marked increase in the sympathy between the church and the workingman.

There are thirty-two religious bodies in affiliation with the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, all of national extent. Together they represent nearly 18,000,000 adherents. The council results from the interchurch conference held in New York in 1905. In the three years which have elapsed since then thirty-two religious bodies have formally ratified and adopted the plan of federation devised by the conference and appointed delegates to the council. The president of the council during these important years at the beginning of the movement has been the Rev. William H. Roberts, D. D., LL. D., of the Presbyterian church. He presided at the opening sessions of the council. Dr. Roberts was formerly moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church. Prominent in the proceedings at Philadelphia was the venerable bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Pennsylvania, the Right Rev. O. W. Whitaker, D. D., LL. D.

Union between Christian denominations has not usually been attended with a great deal of success except in the foreign mission fields. There union is more easily accomplished because denominational differences, so far as the native churches are concerned, are neither old nor deep. In China, Japan, India and Korea practical unions have been accomplished between churches of similar fundamental faiths. In the establishment of educational and other institutions on the foreign fields many denomtonations have joined, one university in China, for example, being supported by Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Quaker and Anglican missions.

Most of the movements which begin with organic union of denominations as their object end in the establishment of federations, of which the Federal council is the largest in the world. Federation organizations are advisory only, whereas a body resulting from organic union would have legislative functions.

In Canada a union between Presbyterians, Methodists and Congregationalists seemed likely for a time to be effected, but leaders now believe that federation alone can be accomplished. In this Canadian Baptists and Episcopalians will probably join. A similar movement in Australia promises a similar result. The proposed union in this country between Congregationalists, United Brethren and Methodist Protestants has been found to be impossible of accomplishment, and a new movement whereby Methodists, Methodist Protestants and United Brethren seek union is under consideration.

Selling "Carlyle."

Here is Whistler's story of how he sold his famous picture of Carlyle to the Glasgow corporation:

I received them, well, you know, charmingly, of course, and one who spoke for the rest asked me if I did not think I was putting a large price on the picture—1,000 guineas—and I said, "Yes, perhaps, if you will have it so!"

And he said that it seemed to the council excessive. "Why, the figure was not even life size."

And I agreed.

"But, you know," I said, "few men are life size."

And that was all. It was an official occasion, and I respected it. Then they asked me to think over the matter until the next day, and they would come again. And they came. And they said, "Have you thought of the thousand guineas and what we said about it, Mr. Whistler?"

And I said, "Why, gentlemen, why—well, you know how could I think of anything but the pleasure of seeing you again?"

And naturally, being gentlemen, they understood, and they gave me a check for the thousand guineas.

Ursa Major and Ursa Minor.

A pretty myth is told of Callisto and her son in connection with Ursa Major and Ursa Minor. Juno changed the beautiful Callisto into a bear, who, seeing her son one day, advanced to embrace him, when he, not knowing his mother in the form of a bear, was about to thrust his spear through her, to prevent which Jupiter snatched them both up to heaven and placed them among the stars as the Great and Little Bears.

Messrs. E. C. DeWITT & Co.,
Chicago, Ills.
Gentlemen:—
In 1897 I had a disease of the stomach and bowels. Some physicians told me it was Dyspepsia, some Consumption of the Bowels, others said consumption of the Stomach. One physician said I would not live until Spring, and for four long years I existed on a little boiled milk, soda biscuits, doctors' prescriptions and Dyspepsia remedies that flooded the market. I could not digest anything I ate, and in the Spring 1905 I picked up one of your Almanacs as a poor tormented Dyspepsia wreck will grasp at anything, and that Almanac happened to be my life saver. I bought a fifty cent bottle of KODOL DYSPEPSIA CURE and the benefit I received from that bottle ALL THE GOLD IN GEORGIA COULD NOT BUY. I kept on taking it and in two months I went back to my work, as a machinist, and in three months I was well and hearty. I still use it occasionally as I find it a fine blood purifier and a good tonic.
May you live long and prosper.
Yours very truly,
G. M. GODBEE.

And the pet stock dealer laid beside a small bathtub a box of cold cream, a bottle of brilliantine, a couple of brushes, a chamois, towels and soap.

He bathed the hen in the tub. He scrubbed her feathers till they were snowy. Then he toweled her, wrapped her up and put her away in a warm box.

"Tomorrow," he said, "after she is quite dry I'll rub brilliantine on one of these brushes and polish her coat till it shines like satin. I'll oil and polish her feet too. Ornaments of the Peerage.

Lord Lyveden is an ardent peerage reformer and tells an anecdote in this connection for whose authenticity he pledges himself. This narrates how a famous statesman of the nineteenth century was called upon to visit his son in prison. He bitterly reproached him, remarking, "Here am I, having worked my way up from a middle class home to a great position, and when I die you will be the greatest blackguard in the peerage." The son listened quietly and then replied, with terrible irony, "Yes—when you die."

Another of Lord Lyveden's peerage stories is equally piquant. The son of a peer applied to a friend in the north of England for a housekeeper and was recommended a certain Mrs. Brown. The peer wrote to the woman accordingly to the effect that, having learned particulars of her character, he was willing to engage her as his housekeeper and making an appointment for her to call and see him on a certain date. The good woman replied:

My Lord—From what I have learned of your character I decline to enter your house. I am your lordship's obedient servant, ANNE BROWN.

The Plays Mixed.

During one of his tours in this country, when the late Sir Henry Irving was playing "Twelfth Night" in New York, he revealed absentmindedness and greatly amused the members of his company and the audience. As Malvolio he was expressing surprise at a remark of Sir Toby.

"Do you know what you say?" he asked.

To his surprise, a roar of laughter echoed through the house, and his stage associates were convulsed.

He repeated the line, putting undue emphasis on the pronoun, and again the audience shouted with laughter.

It was not until after the performance he learned that quite unconsciously he had been parodying the well known words of "The Private Secretary." His only explanation was that it was done in a fit of forgetfulness while thinking of the other play.—Chicago Record-Herald.

"The Light That Failed."

A wealthy Riverina squatter, now departed, as he used to phrase it, "to the great muster," was noted almost as much for his Attic wit as for his parsimony. He also stuttered very badly and helped along his halting utterance with a frequent ejaculation of "D'ye see? D'ye see?" His niggardly traits gained him widespread local unpopularity and the bitter enmity of sundowners, who were always vigorously refused rations at his stations.

Smarting under this unusual inhospitality, some disappointed swaggerers once set fire to one of the squatter's wool sheds and then wrote upon a gate: "We've well burnt down your wool shed. D'ye see? D'ye see?"

Of course it caught the big man's eye when next he passed through. For a moment he contemplated the announcement and then with a sardonic grin took the stump of a blue pencil from his pocket and scribbled underneath: "It was well insured. D'ye see? D'ye see?"—London Standard.

All One Kins.

"What did father say when you told him of our engagement?" asked the young lady.

"Well—er—really, Phyllis," began the ineligible young man.

"Oh, leave out the strong language." [illegible]

FREDERICK AND VOLTAIRE.

Stormy Relations of the Miserly King and the Lavish Author.

The world knows plenty about the elements of strength in the characters of great men, but less about their weaknesses. Here is a story that shows the other side of the natures of Frederick the Great and Voltaire:

Frederick the Great had a leaning toward literature. He wrote poems, plays and booklets that, in his opinion, possessed rare merit. So it seemed fitting to him that great literary men should fraternize, and he sent an invitation to Voltaire to be his guest. Accompanying the invitation was a sum of money to defray the great Frenchman's traveling expenses to the Prussian capital.

Let it be explained at this point that Frederick was extremely penurious and that Voltaire was not only extravagant, but had many of the characteristics of what we would now call a grafter. It should also be understood that Frederick despised grafting, and Voltaire abhorred miserliness.

Voltaire accepted the invitation—and then had an afterthought. Why not take a favorite niece with him? So he wrote to the king that if he would send an extra thousand louis he would bring the girl.

"Sir," replied the king, "I did not ask the young lady to do me the honor of visiting me, and I shall send nothing to pay her expenses."

"The old miser!" said Voltaire to a friend. "He has tubs of money in his treasury, yet will not grant me this wish."

However, Voltaire went to Berlin, but each found that he hated the other too much to make their friendship permanent.

The king once gave Voltaire a package of poems to revise.

"See," said Voltaire to a German nobleman, "what a quantity of dirty linen Frederick has sent me to wash!"

The king thought his guest was too free with the chocolate and sugar and gave orders that he be put on a restricted daily allowance.

Voltaire retaliated by gathering all the wax candles he could find in the halls and storing them in his trunk.

Soon the royal palace became too hot for him, and he began to pack up. Then Frederick missed his package of poems. At once he scented a plot. Voltaire intended to take the verses back home with him and palm them off as his own. Lord Macaulay has said that the poems were so bad that he was convinced Voltaire would not for half of Frederick's kingdom have consented to father them. But the king thought differently, being the author of the poems.

So the Prussian monarch had Voltaire thrown into jail at Frankfort and kept him locked up for twelve days. Sixteen hundred dollars that was found in his pocket was taken away from him. The king in the days of their friendship had given Voltaire a life pension of $3,200 a year, and the money that was confiscated was a semiannual instalment.

Thus ended their friendship.—Scrap Book.

The Southern Art of Conversation.

The north may think it knows something of conversation, but the north, as compared with the south, may be said never to have enjoyed a conversation. About the village courthouse, within the hospitable doors of some central store, in the office of the local daily or weekly paper or, above all, in the leisurely and genial intercourse around the fireside or on the inviting porch in summer of friend with friends there will be heard a conversation which in wit, in the charm and force of its illustrations and in the directness and freedom of its criticism is not surpassed in American life today.

It is the product of leisure, of a world without haste, without ruthless preoccupations, without those resources of expression and interest which belong to the crowded and overweighted existence of the commercial city. It is, moreover, part of the tradition of the cavalier. It is part of the genius of climate and soil and social habit.—E. G. Murphy in "The Present South."

More Trouble.

"What's the trouble now?" demanded the janitor. "More heat?"

"No," said the tenant of the latest skyscraper, "but I want these clouds pushed away from my window."—Louisville Courier-Journal.
